Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I beg leave to interrupt the Senator from Delaware. I presume he wishes to be correct in all the statements which he makes. I am sure he does. I have had some participation in this matter; and, therefore, I ask him and the Senate to hear me in relation to it. I hold in my hand, Senate bill No. 220, a "bill to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico, to grant donations to actual settlers thereon, and for other purposes," introduced by Mr. SHIELDS, of Illinois, February 20, 1854, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The Journals show that it was reported back by myself from the Committee on Public Lands, the 29th of March, 1854, with an amendment, furnished by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to whom it was sent in pursuance of an order of the committee. That amendment is printed in italics, and is intended as a substitute for the original bill. It was passed, as the Journal of the Senate will show, on the 20th day of April of the present year, and sent to the House of Representatives, with the provisions making grants to the people of New Mexico, similar to those which had been made to the early settlers in Oregon. The territorial business came up in the House of Representatives before this bill was reported from the committee there; and the House passed a bill of its own of a precisely similar character, reported by its own Committee on Public Lands. That bill came from the House, was referred on the 19th of June last to the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. On the 1st of July, it was reported back to the Senate and passed. The House bill granting lands to settlers and occupants in New Mexico, was amended in that body, when on its passage, by having some sections added, providing for a surveyor general's office and two land offices for Kansas and Nebraska. When the Senate's bill No. 220 passed this body, on the 20th of April last, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] interrogated me from his seat, through the President, respecting its provisions. I replied that the grants to actual settlers were precisely those which had been made in Oregon. The Senator from Virginia will recollect it well, I am sure.

Mr. CLAYTON. I understand the Senator's explanation; but this bill was, by the testimony of all around me, never found or observed to contain this provision when it passed, and it is not now to be found on our files. It makes donations to aliens, temporarily, only in New Mexico, but the preëmption privilege is extended to them in Kansas and Nebraska, and if the attention of the Senate had been drawn to it they would have observed that there was some object in thus drawing aliens into Kansas and Nebraska. But I desire to show the distinction between this measure and that. We propose here to strike out the sixth section of the homestead bill, which grants to persons not naturalized the right to enter upon and occupy and obtain patents at the end of five years, to one hundred and sixty acres of land. That is a permanent, not a temporary provision; there is no limitation upon it. In the bill which the Senator produces he will find the provision is temporary:

"And to every white male citizen of the United States, or every white male above the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, and who shall have removed or shall remove to and settle in said Territory, between the first day of January, 1853, and the first day of January, 1858, there shall in like manner be donated one quarter section, or one hundred and sixty acres, on condition of actual settlement and cultivation for not less than four years."

By this provision the alien settler cannot enter unless he has declared his intention before the act.

I can very well conceive that it might be policy, in the judgment of many Senators, to extend this privilege to persons who were about to settle the wild Territories of New Mexico, Nebraska, and Kansas, but who would not listen to the proposition when you attempt to extend it to the States. The bill now before us proposes to grant the right in the States as well as in the Territories. The questions as to the power and expediency differ entirely in regard to this matter, and the Senate might, if they had passed that measure, even after due consideration, with perfect consistency, refuse to adopt the sixth section in the bill now before us. There are insurmountable objections to making the same grant in utter disregard of the rights of the States or their laws on the subject of holding real estate. By this homestead bill there is no power which can turn an alien out of the land while he lives, should he refuse to become naturalized for forty years or more. The alien is to hold the land within the limits of the "land States," and he cannot be ejected from it. Besides, he is to hold it exempt from the payment of any debts he may have contracted while he is upon it without a patent.

But, Mr. President, I throw this out of the way, and come to the question as it stood before the honorable Senator from Tennessee addressed the Senate; and I beg now to make a very few remarks in reply to some of those who have occupied the attention of the Senate for the last two or three days. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE], this morning told us, in reply to what had been said by some gentlemen entertaining the same opinions I do in reference to this bill, that none but the industrious are invited and expected to go and live under this homestead system. The loafers, he said, would not go; such men would never be found there, he thought. Why, sir, the Senator has entirely mistaken, I humbly apprehend, the whole character of the bill. If there was ever a bill inviting loafers and idlers, it is this. It provides that any man may go and take up one hundred and sixty acres—on what conditions? If he makes it appear that he has not abandoned his settlement for more than six months, at any one time, he is, after the end of five years, entitled to a patent.

Mr. WADE. I did not suppose that loafers and idlers would go there and entitle themselves to the land; but suppose a loafer or an idler should go into the wilderness and comply with the provisions of the bill, would you not grant him the same rights with others?

Mr. CLAYTON. We should be pleased to get rid of them all in the old States; but we would not offer them a premium for their laziness. Now, the fifth section of the bill provides:

"That if, at any time after filing the affidavit as required in the second section of this act, and before the expiration of the five years aforesaid, it shall be proven, after due notice to the settler, to the satisfaction of the register of the land office, that the person having filed said affidavit shall have actually changed his or her residence, or abandoned the said entry for more than six months at any time, then, and in that event, the land so entered shall revert back to the Government, and be disposed of as other public lands are now by law, subject to an appeal to the General Land Office."

Well, then, if a man goes upon the land, makes his entry, and remains there and settles one week or one day, and is absent five months and twenty days, and goes back and settles another week or day, and is absent another five months and twenty days, he will thus acquire, by this bill, the title to the land, although, in reality, he may not have had possession of it for six weeks during the whole time prescribed by the bill. Is there any doubt about that construction? He is at liberty to be absent at any time for a period short of six months, and then go back and settle upon the land for a day or a week, and proceed to its cultivation by planting a few tomatoes, or something that will grow in spite of shade and weeds, and then he will be set down as the owner of the land. If that is not a reward for idleness, I do not know what would be.

Mr. President, this bill invites not only idlers, but all of every class. The felon convicted of any crime in any of the States of this Union may go and take up one hundred and sixty acres of the public land under the bill. The honorable Senator said we did not object to the bill except because unworthy emigrants from Europe might come and settle upon these lands. I beg him not to misunderstand us. We have objected to this mode of settling the Territories of the United States, because the measure invites the very worst characters to enjoy the benefits of it, and offers them a premium when they have escaped from the old States, to go and settle upon the public lands.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Ohio, [Mr. WADE], as well as the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD], have indulged themselves at the expense of the American population of the country, by telling us that the canals and railroads in the United States have been built by aliens. I know aliens have often been employed on the railroads and canals; but thousands, and perhaps hundreds of thousands of native Americans, have also been employed upon them. And who is it that is entitled to the merit of making these roads or canals? It is not merely the laborer. Who are the men that paid for the labor, both of the native and foreign population, and took the hazard of their success or failure? They have been in every instance American citizens, and not foreign emigrants. The honorable Senators might as well claim the exclusive honor to the negroes who have built a great many of the canals and roads, and for the horses and oxen that have assisted in making them. Sir, our works of internal improvement were built by our own countrymen; and every foreigner who put a spade in the ground was paid for his labor, and paid well. I have no statistics in my hand to enable me to speak of the relative proportions of labor performed on such works by Americans and foreigners; but I have seen canals and railroads made, and I have generally seen upon them a large majority of native Americans engaged at work, and sometimes a great many foreigners too, who could find no other employment in which their labor was so well remunerated.

So, too, sir, we have had it intimated to us in the debate that we should hardly have achieved our independence in the revolutionary war if it had not been for the foreigners who fought our battles. Why, really, this is most surprising intelligence. I think one gentleman said it was doubtful whether we should have been enabled to achieve our independence but for the valor of the foreigners who fought for us. I am ready to acknowledge, and always glad to acknowledge, the assistance that we obtained from the gallant foreigners who came to our aid in the revolutionary war, in our last war with England, and in our war with Mexico. A bright example is before me whenever I reflect, in my place here, on that subject. No man is more disposed to do justice to my honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. SURELDS] than I am; and to men who shed their blood as he did, nobly in defense of this country, no man can be more truly grateful than I am. But, sir, it is degrading to the American name, and it is untrue in fact, to tell us that we owe our independence to foreigners, or to insinuate that the true native American is inferior, either in courage, or the higher moral qualities, to the foreigner.

I am not one of those who persecute foreigners. I never shall do it. I am no bigot; no sectarian. I seek to persecute no man for his religion or his opinions. But I am resolved that no others shall ever, by my vote or influence, be placed in any position where they can persecute me or my friends, or deny us either civil or religious liberty. I have heard, during the progress of this debate, some things uttered to the disparagement of a portion of the American population, which can have but a very unfortunate effect, in my opinion. I was asked by my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] whether, in my judgment, the naturalization laws should be repealed? Why, sir, I have never been the advocate of the repeal of the naturalization laws; but let me tell him, and others here who have engaged in this debate, that any remarks which can be, by possibility, construed into a disparagement of the native American population of this country, when compared with the foreign population now pouring like a mighty flood into this country, are calculated to create parties that have been unknown before; and remarks of that description made on the floor of the Senate in one day's debate, will create an addition of one hundred thousand to the number of those who have been denominated, by some gentlemen, as "Know-Nothings."

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I ask him, then, to name that Senator who instituted an invidious comparison in favor of foreigners and against Americans. If he directly or indirectly alludes to me as having made such an assertion, I deny it in toto; and I must say for the Senate, that I have heard no such imputation made from any portion of it.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senators from New York and Ohio will not so soon eat their words, I think. I did not charge the Senator from Iowa with having reflected on the American population; but now that he has called my attention to the fact, I will repeat one thing which he said, though I have no unkind feeling to gratify in doing so. He did say of certain American organizations in this country, that they were "contemptible"—the "Know-Nothings," for instance, and the "Native Americans." I submit respectfully to my honorable friend, now in his cooler moments, whether they are to be considered as contemptible? I do not know myself what their principles are, though the Senator from New York, without any authority, has spoken of them; but one fact must be apparent to everybody, and that is, that those men who are called "Know-Nothings" have, within a few months past, actually carried nearly every election in every American city where their standard has been raised. I am perfectly ignorant of what the real ends and objects of an association so formidable may be; but I cannot conceive it possible that an organization as extensive as that, and as successful as it has been in every instance, can, in any sense, be contemptible.

There is no country in the world half as liberal as ours on the subject of naturalization. There is at present a general disposition on the part of the American Congress to admit foreigners to naturalization upon such terms as are, in its judgment, consistent with the American Constitution. There is no disposition that I have heard proclaimed here to repeal the law on this subject. But how is it abroad? In England an American cannot, if he wishes, obtain naturalization except by special act of Parliament. He may, by letters patent from the Crown, become a denizen; but having thus been made a denizen, he is utterly incapable of receiving a donation of Crown lands in any case. That is a part of the law of England; but here we all agree that the naturalized citizen shall receive donations of our lands upon the same terms with the native citizen of the United States. None of us object to that; but what we do object to is this: that those who are not naturalized, those who still owe allegiance to the Government of the country from which they emigrated, should come here and stand upon precisely the same footing with an American, who was born in the country and has arrived at full age. Under the provisions of this bill, we agree to give foreigners one hundred and sixty acres of land, if they will only go immediately, after their arrival in the country, and declare their intention to become citizens at a future time; and there is no period limited in the bill within which they must become naturalized, or lose the title. At any period during life they can become naturalized; and, in that case, they are to be entitled to a farm. Then, sir, the simple question before us is, are we ready to give to every foreigner an equal share of the public domain with the citizens of the United States?

Mr. President, this bill has undergone a very desultory discussion. The honorable Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] charges those who are opposed to it with having made a guerrilla war upon it. Why, sir, all we have thus far done has been to propose an amendment to it. We have proposed one amendment, and its friends, I believe, have proposed two. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] now proposes to amend the sixth section, before the question is put on the motion which I made to strike it out, by allowing all foreigners, not only those here now, but all who shall come hereafter, the benefit of this act. He gives notice, and others give notice, of other propositions they intend to make.

We have opposed the bill, and announced our opposition to it incidentally, in the debate on a motion to amend it; but has there been anything unfair in the opposition to the bill? Has there been anything to which the most scrupulous could object? We have not undertaken to defeat the bill by any indirection. We attack it first in a position where we think it is most censurable, and seek to strike out that part. Then the effect of striking out would certainly be to make the bill, in our judgment, better than it was before; and, on that ground, the honorable Senator should at least pardon, if he cannot applaud us, for the course we have adopted.

But, sir, in regard to the debate which has gone on here for the last two or three days, it has been, as I have said, desultory. No systematic, regular debate has been commenced yet by the opponents of the bill. The general features of it have scarcely been reviewed. I do not propose to examine them now; but I wish to make a suggestion in reference to this bill which I have not yet heard in the course of the debate, though, doubtless, it has occurred to other gentlemen here. I say it is an unjust bill, for the reason that it gives the public lands to any one who will go and settle upon them, immediately alongside of persons who have purchased for the full price, and paid the Government for their lands. Will not the inevitable effect of this be to diminish the selling price of all the land of those who have heretofore purchased public land? Is it a measure of justice? I put it to any man, after you have exacted from all who have gone before $125 an acre, the minimum price of the public land, then to invite everybody to go and take possession of the land adjoining without returning their money to those who have already purchased? Why do you make a discrimination against them? I put it to my honorable friend from Tennessee, is it just and fair that a man who has labored upon the public lands for many years, until he has earned his quarter or half section, and has paid for it, should be surrounded suddenly by hundreds and thousands of men who have never performed a day's labor on the lands, and yet who can sell that land as soon as they have got patents?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does the Senator desire an answer?

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield with pleasure to hear your reply, if you choose to make it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will answer the Senator very frankly. I admit that it seems to be unjust. I concede that it seems to be an act of injustice that one American citizen should have been required, under a previous law, to pay $125 an acre for his land, and then afterwards another man be permitted to go and settle by him without paying anything for his tract. But let me ask the Senator another question. Suppose a man settles in the wilderness, and encounters all the hardships and privations incident to such a settlement, and clears up his one hundred and sixty acres of land, I want to know of my friend from Delaware, if he goes and takes the adjoining quarter section at $125 an acre, does he not derive his full quota of the benefits of the labor of the man who first settles, and supplies all the necessities incident to life? I wish to make myself perfectly understood by the Senator. He gets, in the case, I suppose, all the benefits of civilization and settlement, resulting from the act of the man who is given one hundred and sixty acres, in going into the wilderness and cultivating the land which is granted to him under this law. Those who follow the first settlers, and settle down by them, and do not encounter the hardships which they have to encounter, but come in afterwards, and pay for their land, enjoy the benefits of the labor and suffering of those to whom the land was granted; so that the case is just as hard in one aspect as the other.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senator has entirely misunderstood this bill. It does not allow a settler who has bona fide purchased one hundred and sixty acres, to take up one hundred and sixty more. He has mistaken entirely one of the plainest provisions of the bill.

Mr. CASS. Will the honorable Senator allow me to make one remark on this point?

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. CASS. I merely do it because the Senator, perhaps, does not recollect a view which was taken of this matter before. It was all gone over thirty years ago. The principle which the honorable Senator from Delaware assumes, would prevent Congress ever reducing the price of the public lands. You sold the land once at two dollars per acre; and when it was proposed to reduce it to $125, the same objection was urged by many that is now urged by the Senator from Delaware. It was said you could not reduce the price, because that would be doing injustice to those who had already purchased at the higher price. I would remind the honorable Senator from Delaware, that every man who purchases public lands, purchases subject to the disposition of Congress; and Congress has a right to reduce the price when it pleases. It may graduate the price, and bring it down to twelve and a half cents per acre. Therefore, the principle cannot be carried out, that you cannot change the price of the lands, because you have previously sold, under other circumstances, at a different price.

Mr. CLAYTON. Let me tell the honorable Senator from Michigan, that the principle on which the graduation to which he has referred was made, was that the best lands had been taken up, and that the inferior lands ought properly and fairly to be offered at an inferior price.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Senator will allow me to say further, that that is incorrect. That argument could only apply to existing districts; but district after district subsequently came into the market, which had never before been offered for sale, and where the prime and best lands were sold for $125. It was not that principle, therefore, which operated; but it was the principle that the price of the public lands at the time was thought to be too high.

Mr. CLAYTON. The reduction from $2 to $125 was made on the abolition of the old credit-system, in the sale of the lands. Cash was the alleged consideration for the reduction to $125 from $2 at a long credit. We have had no graduation laws reducing the price lower than $125; and, sir, no graduation bill can be just which is not founded on the idea that the best lands have been disposed of, and that worse remain to be disposed of, at a smaller price. I have not been a friend to any of these graduation bills, nearly all of which are projects to plunder the Government; though I have always voted, and I say it with great satisfaction, liberally for western improvements, and for the interests of the western country. But in regard to the point which the honorable Senator from Michigan made, that the graduation principle, bad as it may be, justifies the measure before the Senate, I deny it. I say that here is a measure of manifest injustice to those who have heretofore purchased public lands; and the honorable Senator from Tennessee is compelled to admit that it is unjust.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to make a single remark on that point?

Mr. CLAYTON. I yield the floor to my friend with great pleasure.

Mr. SHIELDS. I happened to be at the head of the General Land Office, and ought, therefore, to know a little about the operation of the very view which the honorable Senator presents. If I understand his position, it is that when one man purchases a tract of land for $125 an acre, which, by his labor and cultivation, becomes worth five or ten dollars an acre, and another man gets a neighboring tract, as a donation from the Government without any consideration, the man who has paid for the land is injured, because his land is decreased in value. Is that the proposition?

Mr. CLAYTON. That is not the exact way in which I stated it. But let the Senator go on.

Mr. SHIELDS. I understand the Senator's proposition to be, that if one man pays for a tract of land, builds a house on it, and cultivates it, and another man, his neighbor, gets land without paying for it, the man who pays is thereby injured. Now, so far from that being the case, the fact is, that if the adjoining tract is cultivated, even though the land be given to the occupant without cost, it improves and enhances the value of the tract of the adjoining man who paid for it. So far from diminishing its value, the effect of the cultivation of an adjacent piece of land by the labor of any man, (no matter whether he pays for the land or not, for that has no bearing on the point at all,) is to enhance the value of the farm of the man who has already purchased. That is the operation, as those who are familiar with the public lands know.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I think it is self-evident, that if millions of acres of land, around a farm which I may happen to own, be offered for nothing to all who may choose to come and settle upon it, the value, the selling price of my land, is necessarily diminished by the operation. It is reduced beyond all controversy, in my judgment, I will not say to nothing, but it is reduced so seriously, that where the donations in the neighborhood of settlers who have heretofore bought the public lands, are very numerous and extensive, the operation must be ruinous to them. The Senator from Illinois has skillfully confined himself to the case of a single settlement of one man by the side of another. But will any man tell me that putting thousands on tens of thousands of acres of land into market for nothing, in the vicinity of a man who has purchased and paid a full and fair price for his land, does not diminish the selling value of that man? Sir, in such a case you do gross and outrageous injustice; and if your Government be unjust, and pass such a bill as this, it ought to and will make indemnity to those whom it shall thus injure.

The Senator from New-York [Mr. SEWARD] occupied much time in reply to me by an argument of his own against a proposition which neither I nor any one else ever made. I did not stop him. He had evidently never read my amendment, though he made a speech against it. I did not propose to give money or land to mechanics only, but to mechanics and all other American citizens. His complaint was, that mechanics were not more meritorious than other classes. Nobody said they were. But I say they are, as American citizens, entitled to quite as many privileges as any other class of citizens; and in our own country they shall always have my vote for anything they may ask, in preference to any alien; and I would rather have the approbation of the American mechanics of my public conduct than that of all the aliens in the world.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. WADE] took so different a view of the rights of American citizens to the property of the United States from any that I have ever seen presented before, that I wish to comment for a few moments upon it. Why, sir, he undertook to say he did not consider that he himself, although a son of the old Bay State, and now an honored Senator of the United States from the great State of Ohio, a citizen and a native-born American, had any greater right to any portion of this vast public property of the United States than any German, or any foreigner whatever. That is the gentleman's position, fairly stated. Sir, is it possible that such a feeling pervades the bosom of an American Senator? Is it possible that, under the influence of feelings and opinions like this, we are legislating on the great public domain of this nation, and are about to give away hundreds of millions of the national property? Are we to act on the idea that no American citizen has any more right to the public domain than the alien in Germany, Ireland, or Russia, or any other part of Europe? Sir, whose property is it? The honorable Senator seems to think it belongs to everybody, and not merely to us. Well, who paid for it? Millions upon millions of dollars have gone out of the Treasury of the United States to pay for it. That money came from the pockets of the citizens of the United States. Millions upon millions of acres of it were earned by the blood, as well as the treasure, of their revolutionary forefathers. We have heretofore looked upon it as an inheritance of which the American people might well be proud. But the Senator boldly tells you that no American has a right to claim any more title to it than any foreigner!

Mr. WADE. What I stated was, that if these donations were to be considered as for the benefit of the particular individuals, A, B, or C, who might take advantage of the bill, of course no one had any right at all to the land. I thought, however, that as the Government was the owner of such a vast territory, and as it proposed to dispose of it to those who would settle on it, as a matter of policy it was right to make no distinction between persons who should occupy it. I did not pretend that A, B, or C, whether foreigners or natives, had any right upon the public lands. Certainly the land belongs to the Government; but the Government, I take it, has a right to sell it to anybody, or to give it away to anybody, if it is supposed the interests of the Government will be best promoted in that way.

Mr. CLAYTON. The honorable Senator thinks, and so expresses himself in substance, that he has no more right to ask for a donation of the public domain than any foreigner whatever, because he thinks this policy of the Government is to give it away to all alike.

Mr. WADE. I say, I do not feel, as an individual, that I have any more title to any particular portion of it, in consequence of being an American citizen, and being accidentally a native born, than any other man.

Mr. CLAYTON. There you find him, precisely where he stood before he made his explanation. Let me again revert to a remark which I made when I commenced my reply to the honorable Senator. I know not how to argue with him on such a subject. We are so entirely apart, that there is no ground upon which we can expect to reason with each other with a view that either of us shall ever be convinced. Sir, the views which the honorable Senator has announced, are not the sentiments of the American people, rely upon it; and they will repudiate all sentiments of that description. When they are told, as they now are, this day, on the floor of the Senate, that they have no more right to demand of this Government donations of the public lands than any foreigner in Europe, they will, I think, give us a lesson which we shall remember hereafter. Sir, the utterance of such views are not very pleasing to those of us who entertain the opinion, as before God I do, that the American people are entitled to this property in preference to any foreigner; that it is their birthright, and that it is a wrong and an outrage upon them to give it to foreigners, as long as they themselves demand to occupy it.

Sir, I say instead of putting down a sentiment like that I have expressed, by persecuting the "Know-Nothings," or any other American organization, those who shall attempt it will find themselves sadly mistaken. It will be necessary, before you can put that sentiment down, to put down the American people—the true American people. Before that can be done,

"Fall many a pennon shall be torn,
And many a knight to earth be home,
And many a banner shall be rent."

The sentiments which have been announced by the honorable Senator from Ohio are calculated to rouse the feelings of the whole American people; and they will hear with astonishment that it is considered now, upon the floor of the American Senate, that they have no right to the public lands of the United States.

Mr. President, I ask pardon of the Senate for this loose and desultory mode of discussing the subject. I have already occupied more of the time of the Senate than I should have done. With regard to the arguments which were used by my honorable friend from Iowa, I have no further reply to make. I have been superseded in the task which I had proposed in replying to some of his observations, made, as they were, with all his accustomed eloquence and energy, by the efforts of other gentlemen who have gone before me, and who have fully answered him. I leave the subject, but I shall deeply regret if the decision of the Senate of the United States on this motion shall be, that the American people, in the language of the honorable Senator from Ohio, have no more rights in the public domain of the United States than any alien who has visited, or may hereafter visit, our shores.

Mr. WADE. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] states that I said the American people have no right to the public domain. I said no such thing; and I said nothing from which any such inference could be justly drawn. I have barely stated that this bill carries out what is, in my judgment, sound policy. It does not stop to inquire whether the beneficiaries are entitled, in the legal sense of the term, to what they are to get under it. Citizens and foreigners, all who comply with the provisions of the bill, are to receive so much land. The Government being the owner of this land, has a perfect right to grant it on such conditions as it deems proper; and it has as much right to give the land to foreigners as to its own citizens, so far as I can see. I stated, in connection with this, that when there was a vast continent of vacant lands, I could not see that any one man had a better title than another to a specific quantity of land. I did not see when I spoke before, I do not see now, on what principle of morals one can be considered better than the other. The Government owns the land. The Government has purchased it. I am not the owner of any of it, unless the Government gives it to me, or I buy it; so of the foreigner. We both stand on the same ground, so far as I see, in point of morals, ethics, and law. That is what I meant.

Mr. BADGER. As I suppose there is no expectation of having any vote upon this bill to-day, and as I have also a resolution which I wish to have laid upon the table, in order that I may call it up to-morrow morning, I rise now to move that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. WALKER. I do not suppose that my own views will be accorded with in this matter; but I had hoped that we should get a vote this evening on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to strike out the sixth section of this bill. There is a great deal depending upon that motion, and I had hoped the vote would be taken on it before the adjournment this evening.

Mr. MASON. It cannot be done. Several gentlemen wish to speak.

Mr. WALKER. I know this to be the fact, that whenever there is a disposition shown to adjourn, it is always impossible, in the estimation of gentlemen, to get a vote. If there be a majority of the Senate disposed to adjourn at this hour of the day, or to postpone the further consideration of this subject in order to go into Executive session, of course no one member, and no minority of members, can successfully oppose it; but I have only to say, that I hope the postponement will not take place, and that we shall have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BADGER. Sir, though opposed to the homestead bill, I consider myself under an obligation to the gentlemen who are in favor of that measure, so far as I am concerned, to give them an opportunity at the earliest day to have a vote of the Senate upon the subject, and to interpose no difficulty whatever in order to prevent that vote from being taken. Now, as the Senator from Wisconsin, a friend of that measure, is opposed to the postponement of the bill until to-morrow, in order that I may submit the resolution I propose to offer, I withdraw the motion. I have discharged my duty.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I like the spirit indicated by the Senator from North Carolina, in declaring that, although he is opposed to the bill, he is in favor of giving the friends of the measure an opportunity to get a vote upon it. I hope, now, that there may be an understanding that, on a particular day, at a particular hour, we shall proceed to the vote. If that understanding can be had, so that we may be sure of a vote, I shall be content; otherwise, I think we ought to sit later, until the time for taking the vote shall be fixed.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from North Carolina may effect his object, I think, easily, by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I had no object to effect. I wished to do a simple act of justice to the friends of the bill.

Mr. STUART. I understood the Senator desired to submit a resolution. Certainly there will be no objection to that.

Mr. WALKER. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will have no individual feeling in this matter as regards myself.

Mr. BADGER. I have not the least. I merely wanted to enable the friends of this bill to proceed with it.

Mr. WALKER. I hoped, when the Senator got the floor, he was about to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to lay his resolution on the table. For one, I should have no objection to that, but I could not consent to the postponement of the consideration of the bill until to-morrow, to allow him to introduce a resolution. I am perfectly willing, for one, to give my consent that he shall lay his resolution on the table. Nobody has objected to that. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BADGER. Well, sir, we shall see whether it will be objected to. I preferred to have the bill postponed until to-morrow, in order that I might have a right, without unanimous consent, to lay the resolution on the table.

Several SENATORS. There is no objection.

Mr. BADGER. My resolution is:

Resolved, That the order setting apart every Friday for the consideration of private bills on the general order of the day, be suspended for Friday, the 14th instant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the resolution?

Several SENATORS. No objection.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I now move to postpone the further consideration of the homestead bill until to-morrow, with a view of proceeding to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. WALKER. I rise to ascertain whether, in accordance with the views of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] we can come to an understanding as to the day when we shall take a vote on the bill now under consideration.

Several SENATORS. We can fix that to-morrow.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 14, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen as members of the select committee on the memorial of the Board of Managers of the Washington National Monument Society, asking that Congress will take such action as may result in a plan for completing the erection of the said monument, which was referred by the House on yesterday to a select committee of thirteen, viz: Messrs. MAY, of Maryland; JONES, of Pennsylvania; REESE, of Georgia; McMULLIN, of Virginia; DOWDELL, of Alabama; ELIOT, of Massachusetts; ELISON, of Ohio; VAIL, of New Jersey; OLIVER, of Missouri; PRATT, of Connecticut; MACY, of Wisconsin, and PRYER, of North Carolina.

Mr. CUMMING, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill "to authorize the Postmaster General to enter into a contract for the transportation of the mails between Brooklyn, New York, and various parts of Europe;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. C. said: I ask the permission of the House to have some remarks printed, which I desired to make on this subject.

There was no objection.

Mr. FAULKNER. I was about to ask the House for permission to make some reports from a committee; but I prefer to modify my motion so as to ask that the Speaker, with the consent of the House, shall call the committees for reports of private bills, with a view to their reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia that the business first in order—this being private bill day—is the disposal of the bills from the Senate on the Speaker's table of a private nature only.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then I will renew my motion when these bills are disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would further remark, that he has always believed it to be in accordance with the spirit of the rule to pursue the course indicated by the gentleman from Virginia. But such has not been the practice of the body. After the Speaker's table has been cleared of private bills, in the absence of a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House, the usual practice has been to call for reports of committees generally.

BINDING OF COAST SURVEY MAPS.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask leave to offer the following resolution from the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be authorized to have bound the three hundred and fifty copies of the Coast Survey maps furnished for the use of members of Congress, provided the same shall not cost more than fifty cents per volume.

There being no objection, the resolution was read, considered, and agreed to.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The following bills from the Senate were then taken from the Speaker's table, severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

No. 276. An act for the relief of Mrs. Ann E. Angus. Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

No. 392. An act granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances Smith, of South Carolina. Referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

No. 375. An act relative to the account of General Stephen Moylan. Referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. MAY. There is upon the Speaker's table a Senate bill (No. 305) which I desire the consent of the House to have taken up, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

No objection being made, the following bill was taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

An act directing a reëxamination of the accounts between the United States and the State of Maryland.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have Senate bill No. 192, for the relief Ann J. Knapp taken from the Speaker's table, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I will state that the bill was reported adversely on by that committee, and on their motion laid upon the table; but as they have received new evidence in relation to the case, I ask that it may be re-referred.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and referred.

OCEAN MAIL STEAMERS.

Mr. MACE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report from the select committee on ocean mail steamers, for the purpose of having it laid upon the table, and printed.

There was no objection; and the report was received, laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to execute the order of the House by calling the various standing committees for reports of a private character, for the purpose of reference without debate.

Mr. EDGERTON. I desire to say that I have a large number of reports from the Committee of Claims, which I desire to present. The clerk of that committee, however, is sick, and has taken away the key to the committee room, so that I cannot get them. I ask leave to present them as soon as I can get them.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire, also, to say that the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands is not now present. There is a bill in his charge, which I shall ask the consent of the House to present as soon as he comes into the House.

Mr. KERR. I have a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, which is not precisely of a private character, but to which, I presume, there will be no objection. I ask the indulgence of the House to have it taken up, and put upon its passage. It is a bill to regulate the time for holding the sessions of the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana—Senate bill No. 377.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object, until the call of the committees has been gone through with.

Mr. DICK. I desire to report, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, a bill for the incorporation of an insurance company.

The SPEAKER. Such bills are not usually regarded as of a private character, and, in the opinion of the Chair, would not come within the order of the House.

Mr. DICK. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report it. The bill has been recommended by the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. ORR. I object.

Mr. FENTON. I have just come in, and before I reached my seat, the Committee on Commerce had been called and passed. I am instructed by that committee to make a report, and I now ask that it be received.

The SPEAKER. If the bill be of a private character it will be received.

Mr. FENTON, then, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back Senate bill No. 253 "for the relief of Alexander Lee," with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Ordered that said bill lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. MILLSON. When the Committee on Commerce was called, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. FENTON] had been in his seat, I should have called up the motion to reconsider, which I submitted some two weeks ago, the reference of a bill then reported under an order of the House authorizing private bills which did not give rise to debate, to be reported for the purpose of reference to proper committees. On that occasion, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FENTON] reported a bill of a public character, which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House. I immediately afterwards moved a reconsideration, for the purpose of having the bill referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it properly belongs. It is a bill of a very important character, and one which heretofore has been always referred, to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It ought to take that direction now.

Mr. PHILLIPS. What bill is it?

Mr. MILLSON. It is a bill authorizing, or directing, the adjustment of the claims of various merchants of the cities of New York and San Francisco, for return of duties paid on goods destroyed by fire.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reconsideration can be now had, and the reference of the bill changed from a Committee of the Whole House to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but the Chair will state that he cannot entertain the proposition, if it give rise to debate, for the reason that the House is now acting under a suspension of the rules, or rather under a unanimous order for call on committees for reports of private bills.

Mr. MILLSON. I was not aware that any such order had been made this morning; and shall not press the consideration of the motion which I have indicated at this time.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the reconsideration can be now had.

Mr. FENTON. I object.

Mr. ELLIOTT, of Kentucky, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. PECKHAM, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made an adverse report in the case of Colonel William Nelson; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. P., from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 415) "for the relief of Phineas Nightingale, administrator of the estate of Nathaniel Greene, deceased," with an amendment. The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. PECKHAM, it was ordered that the same committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of David Baylis, deceased, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, reported bills "for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Andrew Fenley," and "for the relief of the administrator of Thomas Wishart, deceased," which were read a first and second time by their titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. R., from the same committee, also made an adverse report in the case of the heirs of Captain William Van Sears; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RUFFIN, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill "for the relief of Lincoln Bates," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARLAN, of Ohio. I am instructed by the Committee of Claims, to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of the Senate bill for the "relief of the owners of the brig Kate Boyd," and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLSON. I should like to know the object of the gentleman.

Mr. HARLAN. The owners desire to furnish additional proof in that case, which, they say, they now have in their possession.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think that any additional proof in the case will change my views. But I have no objection.

There being no objection, the order to change the reference was made.

Mr. BARKSDALE, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, "praying Congress to indemnify William L. Dearing, late deputy surveyor of the United States, for the resurvey of nine townships of public land, in the district north of Red river, in the State of Louisiana, which became necessary in consequence of the accidental and unavoidable loss of the original field notes of said surveys in crossing the Red river in the year 1831," which, on his motion, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Charles Pavie," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILLYER, from the same committee, reported House bill, No. 220, being a "bill to revive an act approved 3d March, 1823, and an act approved 26th May, 1824, supplementary thereto, in reference to the Bahia Honda claim for land in Louisiana," which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I ask leave to report back from the Committee on Private Land Claims, Senate bill, No. 153, "to relinquish the reversionary interest of the United States to certain reservations therein mentioned, and to confirm the title of Charles G. Gunter thereto," with a recommendation that it do pass; and I also ask that it be put on its passage now.

Mr. FAULKNER. I object.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ABERCROMBIE] is not aware that it is by unanimous consent of the House that committees are being called only for private bills which do not give rise to debate; and objection being made, this bill cannot be put upon its passage now.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I imagine that if my friend from Virginia was aware of the character of this bill, he would not make any objection to my motion. It has passed the Senate four different times, and has been before the House since 1837. It simply refers to the title of a small piece of land on the Alabama river. It will not take five minutes to have it passed.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would remark to the gentleman from Alabama, that if he renews his motion after the call of the committees has been concluded, I will make no objection.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. Then I ask to withdraw the bill.

The bill was withdrawn.

Mr. ORR, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill "authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John Charles Fremont for beef furnished to the California Indians," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back bill of the Senate (No. 324) "for the relief of Seneca G. Simmons," with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Ordered, That said bill lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. F. also, from the same committee, reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time by their respective titles, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the account of Thomas Jordan, assistant quartermaster in the United States Army; and

A bill for the settlement of the claims of W. P. Buckner and Pierce Crosby, passed midshipmen in the United States Navy.

Mr. SOLLERS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, Senate bill (No. 295,) "for the relief of S. R. Addison, passed assistant surgeon in the United States Army;" which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SOLLERS. I ask leave to present the petition of Captain Charles Williamson.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to; but under the rule, it can be presented at the Clerk's desk, and referred.

Mr. FLAGLER, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made adverse reports on the following petitions; which reports were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

The petition of Mary Young, praying that a pension may be granted to her husband, and the other heirs and legal representatives of William Leggett, a soldier in the revolutionary war; and

The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, asking that the half pay of revolutionary officers during their lives be allowed to their descendants, deducting the amount received as commutation.

Mr. ELLISON, from the same committee, made an adverse report on the petition and papers of Joel Kelsey, asking for a pension; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported bills of the following titles; which were read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of William Chittenden;

A bill for the relief of William Gove;

A bill for the relief of Jonathan Pierce; and

A bill for the relief of William Parker.

Mr. S., from the same committee, made adverse reports upon the petitions in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the committee discharged from their further consideration:

The petition of Thomas G. Brown, of Tennessee, praying for a pension, on account of disability incurred from exposure in the military service of the United States, in the war of 1812;

The petition of Thomas Byron, for pension, or other compensation for his services rendered during the war of 1812;

The petition of Thomas Whinney, of the State of Tennessee, praying for a pension, on account of the disability incurred from exposure and fatigue in the military service of the United States during the war of 1812;

The petition of William J. Sears, an invalid pensioner, asking for an increase of pension;

The petition of James Smallwood, of Clark county, Indiana, praying to be placed upon the pension roll, or such other relief as Congress may grant;

The petition of Hopestill Bigalow, of Yates county, New York, praying for an increase of pension;

The petition of Elijah Frye, of Bath, Maine, praying for a pension for his services in the war of 1812;

The petition of Solomon Honey, of the county of Middlesex, Massachusetts, an invalid pensioner of the war of 1812, praying for an increase of pension;

The petition of Charles Bissell, of Stafford county, Virginia, praying for a pension, in consideration of his services in the war of 1812; and

The petition of William W. Diche, a soldier in the Mexican war, praying for an increase of pension.

Mr. S. also, from the same committee, reported back the petitions and papers in the following cases; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

The petition of Tabitha Lester, for a pension; and

The petition of Jane Gaston, of South Carolina, widow of Joseph Gaston, praying that the invalid pension granted to her husband in his lifetime may be also granted to her.

Mr. EDMANDS, from the same committee, made adverse reports on the petitions and papers in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof:

The claim of Wyman Badger, of Pennsylvania, for arrears of pension;

The petition of James Cowley, an invalid of the war of 1812, praying for a pension;

The petition of Augustus Cooper, a citizen of Worcester, Massachusetts, praying for a pension;

The petition of Edward Cotter, a soldier in the Black Hawk war, who lost his sight in the service of the country, praying for a pension;

The petition of Elias Bulloch, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying for a pension;

The petition of Zerah Whitney, of Michigan, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying for a pension; and

The petition of Elizabeth Van Ranst, widow of John Van Ranst, of Sackett's Harbor, New York, who died in the United States service during the war of 1812, asking for a pension.

Mr. E. also, from the same committee, reported a bill "for the relief of Zelia Rawson," which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHRISMAN, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following petitions; which were laid upon the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof:

The petition of Voucher Bonzinska and others, citizens of the State of Tennessee, praying Congress to grant him a pension for disabilities incurred by him in the late war with Great Britain; and

The petition of William Strong, a soldier in the Mexican war, asking for a pension.

Mr. BANKS. I ask the consent of the House to report, from the Committee on Military Affairs, a bill "to refund the balance due to Massachusetts for disbursements during the late war with Great Britain," for the purpose of having it referred.

Mr. OLDS. That is not a private claim.

Mr. BANKS. I am aware that it is not, but I ask the consent of the House to report it.

There being no objection, the bill was received, read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, reported back Senate bill, No. 260, entitled "An act for the relief of Gideon Hotchkiss," with a recommendation that it do pass. The bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. T. also, from the same committee, reported adversely on the following petition; which was laid upon the table, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

Petition of Zebulon and Austin Parker, for extension of two patents.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. COBB. It is possible that the proposition I design submitting, may be regarded as of a general character. If it be so regarded, then I shall ask unanimous consent to allow me to introduce and put it on its passage. From an examination of the Calendar, and a knowledge of the few weeks left of this session, all must conclude that Congress will adjourn, leaving two or three hundred bills unacted on. To prevent reinvestigation of all these cases at the next short session, I now move, as I have done for several years past, that the bills which remain on the Calendar at the close of the present session, unacted on, be placed on next session's Calendar, and considered in the order in which they were left; that the unfinished business shall go over, and stand as though there had been no adjournment. Every member is interested in the matter, and I trust there will be no objection to the proposition.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I understand the contingency to which the gentleman refers is provided for under the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama, that the unfinished business of this session go over, and be taken up at the next session, as though there had been no adjournment?

Mr. PHELPS. I ask that the 21st joint rule be read.

Mr. HAVEN. And I ask the reading of the 22d rule.

Mr. COBB. I have no particular interest in the proposition. I have only one bill upon the Calendar. I hope the Speaker will explain the effect of what I propose when the rules indicated have been read to the House.

The 21st joint rule was read, as follows:

"After six days from the commencement of a second, or subsequent session of Congress, all bills, resolutions, or reports, which originated in either House, and at the close of the next preceding session remained undetermined in either House, shall be resumed and acted on in the same manner as if an adjournment had not taken place."

Mr. COBB. I have reduced my proposition to writing, and ask that it may be read.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That all bills, resolutions and other matter referred to the standing committees of this House, upon which no report shall have been made at this session, shall be returned informally to the Clerk, and shall, by virtue of this resolution, stand recommitted at the commencement of the next session, to said committees, into whose possession the Clerk is hereby directed to restore them.

Mr. COBB. I hope the Speaker will explain the object of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. The joint rule embraces all bills. This resolution embraces reports and other matters.

The question was then taken on the resolution; and it was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report Senate bill, for the "relief of David Myerle," ordered to be reported, but which was not here when the Committee on Naval Affairs was called.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will be received, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLORENCE. Would it not be in order to move to put it upon its passage. It has passed the Senate three times, and this House twice, I believe.

Mr. LETCHER. I object.

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

On motion by Mr. MACE, it was Ordered, That he have leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of John J. Ball, for the purpose of reference, leaving copies on file.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution, in reference to an important document sent to us yesterday by the President of the United States, and which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound ten thousand copies of the report, and five hundred copies of the observations of the United States Astronomical expedition to Chili, five hundred copies of the report and observations for the use of the Navy Department, and two hundred and fifty copies for the Superintendent, and the remainder for the use of the members of the House, the said work to be printed and bound by the public printer, and bound in quarto form under direction of the Superintendent of public printing, and the Secretary of the Navy.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

FRIDAY, JULY 14, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 109.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to know if the resolution is passed when these works will probably be published?

Mr. STANTON. I am not able to inform the gentleman from Illinois when they will be published.

The resolution was then referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

On motion by Mr. VAIL, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the House in the case of the petition of Thomas Dismore be withdrawn, in order to their reference to a committee of the Senate.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and I hope that it will be with the unanimous understanding that this is to be regarded as objection day.

[Cries of "Agreed! agreed!" "No! no!"]

A MEMBER. Why should we do that?

Mr. FAULKNER. Because it would enable some twenty or thirty bills of a pressing character to be passed in the course of the day.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON THE COLT CASE.

Mr. THURSTON moved the usual resolution, closing debate on House bill No. 59 within thirty minutes after the committee shall have resumed the consideration thereof.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would inquire of the gentleman from Rhode Island if that is Colt's bill?

Mr. THURSTON. It is.

Mr. FAULKNER. Has the committee of investigation made a report yet?

Mr. THURSTON. It has not.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understood that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] had made a motion to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Even if that motion had been made, still the motion of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. THURSTON] would take precedence of it.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the House will vote the latter motion down.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. When the committee last rose I had the floor, and had the right to address the committee for an hour. I would inquire of the Chair what would be the effect of the gentleman's motion, if agreed to, upon my rights?

The SPEAKER. It would cut you off with half an hour.

Mr. LETCHER. Would it be in order to postpone the further consideration of the Colt case until the select committee shall have reported?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House should determine not to act upon the application for the renewal of the patent for the Colt pistol until after the select committee ordered by the House shall have reported, I shall ask the House to resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order to take up the Army appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The motion to close debate is not debatable, even without the previous question, but may be amended. The previous question, however, cuts off amendment and debate.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CUTTING. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 64; as follows:

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it now in order to move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until the second Monday of December next?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the Chair thinks it is competent for the Committee of the Whole to recommend to the House the postponement of its consideration. The bill is not now before the House, but has been referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. EDGERTON in the chair.)

POSTPONEMENT OF THE COLT CASE.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill in order is the bill "for the relief of Samuel Colt," and upon that bill, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I do not rise to make a speech upon this subject. It seems to me that it would be unbecoming in this committee to go on with the consideration of this case, from the fact that a committee of inquiry in reference to matters connected with it, has been appointed. I consider it improper and useless, under such circumstances, to consume the valuable time of this committee, and I therefore move that this case be laid aside with a recommendation to the House that its consideration be postponed for the present.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I concur entirely with the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Virginia, and it seems to me that the members of this committee must agree to the propriety of the motion, when they take into consideration the facts of the case.

A charge has been made upon this floor, which, directly or indirectly, involves the probity of the gentleman who is now applying to this committee for an extension of his patent. The application which is made to the House is addressed to its discretion. It is an application, not founded upon any legal right. Well, now, it is very evident that the House upon information which they considered sufficient, authorized a special committee to be raised to inquire into the fact whether this gentleman, or his agents, has been endeavoring to tamper with the honor of this House, and having taken that step, it would be utterly inconsistent for them now to proceed to exercise their discretion upon an application for favor to this party. For, if the committee were to report that the allegations or suggestions which have been made were founded in fact, that Mr. Colt is involved in that transaction, it would be certainly derogatory to the honor and character of the House that it should confer its favor upon, or exercise its discretion in favor of such a person. The consistency of the House is directly involved in the matter. We cannot consistently move in the matter, until the committee, organized for the purpose of making investigations into the allegations that improper means have been used by Mr. Colt to procure the passage of this bill, have made their report. It surely would not be expedient for us to go on with the consideration of this question, and grant an extension of this patent, and exercise our judgment or discretion in favor of this man, and then afterwards consider the question as to whether the very man towards whom we have exercised our favor, has violated the highest laws of the land; by endeavoring to tamper with the judgment of the highest tribunal in the land. It seems to me, therefore, that the committee cannot well do otherwise than concur in the proposition made by the gentleman from Virginia.

There is another reason why there is no necessity for hasty action. The patent of Mr. Colt will not run out for some years yet, as I understand.

Mr. LETCHER. Not until 1857.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Then there is no need of hurrying the matter to any final result now. I would suggest that it be postponed until some Monday in December next. I ask my friend from Virginia to accept that modification to his motion.

Mr. SMITH. I will state that my object in making the motion to lay the bill aside, was, that it may be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it be postponed until the report shall have been made from the select committee. I have no disposition to cause any unnecessary delay. I am perfectly willing that this discussion shall go on as soon as that report is made; and it seems to me no one will object to its being postponed until that time. I hope the motion will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman that a motion to lay the bill aside is not in order in Committee of the Whole House. It was so decided, in reference to this particular bill, only a week since.

Mr. SMITH. I understood the Speaker to state, immediately before leaving the chair, that he had no doubt it was in the power of the committee to lay aside the bill, with a recommendation that it be postponed until the report of the select committee shall have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the motion to be to lay the bill aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be postponed?

Mr. SMITH. That was my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that motion is in order.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would suggest to the gentleman that the consideration of this bill had better be postponed until some particular day.

Mr. SMITH. I have no objection to that. I will move, then, that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that its consideration be postponed until the first Friday after the first Monday in December next.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to inquire what would be the position of the bill if the House should refuse to postpone? Would the bill then be on its passage?

The CHAIRMAN. The bill would be before the House for its consideration; and it might either be postponed, passed, or recommitted to the committee.

Mr. CUTTING. As a point of practice, it seems to me that we ought not to assent to the decision that this Committee of the Whole House have no power to regulate its own action upon matters under its consideration. It seems to me so extraordinary a decision, that I do not think the committee, on full reflection, will adhere to it. To say, if a measure be pending, and that information is on its way to the committee to enable it to act, that the committee is powerless even until they can obtain such information, would, it seems to me, reduce us to a condition, which, on reflection, I am sure members would not be willing to agree to. Therefore, with a view once more to test the matter, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SMITH. I do not understand that the proposition I made has been ruled out of order by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's proposition has not been ruled out of order.

Mr. CUTTING. I beg pardon of the Chair; I thought that it had.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that a motion to lay the bill aside, and to take up the next on the Calendar, was not in order; but that it was in order to move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that its consideration be postponed to a future day.

Mr. CUTTING. Then, from that decision of the Chair, declaring as the parliamentary law of this committee, that it is not within its power to lay aside a bill, no matter under what circumstances—that the rule is inexorable, and out of the control of a majority of the committee—I most respectfully take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to which the gentleman refers has not been made. The gentleman from Virginia has submitted no such motion.

Mr. CUTTING. I understood the gentleman to move that this bill be laid aside.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed until the first Friday after the first Monday in December next.

Mr. CUTTING. Until after the coming in of the report from the select committee.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. Does the Chair decide that it is not in order to move to lay this bill aside, and without qualification?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he was informed that a week since the committee, pending the consideration of this very bill, decided that a motion to lay the bill aside was not in order. In conformity with that precedent, the Chair decides that a motion to lay the bill aside is not in order. But the gentleman from Virginia has made no such motion. His motion is, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed until the first Friday after the first Monday in December next. That motion the Chair decides to be in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is right that the committee should act understandingly on this matter. I contend that, under the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, this House can, and will, pass this bill to-day. It should not go to the House at all.

Mr. WALSH. If the House does pass it, the quicker they adjourn the better.

The CHAIRMAN. When the bill goes to the House, the House can postpone its further consideration, or put it on its passage.

Mr. WENTWORTH. If it goes there it will be passed, and not postponed.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the Friday after the first Monday in December next.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee cannot postpone the further consideration of the bill; but it may report it to the House, with the recommendation that its further consideration be postponed. In the House it can be postponed, or passed, as may be deemed most proper.

Mr. HOUSTON. The recommendation that this committee may make will have no weight in the House. Though the recommendation may be in accordance with the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia, yet, if the friends of the measure be in the majority, they may postpone, or pass it, as they choose. The best way for the friends of the bill to get it into the House is to vote for the gentleman's motion.

But, Mr. Chairman, as the committee does not seem disposed to vote on the proposition, I move that it be informally passed by, and that we take up for consideration the next business on the Calendar. Gentlemen seem desirous to have the report from the select committee before acting on the subject, and I therefore trust no objection will be made to my motion. If we do not wish to act on this bill, let us go to some other business which we may act on.

Mr. CUTTING. I know of no better time than the present to settle what seems to be a controverted point of parliamentary practice, that the Committee of the Whole is powerless with reference to the disposition of a subject under its consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. In order that the question may be distinctly raised and tested, I withdraw my motion, and move that the bill under consideration be laid aside, and that the next bill on the Calendar be taken up for action.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then state that, in pursuance of a previous decision of the committee, in relation to this very bill, made two weeks ago, the motion to lay aside is not in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. From that decision of the Chair I appeal, and I demand tellers on the appeal.

Mr. WALLEY. This question arose a fortnight since, when I had the honor of occupying the chair. There were then two questions presented for the consideration of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. Is this question debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. WALLEY. I wish the committee would indulge me merely for a single moment.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith] moves that the bill now before the committee be laid aside. The Chair, in pursuance of the decision of the committee made twice in relation to this very bill, decides that that motion is not in order. From that decision the gentleman from Virginia takes an appeal, and demands tellers. The question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. WALLEY. Do I understand that there is any objection to my making a brief statement?

Mr. WALSH. Yes, sir; I object.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PHILLIPS and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 62, noes 76.

So the decision of the Chair was not sustained.

The question then recurred on Mr. Smith's motion to lay the bill aside; which motion was agreed to.

CHARLES LEE JONES.

House bill (No. 63) "for the relief of Charles Lee Jones."

Mr. SEWARD. I move to lay that bill aside, also.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would inquire of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Seward,] for what reason he makes that motion? This bill is a small matter, and should pass.

Mr. SEWARD. Well, I withdraw the motion. The bill was reported in extenso.

It provides that a sum, not exceeding $2,000, shall be paid to the claimant, Charles Lee Jones, in full for his expenses and services in raising, subsisting, and transporting three companies of volunteers in the District of Columbia to serve in the war against Mexico.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom the matter had been referred, was read.

It appears from that report, that in April, 1847, the President of the United States had decided to accept the services of three companies of volunteers, to be raised in the District of Columbia, to serve in the war with Mexico, which, with two companies to be raised in Maryland, were to form a battalion under the command of a lieutenant colonel. The petitioner, under the firm assurance in his own mind, derived from a combination of circumstances, that he was invited to undertake the raising of these three companies, as the intended commander of the battalion, entered upon the work of raising them, and between the 19th of April, 1847, and the 8th of June, had actually raised, and mustered, and enrolled in the service, two complete companies, and all but a small portion of the third, at his own expense. He did not, however, receive the commission of lieutenant colonel which he had expected. The committee, however, consider him entitled to his expenses in raising these companies, and to his pay as lieutenant colonel during forty-five days from 19th April to 8th June, and report a bill for that purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. After the report which has just been read, it is necessary for me to make but one or two explanatory remarks in support of this bill. The committee will perceive that its object is to reimburse Lieutenant Colonel Jones for expenses incurred by him in raising two companies for service in the Mexican war. When his memorial was first presented to Congress, the claim amounted to something like $2,000. The War Department, at that period, for some reason not very satisfactory, made difficulties in the recognition of this claim; but since that time its general justice has been fully recognized, and a large portion of it adjusted by the War Department; and there remains now due to him, according to the statement before me, a balance of some $800, with interest. This balance has not, so far, been allowed by the War Department, simply because the petitioner was not able to furnish testimony in support of the items in accordance to the strict rules established by that Department. They have allowed him his pay as lieutenant colonel, and the only matter remaining unadjusted are certain items of expenses incurred in the raising of these troops; and which it is asked shall be settled upon principles of equity and justice. The Department has expressed no doubt of the justice of the balance unpaid.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to inquire if this gentleman was regularly deputed to raise these troops, or whether he raised them for the purpose of commanding them himself?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that Lieutenant Colonel Jones had received assurances from high sources, deemed satisfactory by him, that if, by his patriotic exertions, he could succeed in raising these companies, he should be placed in command of the battalion from the District. Why that promise was not subsequently complied with—why he did not receive that command, it is not now necessary for me, at this time, to trouble the committee with relating. It is enough to state that he did exert himself with energy, liberality, and patriotism; that he did succeed in raising two companies, and a part of a third. The facts admit of no question. There is no doubt of the merits and justice of this application. He raised those companies, they were accepted by the Government, and they actually served in the Mexican war. The only question involved, at this time, is, as to the allowance of certain expenses incurred by him in raising those troops. I repeat, sir, that the Secretary of War has expressed no doubt as to the justice of this claim, as now demanded; and would have allowed it, but for the fact that the testimony did not come within the strict rules prescribed by that Department. This bill only proposes to authorize the Secretary of War to settle those accounts according to the principles of equity and justice.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

CAPTAIN GEORGE SIMPTON.

House bill (No. 99) "for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston."

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Captain George Simpton, of Galveston, the sum of $1,600, in full payment of his claim for indemnification for loss of schooner Alert, whilst in the public service, during the war with Mexico.

The report states that in the month of March, 1847, the French bark Jeune Nelly, of Havre, was captured as a prize by the United States steamer Hunter, commanded by Captain McLaughlin, while attempting to violate the blockade of Vera Cruz. The claimant, George Simpton, being the owner of a schooner called the Alert, was at that time employed by the quartermaster to carry provisions from Sacrificios to Camp Bagara for the use of the division of the army under the command of General Twiggs. After the capture of the French bark, the services of Captain Simpton, who was an efficient seaman, and a skillful and experienced pilot, were required by Captain McLaughlin for the purpose of taking the Hunter, with her prize, into harbor. The capture was made late in the evening of the 20th March, and the wind being light, Captain McLaughlin ordered the vessels to be taken into the anchorage under Green Island, to remain until the morning. Before this was done, a severe "norther" sprung up, and the pilot was ordered to take the vessels into the harbor. While attempting to execute this order, the three vessels were driven upon a reef by the violence of the winds, although prompt and vigorous efforts were made by the officers and crew to save them. The Hunter, with her prize, and the schooner Alert, were all wholly lost, the officers and men escaping with great difficulty. Captain Simpton now asks that he may be indemnified for the loss of his vessel.

Had this loss occurred while in the performance of his contract with the Government for the transportation of supplies for the army from Sacrificios to Bagara, the Government would have incurred no responsibility for such loss; but as Captain Simpton was called from his duties under his contract, by the officer in command of the Hunter, to render assistance in securing a valuable prize, and his own vessel was lost while thus employed in the public service, the committee think that he is entitled to relief.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

FERDINAND CLARK.

House bill (No. 103) "for the relief of Ferdinand Clark."

The bill was read.

It provides that the duties imposed by the act of June 30, 1854, entitled "An act concerning tonnage upon Spanish vessels," on the Spanish brig Conde de Villanueva, Captain Carlos de Agao, and paid to the collector of the port of Charleston, in South Carolina, previous to the clearance of said vessel from that port for Cuba, on the 11th of September, 1835, with a cargo of rice and lard, be refunded to Ferdinand Clark, the owner of said brig, she having been wrecked on the coast of Florida, on the seventeenth of the same month, and lost, with the greater portion of her cargo—the amount refunded to be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The report of the Committee on Commerce was read in extenso.

It appears that the petitioner is a citizen of the United States, and a resident merchant at Havana; that he was the owner of the Spanish brig Conde de Villanueva, of which Captain Carlos de Agao was commander; that the said brig, laden with a cargo of rice and lard, (part of which was also the property of the petitioner,) cleared from Charleston, in the State of South Carolina, for Havana, in the island of Cuba, on the 11th of September, 1835, having paid to the collector of the port of Charleston the sum of $1,951 43, as tonnage duty, conformably to the act of Congress of the 30th of June, 1834, entitled "An act concerning tonnage duty on Spanish vessels;" that the said brig sailed from Charleston on the 13th of September, 1835, and that on the 17th of the same month she was wrecked on the coast of Florida, and that the vessel and cargo were totally lost, with the exception only of a portion of the lard. It also appears that, in consequence of that disaster, the petitioner, through his agents, Messrs. Crocker & Co., merchants of Charleston, and consignees of the said brig, applied to the collector of the port of Charleston for relief, and that, at his suggestion, they subsequently addressed themselves to the Secretary of the Treasury, requesting that the duties thus paid might be refunded; but that they were given to understand by the Secretary that he had no authority to interpose in their behalf, and that relief in such cases could only be afforded by the action of Congress. The petitioner, accordingly, now applies to Congress for that redress which the Treasury Department is unable to afford.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. As the chairman of the Committee on Commerce is absent, who reported this bill, I move that the bill be laid aside informally.

The motion was agreed to.

ADOLPHUS MIER AND COMPANY.

House bill (No. 104) "for the relief of Adolphus Mier and company, of St. Louis."

It appears, from the reading of the report, that the memorialists, merchants of St. Louis, imported from Liverpool to New Orleans, per ship W. V. Kent, seventeen packages of hardware; that the same packages were placed on board the steamer Marshal Ney for transhipment to St. Louis, under transportation bond. The duties on said packages amounted to the sum of $1,075 30, which have been paid to the collector of the port of St. Louis; that the Marshal Ney, with the packages on board, was, by accident, entirely consumed by fire on the night of the 7th of October, A. D. 1849, at the city of New Orleans.

The bill, which was also read, provides for the refunding of the duties paid in this case.

Mr. FENTON. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SKELTON. I would like to call the attention of the members of the committee to the principle involved in this bill. It proposes to return to the owners of imported goods, when destroyed by fire or water, duties that have been paid. I think it is a principle that should not be adopted by Congress. The result of adopting such a principle would be to convert the General Government into an insurance company, to insure all kinds of goods that are imported to this country, before they are thrown into the market. I think if we undertake to pay claims of this kind, that we shall have claims presented against the Government amounting to millions of dollars.

The amount is not known; but I am satisfied it comes to a vast sum. I can see no justice or propriety in the General Government turning itself into a great insurance company. Vast amounts of merchandise have been lost on various occasions by fire and water throughout the United States, and large amounts of merchandise insured by insurance companies have had to be paid. If we pass this bill, there will be a vast amount of claims of this sort brought against the General Government. For this reason, I move that this bill be passed by informally.

The motion was agreed to.

WILSON AND BROTHERS.

Mr. SKELTON. I make the same motion in reference to the next bill on the Calendar, which is bill (No. 105), "for the relief of Wilson & Brothers, of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri.

There being no objection, the bill was passed by informally.

ROBERT GRIGNON.

House bill (No. 107) "for the relief of Robert Grignon."

Mr. EASTMAN took the floor.

Mr. WALSH. Let the bill be read. Debate is not in order till we know what the character of the bill is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that this bill has been considered by the committee, and that an amendment was offered, and the bill passed by informally.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move that it be laid aside to be reported. An objection had been made by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] but he is satisfied with the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. EASTMAN. You cannot object.

Mr. WALSH. Then I ask that the bill be read before any explanation is given of it.

The bill was read. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is authorized and directed to pay unto Robert Grignon, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $19,000, in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States arising out of the treaty with the Menomonee tribe or nation of Indians, executed September 3, 1836.

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Strike out the word "Robert Grignon," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the representatives of the Menomonee tribe of Indians and their assigns."

Mr. EASTMAN. That amendment was made upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, before me.

Mr. LETCHER. The amendment was put in the bill at my suggestion. I think it is all right, and I move that the bill be laid aside, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE G. BISHOP.

House bill (No. 108) "for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased."

The bill was read.

Mr. THURSTON. A Senate bill embracing the substance of this bill has passed both Houses, and there is no necessity of acting upon this.

Mr. ORR. I suppose that the proper course to pursue is to move that it be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH GERARD.

House bill (No. 131) "for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard."

The bill, which was read, provides that Reese

A. P. Gerard, William Gerard, and Rachel Blue, (formerly Rachel Gerard,) the only children and heirs of Joseph Gerard, a messenger of the United States to the Indians, who was killed in 1792, be, and they or their heirs are hereby, permitted to enter, each one of them severally, or his or their heirs, one section of the public lands, without the payment of any consideration for said three sections, being in full payment for the patriotic services of said Joseph Gerard, and in accordance with the spirit of the inducements authorized by President Washington to be held out to such persons as would consent to carry a message from Fort Washington, (now Cincinnati,) in 1792, to the hostile Indians of the then Northwest Territory.

Mr. MACE. The report in this case was read to the committee some time since, and if the committee will give me their attention for a few minutes, I think I can make such an explanation as will satisfy every man upon this floor that this bill ought to pass.

The report shows that in 1792, at the instance of General Washington, Colonel Hardin, Major Alexander Truman, Mr. Freeman, William Smalley, Thomas Flinn, and Joseph Gerard, were expressly deputed, by the authority of General Knox—in a letter which I will refer to in a few moments—to carry a communication from Cincinnati to the lakes, for the purpose of adjusting things in such a way as to avoid a surprise of the fort at Cincinnati by the Indians.

General Knox required the commander in charge of this fort to select four of the bravest and most intrepid men under his command. The letter from General Knox to this commander, which is published in the report, states that if any accident should happen, or if these men should be murdered by the Indians, the Government of the United States would see that their families were taken care of.

The commander at the fort received the proposition, and selected these four men to undertake the service. They started upon that journey, and from that day to this they have not been heard from, except through the Indians, who stated that they were murdered the very next day after leaving Cincinnati.

I will read to the committee an extract from the letter of General Knox to the commander of the fort. He says:

"As this will be considered as an extra service from your military employment, your expenses will be paid by the public; and if you succeed in effecting a peace, you are hereby promised, in behalf of the United States, a handsome pecuniary reward."

"In case any accident should happen to you, while employed in this mission, you may rest assured the Government will make a suitable provision for your family."

"But I cannot close these instructions without urging you to the highest possible exertions in bringing the war to a close, and of devising every proper means for that purpose. You may be assured that all the stipulations of rewards you make shall be fully complied with, and they ought to be liberal."

"These instructions are given by the authority of the President of the United States, and are to be regarded accordingly."

I will now read from the report of the committee, to show that the families of the other three who accompanied Gerard upon this service have been provided for by Congress. The report says:

"It also appears from report No. 163, made at the second session of the Eighth Congress, on the 1st of March, 1805, by the Committee of Claims of the House of Representatives, in favor of the widow of Flinn, (one of Major Truman's party,) that provision had been made for the families of Major Truman and Colonel Hardin, and for William Smalley. It is but justice (though very long delayed) that the children should receive the dearly earned recompense promised their father, Joseph Gerard. The friends of Colonel Hardin and of Major Truman applied to Congress for relief for the families of the deceased, which was granted February 27, 1793. A pension was given to Colonel Hardin's family for seven years, at the rate of $450 a year, and $300 a year to the family of Major Truman for the same length of time. In May, 1800, Congress passed another law, (volume 3, page 401,) generously providing for the education of the fatherless children of the slain, substantially as follows: 'That there shall be annually paid to the guardians of the sons and daughters of Colonel John Hardin, and of Major Alexander Truman, for each son and each daughter, the sum of $100, until they shall have, respectively, attained the age of twenty-one years, to be applied by the said several guardians to the suitable education of the said sons, and to the use of the said daughters.' In 1805 Mrs. Flinn applied for relief, which was granted March 3, 1805. (United States Laws, volume 3, page 664.) She was allowed $518, with interest from the 15th of January, 1793, upwards of twelve years."

Now, the committee will see that in consideration of the duties imposed on these men, and the fact that they all lost their lives in the discharge of their duties, Congress years ago provided for the families of three of the number. The remainder have been unprovided for up to this time. The committee had some trouble in fixing on the kind of relief to be afforded, but after inquiring, and receiving much information, it came to the conclusion to report a bill authorizing each one of Gerard's heirs, three in number, to enter one section of any of the public land open to private entry. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALSH. Is the widow alive?

Mr. MACE. No, sir, she is dead.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. HELEN MACKAY.

House bill (No. 173) "for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general United States Army."

The bill provides that $6,537 09 be paid to Mrs. Helen Mackay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same being allowance of commissions for disbursements of special appropriations by her late husband, Colonel Aeneas Mackay, prior to September 30, 1838.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. HOWE,] who reported this bill from the Committee on Military Affairs, is not in his seat this morning; but there is a full statement of the facts in the case in the accompanying printed report. The claim is principally founded on the statement of General Jesup, of the Quartermaster's Department, which is certified to by General Scott. The report of the committee is unanimous; and I now move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

At the request of Mr. SKELTON, the report of the committee was read extenso.

The committee report a bill granting $6,537 09 to Mrs. Helen Mackay, as per centage for disbursement of moneys made by her late husband, Colonel Aeneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general, United States Army, out of appropriations distinct from the regular Army appropriations. General Jesup and Major General Scott bear testimony to the long and faithful service of Colonel Mackay, who disbursed millions of dollars of the public money, without the loss of a dollar to the Government; but the committee do not place the claim to relief on the ground of a faithful discharge of official duty, but on the ground that he performed a service that was extra official, and for which his representatives are entitled to a reasonable compensation at the hands of the Government.

Mr. BENTON. I was well acquainted with Colonel Mackay, and I am well acquainted with his widow, who is the applicant in this case. His duties were chiefly beyond the Mississippi and at the town of St. Louis, where I live, and where he died. I am able to confirm everything said of his merits by General Jesup and General Scott, and to add that he died without the means of defraying the expenses of his funeral, and that his whole life was one of frugality and utter blamelessness. I know that he lived frugally and economically, that he supported his family without ever exceeding his income, and that he disbursed large sums of public money for the public service, over and beyond his regular duty, without any fraction of it ever sticking to his hands, and without one dollar of it ever being used by him, temporarily, in speculations for his own benefit.

A great many persons who handle public money feel that they can use some of it to their own advantage without detriment to the public service. But Colonel Mackay was immaculate in this respect. He disbursed every dollar that came into his hands for the Government, faithfully holding it fast, living within his income, and that in the most frugal manner. The amount asked in this case, and I was one of the Military Committee who were unanimous in allowing it, is only one half of one per cent upon those disbursements, which were over and beyond his duties—the same as was allowed to Captain Hetzel. I think it is as strong a case as can be presented to Congress; and if the committee and the House think as I do about it, they will give their approbation to an officer who behaved in this manner by granting the relief asked for. I therefore move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. LETCHER. I have no doubt all that has been said by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] in regard to Colonel Mackay, is true and well deserved. I have not a question about it, but then it seems to me there is a principle involved in this bill that will lead to the expenditure of a very large sum of money by the Government. As I understand the facts in this case, this gentleman was an officer in the Army of the United States, and received regular Army compensation for the services which he rendered in that capacity.

Mr. GIDDINGS. How much?

Mr. LETCHER. He received his regular pay, whatever it was, during his service under the Government. After he is dead, it is proposed to allow commissions upon the money that was disbursed by him by virtue of his official character and in connection with the Government as an Army officer.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] allow me to ask him a question, as he seems to have directed his attention to this subject? I desire to know of the gentleman from Virginia, if this bill should pass, if it does not set a precedent by which every officer who has charge of internal improvements, the opening of rivers, the construction of the Capitol, and every work of that description, may be entitled to a commission upon the sums which he expends in his regular duties as an officer of the Army?

Mr. LETCHER. That is just exactly what I was about to show. The passage of a bill of this kind establishes a precedent here that would involve the expenditure of millions of money, and nobody knows where it would stop.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] will read the report of the committee, he will see that this case cannot affect any other question of this kind. There was a law passed in 1828, cutting off all allowances of this character. This claim does not come down beyond that. The committee stopped the allowance when they came to that period. It refers to this law specifically. The passage of this bill cannot be quoted as a precedent, if I understand it, in any other case. This is a peculiar case.

Mr. LETCHER. There was a peculiar case here in the last Congress, which is quoted in this report as a precedent to justify the passage of this bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] has asserted that this case cannot be quoted as a precedent of this kind. Now, I should be very glad, if the gentleman from Illinois would explain to us why other paymasters or quartermasters of the Army would not be entitled to similar allowances under like circumstances?

Mr. WASHBURN. Because no other quartermaster has performed the same services which Colonel Mackay did perform. If the gentleman will read the report of General Jesup on the subject, he will have no doubt about it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not think that any report in the world would satisfy me on that point, because the principle sought to be established in this bill embraces all other quartermasters.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes; and if Captain Meigs, who is engaged on the extension of the Capitol; or if any other officer of the Army, happen to die poor and insolvent, and unable to pay his funeral expenses, his family may, under the principle of this bill, come here and claim commissions on the amount of money disbursed by him.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. I rise merely for the purpose of asking whether the amount of money claimed here is for the commission, or money which was paid by the officer in question, entirely beyond and outside of the duties which, as such officer, would have ordinarily devolved on him?

Mr. LETCHER. I have no doubt that we will not for the next ten years have a case here calling for the application of this principle in which the individual applying, will not have exactly such a case as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] describes—that of an officer performing services outside of his own strict duties. I have been long enough on the Committee of Claims to know that, out of the number of applications for extra compensation that come up there in some way or another, it is quite impossible to imagine a single case in which the party will not bring himself within the rule, and which, according to his own idea, or the idea of his friends, will not justify a committee of the House in allowing him all he asks. Now, sir, here was an Army officer. He took his position in the Army because he believed it a better profession than the profession of law, or of medicine, or of any other profession in which he could have been engaged. He prosecuted the profession which he had chosen, and now, sir, when he is dead, this House is asked to allow his widow and children a commission upon moneys which, according to my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. ELIOT,] were disbursed over and above the original duties which devolved upon him as an Army officer. If, sir, he was entitled to compensation for these services, I imagine there would have been some authority vested in the War Department, or somewhere else, to allow him compensation for all the services which he rendered, and such a consideration as would be equivalent for the services rendered. And if there had been any foundation for it, it would not have been here in this shape of a claim for commissions for the disbursement of money. Why did he not apply for the compensation in his life time? Why did he not apply for it year after year until it was allowed?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I will reply to the gentleman, that if he will examine the matter he will find that Colonel Mackay made the charges at the time.

Mr. LETCHER. Did he apply to Congress for the money during his life time?

Mr. WASHBURN. No, he did not.

Mr. LETCHER. He made the charges, and the charges were disallowed by the Department, and he never applied to Congress at all.

The gentleman says that this case will not form a precedent, and that another case will never fall within the principle upon which this case stands. Now, we had a case before us last year, and that was decided upon the principle that the lady was a very beautiful and accomplished widow, and, so far as I can gather from the discussion of this case here to-day, it is to be decided upon the principle that there is a widow here, and accomplished daughters, interested in getting this money allowed. I have as high a respect for ladies as any other gentleman here, but when I am called upon to discharge the obligations which I owe to my district, and to the country, I hold that I have no right to vote away one dollar of money for any purpose that is not in accordance with strict right and justice, whoever may be interested in it; that we should act here, in the management of public affairs, as the representatives of the people, upon exactly the same principle upon which we should act in the management of our private affairs. Now, if there would be no obligation upon us, as individuals, in a certain case to pay money, there would be no obligation upon the Government to pay, in a similar case; and in this case, if it is a mere matter of favor, I hold that we ought not to make the allowance.

Will the gentleman from Illinois be good enough to inform me why the principle upon which he seeks to sustain this case, will not apply to every other disbursing officer of the Army?

Mr. WASHBURN. I will tell the gentleman. There is a law, passed in 1839, which prevents it.

Mr. LETCHER. Does not the gentleman know that we have special applications here every day like this? And what effect has this limitation by law? If an individual chooses to come here and present a claim, Congress is to consider it, and if there are circumstances which justify it, Congress will allow it. Of what use, then, is this limitation by law, of which the gentleman speaks? It is like the compensation of the clerks here. You have a law allowing them a fixed compensation for their services, and yet they come to us each session, and claim that they have done something beyond the range of their ordinary duties, and that they ask and receive frequently, extra compensation for it. Now, there is a law against this, and yet the law does not restrain them, and how is the law to restrain persons in cases of this kind? I have no more doubt than I have of my existence, that if this bill shall become a law, that it will require $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 to cover the cases which will grow out of the precedent set by this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman who reported this bill is not present to present this case himself. But, sir, I am somewhat familiar with the facts connected with this matter, and I regret that my friend from Virginia did not listen to the reading of the report from the Clerk's table; for if he had he would have seen that the objection which he has raised to this claim is wholly unfounded. The claim made here by Mrs. Mackay, the widow of a most meritorious and deserving officer, Colonel Mackay, is for services performed by him for this Government, which were outside of, and entirely disconnected with, the duties of his office as quartermaster general, and which were performed before the passage of the act of 1839. I do not understand the gentleman from Virginia as objecting to the justice of the claim. He does not pretend that the service was not rendered. But he objects to the passage of the bill upon the ground that it would be establishing a dangerous precedent. Now, sir, if the committee have listened to the report, they will at once see that the passage of the bill cannot possibly establish any such precedent as the gentleman claims. It does not, and cannot, cover the class of cases which he has referred to. The report of the committee makes this very clear.

I read from the report:

"It appears, by letters addressed to a member of this House by General Jesup, quartermaster general, and which are made a part of this report, that such disbursements were made by Colonel Mackay prior to the 30th September, 1838, and that he claimed the usual commission of two and a half per cent. for such disbursements, the service being considered extra official. The amount of all such disbursements is very large; but as Congress passed an act on the 5th July, 1839, creating additional quartermasters, and on the 3d March, 1839, also passed another act providing that 'no officer in any branch of the public service shall receive any extra allowance or compensation for the disbursement of public money, unless the same be authorized by law,' your committee do not feel authorized to take into consideration any disbursements of special appropriations subsequent to the passage of that act, or to the quarter ending 30th September, 1838, except as herein-after stated."

The gentleman will see that this does not interfere, in any way, with the law of 1839, because the report and the bill expressly limit the compensation to the period previous to the time of the passage of that act. This report shows that Colonel Mackay performed duties for which he never received compensation. There are certain duties which belong to the quartermaster's department. But the duties for which this compensation is asked did not belong to that department; and this Government has no right to ask that they should be performed without paying for them. This claim is founded upon a just principle—a principle which I desire to see carried out in every department of this Government; and if it establish a precedent for doing justice by the Government to the citizen, so much the better.

Sir, this Government is rich enough. It is powerful enough to pay all just and equitable demands upon it. But it is contended that Colonel Mackay was paid as an officer, and that he has no right to pay for any other service while acting as an officer. The duties of a quartermaster are limited and defined; and the officers in that department are obliged to perform all duties appertaining to that branch of the service, and can claim no extra compensation for their performance. But if other duties, responsible and delicate duties, entirely disconnected with a particular office, and which the party is under no obligation to perform, are imposed upon him, then, sir, according to every principle of justice, he has a right to compensation for such extra service. It was no part of Colonel Mackay's duty to make these disbursements. That is the ground taken by the committee in their report. I read again from the report:

"These disbursements of special appropriations are considered to have been no part of the official duty of Colonel Mackay; and such being the case, it was reasonable for him to expect the usual compensation for taking upon himself the labor and responsibility of making them."

"Your committee consider the claim, to the extent above indicated, a just one, and in accordance with the precedent established by Congress in the case of the late Captain Hetzel, of the Army."

In addition to the allowance which is made for disbursements prior to 1838, there is an item in the report of $1,115 97, which goes to make up the amount allowed in the bill. That item certainly stands on a firmer basis, and General Jesup distinctly states that there is no reason why Colonel Mackay should not be allowed for certain disbursements he made as paymaster during the Mexican war, the same as paymasters are allowed for a similar service. In regard to that General Jesup says:

"The responsibilities of the officers of the quartermaster's department are equal to the responsibilities of the officers of the pay department, and their labors are much more onerous; there is no reason, therefore, for allowing extra compensation to paymasters which does not apply with equal or greater force to quartermasters."

This is no trumped claim, brought here after the death of Colonel Mackay for the purpose of getting money out of the Treasury. When the services were rendered, Colonel Mackay claimed that they were extra services, and demanded his just compensation. General Jesup says he has unofficial information that he made a charge for these disbursements.

The gentleman says that it was disallowed. As a matter of course it was disallowed. If it had not been disallowed, his widow and children would not have been driven to Congress to get what was legally and equitably his due. I trust this Congress will exhibit no hesitation in following the recommendations of the Committee on Military Affairs.

A VOICE. Why was it disallowed?

Mr. WASHBURN. The gentleman asks me on what ground the claim was disallowed. I do not know the reasons. I only know the fact that it was disallowed, as is frequently the case with the most righteous claims, for technical or other reasons.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire, with the gentleman's permission, merely to say that I was not present at the meeting of the Committee on Military Affairs when this case was taken up and acted on. Therefore, I take no responsibility on myself, so far as the recommendation of that committee is concerned. I would inquire simply of the advocates of the bill why this money, which is here claimed, not as a bounty, not as a gratuity, but as a matter of right, is made payable to the widow, and not to the legal representatives of Colonel Mackay? I infer from another case, which was before me, and on which I have reported, that if this money is due him as an individual, it should be paid to his administrator, and be the subject of account in the proper department of the Government.

Mr. WASHBURN. In answer, I will state to the gentleman from Virginia, that I do not know the reason why the committee made the appropriation payable to Mrs. Mackay, instead of to the legal representatives of Colonel Mackay. Mrs. Mackay is the executrix of her husband, I believe.

Mr. BARRY. On what ground were allowances made previous to 1839, during which year a law was passed prohibiting them?

Mr. WASHBURN. I do not know all the grounds. Until the passage of the law of 1839, allowances of extra compensation for extra official service were made at the discretion of the Department. They were made, as can easily be shown, until Congress, by law, in 1839, prohibited them.

Now, further, in regard to the inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] I have to state that I am not aware of any objection to the amendment of the bill as suggested.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will move, then, to amend the bill, so that the appropriation will be made payable to the legal representatives of Colonel Mackay.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Not being acquainted with the motives which governed the committee in making this amount payable to Mrs. Mackay, upon reflection I will not take upon myself the responsibility of altering it in any way. I think this committee, if they knew the circumstances of this case; if they had been familiar with the life of Colonel Mackay; if they were familiar with the discharge of the duties of his office, as I have been, and as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] has been, for so many years; if they were familiar with his life, illustrated, as it was, during his long public service, by the most spotless integrity, and with the fact of his leaving a widow and children, after a whole life devoted to his country, without adequate means of support, I believe that they would not look with a very critical eye into the circumstance whether this money shall go for the benefit of the widow and her children directly, or whether it shall go for the benefit of the estate. As a worthy tribute to the memory of this distinguished and honorable man, let me read what General Jesup says of him:

"Colonel Mackay was one of the most faithful, industrious, and correct officers in the Army. Every duty with which he was charged, throughout his long service, was performed in such a manner as to secure for him the approbation of his superior officers, without, as far as I know or believe, a single exception. So well was President Polk satisfied with his services in connection with the Mexican war, that he rewarded him by conferring on him the rank of colonel by brevet."

General Scott also bears the highest testimony to the worth of Colonel Mackay, saying that he "disbursed millions of public money without the loss to the Government of a dollar."

But I do not desire to take up the time of the committee in discussing this case at this late period of the session. I must confess to a great interest in the passage of the bill. The interesting family of the late Colonel Mackay, who are to receive the benefits of this bill, are residents of my own town, well known to me, and I feel the strongest assurance that Congress will not withhold justice from them.

Mr. GIDDINGS. It was not my intention to have participated in this discussion at all, but there are important principles involved in it which will apply to a large class of cases. I contend that an officer in the service of the United States receiving a specific salary and full compensation for all his services, is bound to bring with him into the service, under the presumption of law, all the talent and time that he possesses. I repeat, that a man accepting office is bound to bring with integrity, his full time and diligence to the discharge of his duties. I have no doubt that all that has been said about the character of Colonel Mackay is true. I have no doubt that he was honest, honorable, faithful, and diligent in the discharge of his duties, that he lived economically, and that he performed all the duties of life. But this is a question which we are called upon to decide between the Treasury of the United States, and the widow and heirs, who are the claimants in this case.

It is readily to be perceived that every officer of the Government will sooner or later be called upon to discharge duties which did not come within the purview of his office. So palpable was this to be seen, that as early as 1794 the Committee of Claims in this House, after having investigated this subject maturely and deliberately, resolved that in no case should an officer of the United States receive extra compensation for his services. From the year 1794 to this day the Committee of Claims, in this House, have, with one uniform voice, so far as I know, refused all applications of this character, upon the principle to which I have referred. This man, accepting office and receiving the emoluments of the office, which the law allowed him, promised to bring with him to the discharge of his duties, his full time, talent, and integrity. In consideration of his services he received the compensation which the law allowed him. If I was to deviate from the rule in any case, I would rather do so in the case now before us than almost any other case that could be presented; but it strikes me that we have nothing to do with the private character of individuals in considering these private claims. The merits and demerits of Colonel Mackay do not come in question here. The question is as to the discharge of his duties, and the situation of his family, whether rich or poor, ought not to enter into the consideration of this case. All these offices are sought with great avidity by men, who were expecting to receive precisely the compensation which the law allows and no more. And to this, it strikes me, we are bound to adhere.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Chairman, I think that the principle involved in this bill is a very important one. If the committee should determine to pass the bill now before us, that action would involve us in the expenditure of a very heavy amount of money. If I understand the principle correctly, every military officer who now has, or who heretofore has had charge of the public works, can, with the same propriety as in this case, come before a committee of the House, and ask to be paid commission on the sums of money which he may have expended; for I believe—if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] be right—that these Army officers, who have charge of public works, expend the money themselves. Now, if we establish the precedent of allowing commission by this bill, where is this to end? We have a gentleman here superintending the extension of the Capitol, who, if he continue in that position till the completion of the work, will have expended some $5,000,000 or $6,000,000. Suppose we have to allow him a commission on this outlay, what a claim will that be on the Treasury? And, remember, that in this particular case, Colonel Mackay had been receiving his pay as an officer of the Army. It is not pretended that the Government did not pay him all that was due to him as an Army officer.

But I gather from a remark that fell from the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] that there is another matter before the committee in connection with Colonel Mackay. I do not understand what is the nature and character of that other matter. I should like to know whether any other portion of his family is asking for any benefit. I should like to know what the state of Colonel Mackay's account with the Government is. Will the gentleman from Virginia give me the information?

Mr. FAULKNER. I will answer the interrogatories of the gentleman from South Carolina. There is a bill now pending before this body on behalf of the widow and executrix of Aeneas Mackay, asking to be credited in his accounts, as quartermaster, with the sum of $25,000. If that sum is credited, then he will not be indebted to the Department. If it is not credited, he will be indebted to the Department in the sum of $25,000. I would prefer that this bill should be so amended, that, if it pass, the amount will be payable to the legal representatives of Aeneas Mackay, in order that it may enter into the matter of the settlement of his accounts as quartermaster, when his accounts come to be settled in the Department.

Mr. ORR. I supposed about as much, from the fact that this bill provides for the payment of this sum to the widow of Colonel Mackay. Now, sir, according to the prima facie statement of his account, he is indebted to this Government, and it depends upon the action of this committee, and afterwards upon the action of the House, whether or not you will discharge that indebtedness. I do not know how it is that his accounts are in the condition in which they are. It is, perhaps, in consequence of some vouchers having been misplaced, or being informal.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I know the gentleman desires to understand this matter correctly. Prima facie, Colonel Mackay is not indebted to the Government one dollar. But, the Department set aside a voucher of Colonel Mackay, which brings him in debt. A bill has passed the Senate, and has been reported upon by the Military Committee of this House, directing the Treasury Department to recognize that voucher.

Mr. ORR. I did not understand, from the gentleman from Virginia, that the bill had been acted upon by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAULKNER. The bill has been reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. But I will state that I was not present at the time the report was made; but I found the bill among the papers of Colonel Bissell, after the duties of the chairman of that committee devolved upon me. I therefore felt it to be my duty to report the bill, and to accompany it with a report which will disclose the whole facts of the case to the committee.

Mr. ORR. Then the bill has not been reported to the House as yet?

Mr. FAULKNER. It has been reported to the House, and this report was made subsequent to that; and I will merely say, what I have said in the beginning of that report, "that a majority of the committee are in favor of recommending to the House the passage of the bill; but as the amount involved is large, and the justice of the application not entirely free from difficulty, they have deemed it proper to submit to the House the papers which were laid before them, bearing upon the merits of the claim, which are accordingly appended to this report."

Mr. ORR. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to consume the time of the committee in further debating this question. I desire that the committee shall understand the principle of this bill. It is that extra compensation may be made to an officer, who has a fixed compensation by law, for services which, although said and claimed to be extra-official, are yet certainly within the line of his duty. The principle is a dangerous one, and will enable every officer who assumes, or presumes to perform extra-official duties, in disbursing moneys, to come before Congress for extra compensation; and if you admit this claim, you will be compelled to admit every one of a similar character. I think the bill should be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to make a few remarks, and but a few, upon this case. This claim is of a twofold character—for disbursements prior to the year 1838, and for disbursements subsequent to 1848. Prior to 1838, Colonel Mackay was engaged in a campaign in Georgia, Alabama, and Florida. According to the statement of General Jesup—and that statement is appended to this report for the purpose of enlightening the committee—he preferred a claim for commission upon $135,980 92, expended in the campaign in Georgia and Alabama. It was then disallowed.

According to that statement, Colonel Mackay preferred claims for commission for moneys expended during his campaign in Georgia and Alabama. They were disallowed. Others were also presented, and, in consequence of the frequency of these demands, an act was passed on the 3d March, 1839, providing that no officer in any branch of the public service should receive any allowance or commission for the disbursement of the public money, unless the same be authorized by law.

But it is said that Colonel Mackay preferred his claim prior to the passage of this act, but that it was disallowed. Well, sir, it was disallowed by the proper officers; and it was in consequence of the frequency of precisely such demands as this that the act was passed, and that of itself furnishes a strong argument against the passage of the bill.

But Colonel Mackay also claims pay under the act of 1848, providing compensations to paymasters for disbursing special appropriations of money. The report says:

"Colonel Mackay disbursed special appropriations to a large amount for the Mexican war, and these disbursements are conceived to be on the same footing as payments made by paymasters on account of the volunteer force serving in the Mexican war. Congress, in such case—by act 12th August, 1848—authorized a commission not exceeding half of one per cent. on all sums disbursed, not to exceed $1,000 per annum to each paymaster."

Now, mark you, here is the act of Congress of 1839, declaring that no officer in the public service shall be allowed any commission for the disbursement of moneys, which continues to be the law of the land. In 1848, a law was passed restricting the compensation of paymasters, for the disbursement of special appropriations to one half of one per cent. until it reaches $1,000. Well, sir, this is for the compensation of paymasters, and not quartermasters; but the friends of Colonel Mackay, by a parity of reasoning, say there is no reason why this extra compensation should not be allowed to quartermasters as well as paymasters.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That is what General Jesup says.

Mr. SMITH. No, sir; I am stating what the report of the committee says.

Mr. WASHBURN. But the report is stating what General Jesup says.

Mr. SMITH. Well, sir; General Jesup's letter follows, and is copied into the report; but I am reading what the committee adopts as their own opinion. I ask this committee to remember that the act of 1839, which provided that no extra compensation should be allowed for disbursements, operated upon the past as well as the future. By the act of 1848, paymasters were to receive one half of one per cent. as commission for the disbursement of money. Colonel Mackay, during the Mexican war, it seems, disbursed some $200,000, for which he comes now and asks the pay of quartermaster. A gentleman tells me that this commission was to extend only to the amount of $1,000 of money disbursed.

Mr. WASHBURN. No, sir; the paymaster's commission was not to exceed $1,000 per annum.

Mr. SMITH. Well, be it so. Colonel Mackay gains the amount of his disbursements upon which different rates of percentage are charged. I call the attention of the committee to these two items:

The amount of disbursements of special appropriations prior to September 30, 1838, was $216,843 79; the percentage on the same, at two and a half per cent., is... $5,421 09
The commission of one half of one per cent. on the $223,194 75 special appropriations, disbursed on account of Mexican hostilities, and running through a year and a half, is..... 1,115 97

He had no right to make any charge for percentage on that disbursement. He had no legal claim. When he preferred his claim, it was disallowed. I presume that he never claimed percentage for disbursements during the Florida war, because it had been disallowed him for those made in the other war.

Well, sir, Colonel Mackay's representatives claim two and a half per cent. on disbursements of special appropriations of $216,843 79, made prior to September 30, 1838. The percentage amounts to $5,421 09. They also claim a commission of one half of one per cent. on the $223,194 75 special appropriations, disbursed on account of Mexican hostilities, and running through a year and a half, which is in amount $1,115 97. That is the commission allowed, by express law, to paymasters, for the disbursement of that sum of money. Now, what is the authority for this commission? It is in vain for Congress to pass laws expressly declaring that officers of the Army shall not be allowed commission for disbursements, if they are to be allowed. It is in vain to establish a rule to prevent the officers of the country from being troubled with the settlement of these accounts, if our time is to be consumed, and the business of the country retarded, by applications which the law designed to put down, and forever.

But there is a remarkable feature in the bill. It proposes to give this money to the widow of Colonel Mackay. She may be lovely for aught I know. I was rather surprised, however, to hear my gallant friend from Virginia making an objection on that score, because he was one of those who, on a former, and interesting occasion, most assuredly testified a strong disposition to recognize the force and influence of such interesting and attractive considerations.

Mr. LETCHER. My colleague misunderstands me, and probably for the purpose of making a sort of side hit at me. I do not know how that is. I did not make objection to the claim on the ground that this lady was lovely, and that her daughter was lovely; but I said that that furnished no reason why Congress should allow a claim which had no better reason to sustain it than that fact. If you go abroad in the country you will find daughters as lovely as those of Colonel Mackay, and many widows as lovely as Mrs. Mackay; and it would be a monstrous precedent to establish, that because widows and daughters were lovely, they should come here and take money from the Treasury.

Mr. SMITH. I am happy in receiving the gentleman's correction. I concur with him in the statement that there is not the least foundation for this claim.

But the proposition is to give the money to the widow. Why to the widow? If she be lovely, it might fall into the hands of a gentleman who might seek to appropriate her. The bill is drawn in its present shape for the reason that Colonel Mackay died indebted to the Government. Yes, sir, that is the reason. I am bound to believe that he is a defaulter according to the official records. I know that the records do not frequently tell the truth; all conversant with the manner in which accounts are settled by the officers of the Government, know that a man may be represented as defaulter who is not in fact a defaulter. He is charged with the money he receives, and until his accounts are settled, he is debit to that amount. A man may therefore appear to be a defaulter when he is really a creditor of the Government. According to the records, Colonel Mackay is a defaulter, and hence we can understand why the bill proposes to give the money to the widow. Therefore, too, it is that there is eminent propriety in the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to amend the bill so as to make the money payable to the legal representatives of Colonel Mackay. Having said thus much at present, there is no room to say more. I do not think that there is a particle of merit in the claim.

Mr. WALSH. I would ask the gentleman from Virginia whether there is any law in existence which gives to the Secretary of the Treasury a percentage on the $10,000,000 we have appropriated to Mexico for the Gadsden treaty? If there is, I will vote for this bill.

Mr. SMITH. I presume there is no such law. There was an act passed in 1839 designed to settle such demands; designed to protect the accounting officers of the Treasury from the annoyance of having illegal demands presented to them; designed to protect this House and committee from the consumption of time arising out of the pursuit of these demands, addressed to the equity and liberality, and frequently to the carelessness, of Congress. It is well known by every member here how many claims of an unsubstantial character pass through Congress from the want of proper investigation. The case now before us seems to be one of the experiments upon Congress that are so much to be deplored, but which so frequently succeed.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. But a few weeks ago the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] exhibited a very earnest solicitude in behalf of Mrs. Greenhow, the widow of the law agent of the California land commission. Mrs. Greenhow presented a claim to Congress for compensation for the extra services of her deceased husband, performed while he was acting as such agent. That claim was addressed to the equitable consideration of Congress. There was no law authorizing its payment. The gentleman from Virginia, was an earnest advocate of that claim upon this floor, because he said he knew Mr. Greenhow to have been a man of honor, learning, and integrity, and who had devoted his life, if he had not indeed lost it, in performing the duties of his office in California; while, in point of fact, I believe he fell over a bad place in the street and broke his neck. I voted with the learned gentleman from Virginia, in favor of that claim, for the simple reason that I thought it just and equitable that where a man had performed services which were outside of the line of his specified duties, the Government should pay him for those services.

Now, we have presented here the claim of another widow—the widow of a man who has served his country, according to the testimony on record, faithfully and zealously upon the tented field. But this officer and his widow have not been so fortunate as to have formed the acquaintance of the learned gentleman from Virginia; and hence, instead of being the advocate of this bill, as consistency, I hold, would compel him to be, we find him arrayed in opposition to a bill addressed to the equitable consideration of Congress, and fortified not only by the recommendations of a committee of this House, but by those of superior officers of the Army, who served with Colonel Mackay in the field, and were cognizant of his whole military career, and who testify to his fidelity, industry, assiduity, and integrity in the disbursements of the public money made by him. It is a singular circumstance in the history of this case, that through a long life of public service, during which Colonel Mackay disbursed millions of the public money, not a single dollar was ever lost by the Government. Because, indeed, sir, the accounts of this gentleman are not settled in the Department, he is now to be branded on this floor as a defaulter. The record shows, the report made by the Committee on Military Affairs shows, that Colonel Mackay does not occupy the position of a defaulter before the Government. His accounts are unsettled, to be sure; but there is no pretense that he is a defaulter in money to the Government, or that he has misapplied money confided to him by the Government for disbursement.

What I want to ask the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] is this: I ask him to point out to me, to this House, to the country, nay, to point out to the widow of Colonel Mackay, when she comes here submitting this matter to his equitable consideration, the difference between the claim advocated by him a few weeks ago on this floor in favor of the widow of his friend, Mr. Greenhow, of California, for extra compensation due to him for discharging duties imposed upon him outside of the circle of the duties of his office, as defined by law, and this claim of the widow of an officer of our Army, which is submitted to our equitable consideration. Both claims are made for services rendered by the husband of the applicant, outside of his public duties.

Mr. SMITH. I will answer the gentleman. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Michigan and the committee to the difference between the case of Mr. Greenhow and that of Colonel Mackay; and I am happy that the opportunity has been thus given me to present that difference, because I am not satisfied with the judgment of the House in the question of Mr. Greenhow. Sir, on the statement of the gentleman from Michigan himself I have got the judgment of the House on the question now at its bar for adjudication. He says the cases are alike, and it is for the House to say whether they are or not. If the cases are alike, the House has already pronounced judgment against this claim, and how does he expect them to reverse that judgment?

Mr. STUART. On the ground that "While the lamp holds out to burn

The vilest sinner may return." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Oh! exactly. Very likely.

I ask the attention of the committee to the broad difference that there is between the cases. Mr. Greenhow was the assistant law agent in California. The Government had a right to his services in that character, and in that character only. We all know very well that where a lawyer is engaged he is engaged in a particular duty; but this engagement does not in any respect absorb the whole of his time. Nor is the obligation one for his perpetual and exclusive services. Like any agency in which a lawyer embarks, he embarks in it to perform the duty connected with this employment—an employment which never absorbs the whole of his time. And in this particular case of Mr. Greenhow, let me tell the gentleman, the duties required of him were of that character that did not require the whole of his time. Not so, however, in the case of Colonel Mackay. He bore the commission of his country. He wore her button on his coat. His life was dedicated to her service. And if he died in the public service, his widow was entitled to a pension. The case of Mr. Greenhow was this. He was the assistant law agent in California. He was not the law agent, but the assistant; for the necessities of the public service, in connection with that commission, required that there should be not only an assistant law agent, but a law agent to boot. Well, now, sir, a man might be an assistant law agent, and still give his time to a large amount of private business, as was the case in this instance. But when you devolve upon him the double duties of principal and assistant, I ask the committee, and I ask the gentleman himself, if it is not calling upon him to perform duties which the Government had no right to demand of him? Now, sir, he came here and demanded nothing as assistant law agent. He came here and appealed, not to the equity of the House, but to their justice, and asked that he should be paid for the duties which he performed, right manfully and ably, as agent for the Government. He acted in two characters, when the Government had no right to require him to act but in one. There is a difference between that case and the case now before us. In the case at bar, Mr. Mackay appears in the character in which the Government is entitled to his whole services. We all know perfectly well that this is the fact. That makes the difference. Why, then, should I have referred to his family? Recollect that the bill in that particular case involved an amendment which gave the allowance that I sought for him to his representatives. Attractive as the widow was, I did not undertake to give it to her. I brought that in because I do love, I acknowledge, to feel the glow which beauty and loveliness ever excite in my bosom; and I thought that the allusion to it might influence some of the young men whom I see around me in this House.

Mr. STUART. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. The gentleman says that the proposition was not to pay to the widow of Mr. Greenhow the money which was asked to be appropriated. I ask the gentleman if the bill, which was introduced into this House by him, did not propose, in terms, to give this money to the widow of Mr. Greenhow, and if the proposition, by which it was so changed as to direct the money to be paid to the representatives of Greenhow, did not proceed from another quarter, and a quarter hostile to the bill?

Mr. SMITH. No, sir. I did not introduce the bill, and the change was made at my instance. I made it a sine qua non.

But, sir, the two cases are not analogous. I think I stand perfectly consistent. The whole question here is, whether an officer, to whose whole services and whole time the Government is entitled, in the face of the law, and in the face of a failure to press his demand, shall be allowed, through his representatives, at this late day, to come here and claim it.

Mr. BENTON. I wish to call back the attention of the committee to the case which is before them. A few words in relation to the act of Congress in 1838, which has been so often quoted here. Now, sir, neither the words themselves upon their face, or upon their history, will bear the construction or the application which has been given to them. Neither upon their face, nor upon the history of the times, is there any sort of relation to the construction which is sought to be put upon them.

The words of the act are:

"No extra compensation or allowance shall be made to any officer in any branch of the public service, except the same be authorized by law."

Now, sir, what was the evil which that act was designed to remedy? What was the evil? Sir, I was cotemporary with that act. I do not claim to understand it better than others because I drew it, but I leave it to explain itself. I say I was cotemporary with that act; and what was the design of it? It was not made as a restraint upon Congress. No, sir; it was made as a restraint upon departmental allowances; that, and nothing else under God's heaven, but departmental allowances arbitrarily made, sometimes one per cent., sometimes two, sometimes two and a half, and sometimes, I believe, four and five per cent. Sir, if you will look over their accounts during that period, you will find that they are full of these allowances. Well, sir, what did Congress say? Why, this is lighting the candle at both ends; we pay a percentage to collect the money, and that is fixed by law; we pay a percentage on paying it out, and that is not fixed by law—it is fixed by departmental discretion. Therefore they said, we will stop this departmental allowance founded on discretion.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the gentleman will allow me, I desire to ask him a question. I take it for granted that he is familiar with this law of 1839, and I ask him if it was not intended with a view of putting down these allowances, these claims, these demands?

Mr. BENTON. No, sir. Not these claims; not these demands. The gentleman used the right word first, when he said "allowances," and allowances are very different from claims. It was designed to prevent the use of discretionary power at the Departments in these allowances. They had a way of allowing, more or less, different sums to different persons, according to their fancies; and we stopped that. The law was to apply to them, and not to single individual cases. The law applied to departmental discretion alone, leaving Congress to do as they please.

Mr. SMITH. But the language of the law indicates that it was intended to prevent just such demands as this.

Mr. BENTON. Read the law.

Mr. SMITH. I will. It reads as follows:

"No officer in any branch of the public service shall receive any extra allowance or compensation for the disbursement of public money, unless the same be authorized by law."

I think this law intended to prevent these demands from being made to Congress, as well as to the Departments. Of course Congress has power over the whole question. Nobody disputes that.

Mr. BENTON. I now quit this subject, having shown that that act was made to operate upon departmental discretion, and not upon any existing law. It does not repeal any existing law under which extra allowances might be made. It does not undertake to prevent Congress from making such allowances as they may think proper hereafter. It leaves the whole matter open to Congress. Instead of permitting these officers to get their allowances at the Departments, it permits them to come here and get their allowances by law.

Now, one word with respect to Colonel Mackay. It is a hard thing for a man like him—a man who fought his country's battles, and lived an honorable and patriotic life—now in his grave, to be called a defaulter. Sir, it will not stick. An honest man never was created in the world; nor one more patriotic; nor one who lived more void of offense, before God and man, more punctilious in discharging every duty that belonged to him, public and private, social and political. To call such a man "a defaulter" in the Congress of the United States, is to use words that will not stick; there is no power that can make them stick. I drive them back with the indignant feelings which a man ought to have when he sees the dead attacked in this way—the dead to whom he was attached in life, and whose memory he respects.

Now, as for his widow, her name and person have been lightly handled here. She is not a woman to be lightly handled anywhere. She is a matron, an aged woman, the mother of a numerous family, to whose care she has devoted her life. She is entitled to be spoken of respectfully, and not with levity anywhere, but especially in the American Congress.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am one of those, Mr. Chairman, who make it a rule, if I can, always to be in the right; and in the right not only in fact and principle, but in feeling. This committee and the gentleman all heard me make an explanation, which was wholly unnecessary in reference to the character of these defaults. Does not the committee remember that I went into a statement as to how defaults appeared to exist and be outstanding against a party, when in truth there was really no default. For instance, if I, as disbursing officer, receive $100,000 from one of the accounting officers, I am charged with it, and until I settle my accounts, I am debtor to that amount. If any item of my account is disallowed, I am a defaulter in the technical language of the day. I made this explanation because it was not my desire to see the slightest injustice done the dead. Every member of the committee will remember it. Very few persons would have resorted to that precaution. I did not say one word against the character of Colonel Mackay. I assumed that he was all that was claimed for him, a gallant, faithful, upright officer. Still I said that there was no law authorizing the claim, none whatever.

Mr. LINDLEY. I rise to a question of order. I believe that the gentleman has spoken once or twice on this subject already.

Mr. SMITH. I hope I may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. LINDLEY. I desire to see our business progress.

Mr. ORR. When the gentleman from Virginia rose, nobody else sought the floor, and he is now entitled to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SMITH. I am surprised that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LINDLEY] should have come into the play at so late a day.

Now, the act of 1839, Mr. Chairman, expressly says that no officer in the public service shall receive any extra compensation for disbursements of public money, unless the same be authorized by law. Can human language be more comprehensive? "No officer shall receive any sum of money for any extra service, unless it be authorized by law." This, unquestionably, is the law.

The gentleman from Missouri informs us that that law is no restraint upon Congress. Why, I am very much obliged to the gentleman for telling me that. It put me in mind of an old judge, who was fond of a good dinner and a bottle of wine under his belt afterward, who, being called on to hold a session of the court after dinner, and seeing some young lawyers emptying their green bags, said significantly, "Well, young gentlemen, please remember that we know something." I would say to the aged gentleman from Missouri, that I really thought when he told the committee it was not bound by this law, that it could pass this bill notwithstanding; that this was a matter addressed to our discretion, over which we had control; that he might remember we knew that fact. No member of the committee is so badly enlightened as not to know that. Nobody raises a question on it. But I ask him if he imagines for a moment, that when this law was passed, it was intended to transfer this question of the allowances of accounting officers to this Hall.

Congress has been struggling for years, to the utmost of its capacity, to manage so as to get clear of these demands. According to the logic of the gentleman from Missouri, this law of 1839 was intended to transfer this troublesome business back to Congress. It was not the purpose to settle this thing, to lay down a rule that should effectually settle these questions of allowances, but it was simply the purpose to transfer them from one department of the Government having charge of such matters, to another—the most cumbersome and the most unfit of any in the world to decide them.

One word more, and I will conclude my remarks. I invite the attention of the committee to the following letter of General Jesup, appended to the report made in this case:

QUARTERMASTER GENERAL'S OFFICE,
WASHINGTON CITY, December 22, 1853.

SIR: I have received your letter dated yesterday. There is no official evidence in this office, that the late Colonel Mackay charged a per centage for disbursing special appropriations for carrying on the Florida and Creek wars; but I have unofficial information from the Third Auditor's office, that he charged a per centage for disbursing $135,980 92, during the campaign in Georgia and Alabama, 1836, which it appeared was disallowed. Being then in the field myself, in command of the army operating against the Creek Indians, I know the Colonel was there, and that he disbursed large sums of money; and that he performed his duties most faithfully and efficiently.

I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,
TH. S. JESUP, Quartermaster General.
Hon. ELLIS B. WASHBURN, House of Representatives, Washington City.

That brings me to the consideration of another point. If a man is faithful, according to the logic of the gentleman from Missouri, in the performance of his duties, he is to have extra allowances; but if he is faithless, then of course he is not to have them. What is the difference between the gentleman from Missouri and myself in respect to this? He means to establish a scale of rewards; and if a public officer appears to be faithful, why he is to have extra allowance, but if he is not faithful, then he is not to have it.

Permit me here to say, that I would not cast one word of reflection upon the lady of Colonel Mackay; and I would not utter one word which would bring a single regret to the bosom of any one. Is it a fact that Colonel Mackay is a defaulter to the Treasury? Sir, it is so.

Mr. BENTON. It is not so.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman from Missouri says it is not so. But, I appeal to the record for the fact. The record tells you that the fact is as I have stated.

Mr. BENTON. Then the record is false.

Mr. SMITH. I hope from my soul that it is false. But the very character of this bill shows a disposition to get rid of the responsibility, good or bad. That in itself is sufficient, I say, to satisfy us that the record is not false.

But the gentleman from Missouri tells us that Colonel Mackay was a man to whom this thing could not stick. He [Mr. BENTON] has certainly exhibited here a degree of feeling, very amiable and praiseworthy in a friend, but not exactly germane to one who is engaged in legislation. I am one of those who have always listened with pleasure to the gentleman from Missouri. I always love to do so. But still, I wish to be distinctly understood, that I am not to be driven from the position I take, through a sense of duty, by a display of passion or an affectation of indignation.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I have succeeded in getting hold of a work which proves my assertion. It tells the whole story. I know the astonishment with which the committee will look over it. It is the "Biennial Register of the United States, for 1838." It is a list of officers and agents, civil and military, employed in the engineer and other departments of the Army. Here you find allowances made to officers at the rate of six dollars per day, and one per cent. on money distributed by them; ten dollars per day, and five per cent. on money distributed; two and one half per cent. on disbursements, five per cent. on disbursements, and so on, page after page. And it was to prevent all this that the act was passed cutting off allowances.

Mr. SMITH. One word will dispose of this evidence. There is not the name of a military officer in the whole list. They are all agents, civilians employed to do this duty. And yet the gentleman from Missouri parades this before the committee, as if the names in that Register were those of Army officers.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. FAULKNER. I move to amend the bill by making the appropriation payable to the legal representatives of Colonel Mackay, instead of to his widow.

The question being on the amendment of Mr. FAULKNER,

Mr. STRATTON. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRESTON and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 41, noes 81.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

DAVID C. CASH AND GILES U. ELLIS.

House bill (No. 171) "for the relief of David C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis."

The bill and report were read through. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to David C. Cash, late lieutenant, and Giles U. Ellis, private, in the Seminole war in Florida, whatever may be due them on the muster-rolls for military services in said war.

It appears from the report, that the memorialists served in the war with the Seminoles in Florida, the former as a lieutenant, and the latter as a private. That they were deputed, with the concurrence and approbation of their respective commanders, to assist the regimental quartermaster and commissary of subsistence, Richard R. Crum, in the receipt and disbursement of supplies; the former at Fort Crane, and the latter at Fort Gilliland.

That they received supplies from time to time from the acting quartermaster of the United States Army and the acting commissary of subsistence, and placed the same in the public storehouses of their respective stations, signing receipts and vouchers for the same. D. C. Cash signing as "acting assistant commissary," and Giles U. Ellis as "assistant quartermaster at Fort Gilliland."

It also appears, that although signing receipts in this form, they considered themselves as acting merely in the capacity of agents of Crum, and responsible to him alone.

It also appears that they well and truly discharged their duties as the agents of the said Crum, receiving the supplies, and disbursing them, upon regular requisitions, to the troops in service, and (in pursuance of law) to the suffering inhabitants; and that, at the expiration of the performance of their duty, they accounted to R. R. Crum, the regimental quartermaster aforesaid, delivering to him all the receipts, invoices, requisitions, and other vouchers covering their issues, and which vouchers were made out in his name. That they had not supposed themselves liable for the property to any one other than Crum, alleging that they had received no authority whatever to act in their own names as agents of the Government, either in the quartermaster or commissary's department.

And yet, when, after the war, they applied for the pay due them on the muster-rolls for their military services, they were met by an offset of this very public property which years before they had disbursed under orders from a regularly recognized quartermaster, and to whom, as before stated, they had fully accounted.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MAXWELL. I do not know what was the ground of objection to this bill when it was up before; but, taking it for granted that it was made because of the state of things existing at the time, and because members were not aware of the facts of the case, I now move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

BALANCE DUE NEW YORK.

House bill (No. 110) "authorizing the payment of balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812," was taken up.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Governor of the State of New York the sum of $11,929 45, that being the balance due said State arising out of issues of military stores by said State to officers of the United States Army, and to volunteers and militia in the service of the United States during the war with Great Britain, declared in the year 1812..

Mr. FAULKNER. I have had that bill very carefully examined at the War Department, and I can state that there is due to the State of New York, as appears by the records of that Department, the sum of $11,928 45. In order to a perfect understanding of the case, I ask for the reading of a letter from Colonel Craig, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The letter was read, as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, }
WASHINGTON, February, 23, 1853. }

SIR: In answering the letter addressed to you on the 19th instant by the Hon. Mr. Fish, of the Senate, in relation to an account between the United States and the State of New York, for arms and ammunition furnished during the war of 1812, and which letter you have referred to this office for a report thereon, it seems necessary to go briefly into the history of the account.

It appears from the records of this office, that Major Daliba, of the Ordnance Department, having been directed, 21st July, 1817, to settle the accounts of the States of New York, Connecticut, and Vermont, for arms due those States under the law of 1808, reported that the State of New York charged against the United States arms and stores delivered by the State during the war of 1812 to militia in the service of the United States. That he was then directed to state the account in two parts; first, of arms delivered to the State under the act of 1808; second, of arms and stores delivered or received by either party, with the apparent balance, and remarks.

In 1818 Major Daliba made a report under the second head. On the 4th of September, 1823, he was informed that material errors had been discovered in his statement, and he was required to make a reexamination. Abstracts of the articles embraced in the accounts were at the same time sent to him, among which was one embracing stores captured by the enemy; and he was directed to communicate with the agent acting for the State of New York. Nothing, however, appears to have been done under these instructions by Major Daliba; and all the papers were returned by him upon his resignation.

On the 25th of May, 1825, Major Talcott was written to from this office, sending him the abstract that had been sent to Major Daliba, informing him of all that had been done in relation to the settlement, and authorizing him to settle the account. No definitive settlement, however, appears to have been made.

Among the papers in the case, there is a rough draft of the proceedings at several meetings on this subject in 1831, between Major Talcott and General Muir, commissary general of the State of New York, which is authenticated by their signatures, agreeing to the allowance of various items, and suspending others for further evidence.

But it is said that General Muir died before the matter was closed. I learn that in the summer of 1850 General Daniel Lee, commissary general of the State of New York, came to this office with authority to act for the State in effecting a settlement. That General Talcott, then head of the office, put all the papers in the hands of Major Bender, the chief clerk, to be examined between him and General Lee. That they agreed upon a statement of the account, and a statement of the balances on each side to be valued in money, in order to offset one by the other, as far as it would go, and with the understanding that the balance thus found due the State* should be paid in muskets, at the established rates. But the statements thus agreed upon were never examined by General Talcott, or submitted by him to the War Department, and still remain unacted upon.

I am, sir, with great respect, your very obedient servant,
H. K. CRAIG, Colonel of Ordnance.
Hon. C. M. CONRAD, Secretary of War.

*$11,929 45, equivalent to 9178 13 muskets.

Mr. FAULKNER. It will be for the committee to determine whether the act shall be executed, by ordering the guns to be surrendered to the State of New York, or whether an equivalent shall be surrendered in money. I will only state that we have a large surplus of muskets—something like seven hundred thousand.

Mr. FENTON. I desire to make a few remarks on the bill under consideration. Early in the present session, I appeared before the Secretary of War, in company with the inspector general of the State of New York, for the purpose of making some investigation, and inquiring in relation to this matter, and, if possible, draw the amount from the Treasury that should appear due and unpaid said State.

I then learned that in 1850 and 1851, the commissary general and adjutant general of the State of New York had been delegated by the Executive, under legislative authority, to appear before the Secretary of War, and adjust this matter between the State of New York and the United States—for property balances due said State, arising out of the issue of military stores and munitions of war during the war of 1812, to the Army of the United States and the militia of the State of New York, then in the service of the United States.

The adjutant general, in his report to the Legislature of the State of New York, says, after a thorough and protracted investigation, it was admitted and agreed upon by the officers of the Ordnance Department, on the part of the United States, that there was due to the State of New York a balance of $21,861 85; but that the Secretary of War doubted his authority to settle this balance without a special act of Congress. This act was then the authority required on the part of the Secretary of War to terminate this long-delayed payment. Failing to then make application to Congress, Governor Seymour, in December last, deputed the new inspector general [W. L. G. Smith] to proceed to Washington, and endeavor to bring it to a close.

I accompanied the inspector on that mission, and on appearing before the colonel of the Ordnance Department, [Colonel Craig,] we found, to our great surprise, that the sum had been adjusted, or rather the balance struck, $11,892; and the adjutant general, after some delay and much hesitation, came to the conclusion, that as the matter had been examined on the part of Major Bender, Colonel Lee, and the Secretary of War, and satisfactory conclusions arrived at, so far as the War Department was concerned—however severe, and perhaps unjust to the State of New York—it was better to let it remain so, and to ask Congress to pass an act authorizing the Secretary of War to pay the amount thus agreed upon.

It is unnecessary, perhaps, for me to inform gentlemen of the committee that the militia laws of the State of New York have recently undergone thorough and complete revision, and that the military force of the State is under entire reorganization and reconstruction, not only in discipline, but in equipments, arms, &c.; so that a payment of this sum in muskets would be utterly useless to our military force, and entirely lost to the State. We have already a large quantity of antiquated arms and munitions; and, inasmuch as this debt was incurred forty-two years ago, and the State has been, for the last twelve years, making ineffectual efforts to procure a settlement, the committee will see the propriety and justice of disposing of this matter at once, by authorizing the Secretary of War to pay this sum in money. It is not asked to increase the amount—though far less than the amount to which she is entitled in all probability—but simply authorize the payment of a sum entirely satisfactory to the War Department.

I hope, therefore, no gentleman will interpose an objection; hearing none, I move the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PAMELA BROWN.

House bill (No. 176) "for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, deceased."

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Interior shall place upon the roll of pensioners the name of Pamela Brown, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, &c.

Mr. KNOX. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill. Perhaps it may not be improper to say, so that the committee may understand it more fully, that the amendment which I propose is, in substance, a bill, which I am told passed the Senate without opposition, and which gives to the widow of the late Major General Brown a larger pension than that reported by the committee, and that which is contained in this bill. I beg the attention of the committee to the facts which are set forth in this report, because, if the committee will listen to it, the case will be fully argued.

Mr. BRIDGES. The gentleman who reported the bill [Mr. Hendricks] is absent. I have had some conversation with him upon the subject, and I believe I stand in the same relation to this bill as the gentleman who offered the amendment. I believe the pension ought to be increased, and I shall be with him upon that question whenever it comes up in committee. But out of courtesy to the gentleman who reported the bill, I was going to ask that the bill be passed over informally until that gentleman's return.

[Cries of "No!" and "Let the amendment be read."]

The amendment was reported, as follows:

Strike out all that part of the bill which relates to the amount of pension, and insert in lieu thereof the following: And to pay her pension at the rate of one half the pay per month to which her said husband was entitled at the time of his death; said pension to commence on the first day of January, 1838, and continue during her natural life.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HESTER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and the motion was agreed to—ayes 62, noes 42.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that a Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and had directed him to report back bills of the following titles, with a recommendation that they do pass:

H. R. No. 63. A bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones;

H. R. No. 99. A bill for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston;

H. R. No. 131. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard;

H. R. No. 173. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Eneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general United States Army;

H. R. No. 174. A bill for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis;

H. R. No. 110. A bill authorizing the payment of the balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812, without amendment;

H. R. No. 107. A bill for the relief of Robert Grignon;

H. R. No. 176. A bill for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, deceased, with amendment; and

A bill of the following title, with the recommendation that it be rejected:

H. R. No. 108. A bill for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased.

NEW YORK STATE TEMPERANCE ALLIANCE.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the table the petition of the New York State Temperance Alliance, praying Congress to give authority to the authorities of the city of Washington to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquor, that it may be referred.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

COINAGE.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 380) "to authorize the coinage of gold pieces of the value respectively of ten eagles and five eagles, and for other purposes," in order that it may be referred.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, read a first and second time by its title; and, on Mr. LATHAM's motion, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would ask the gentleman to withdraw his motion to adjourn, to enable me to make a personal explanation. I assure the gentleman that it will occupy but a short time, and give rise to no difficulty or debate. It is an explanation, however, which I deem it due to myself and to the House to make.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. When my friends asked on yesterday to have the Army bill postponed until I should return to the city, a remark fell from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. Houston,] as reported in the Globe of to day, that is somewhat calculated to involve me in an official delinquency as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. That gentleman is reported to have said, in referring to the Army bill:

"There is no other bill except this which I can take up this morning, and I told the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER] that at the first moment I could do so I should insist on taking up this bill."

Now, I feel it due to myself to state that, before I left this city on Tuesday morning, I took every proper precaution to ascertain if there was any possibility of this Army bill coming up during the two days of my expected absence; and I had several conversations with the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means on the subject, and certainly no impression in all those conversations was left on my mind that the Army bill would be pressed within the time indicated for my absence. But, on the contrary, I left fully under the belief that it would not be pressed for consideration on Wednesday or Thursday. It is true that, on the evening of my departure, the gentleman did make a remark to me to that effect; but it was under circumstances—and I will not detail these circumstances unless required by him—that led me to suppose that it was wholly a jocular remark, and without any serious purpose of doing what he said he meant to do. I will further state, because I wish it understood that I am duly impressed with the responsibilities which devolve upon me in connection with the duties of that committee, that I should have been here yesterday morning, although I had no idea the bill would have been called up so soon, but for a detention of twelve hours caused by an accident to the cars on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

DISTRIBUTION OF JEFFERSON'S WORKS.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up from the Speaker's table Senate resolution (No. 22) "providing for the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson." They are printed, and are deposited in the library, and we are anxious to get clear of them.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was taken up and read a first and second time by its title. It was then read in extenso, and passed.

Mr. CHANDLER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ACCOMMODATION OF THE UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask leave of the House to report a bill which is of very pressing importance. It provides for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia. I will merely state to the House, what is known to the gentlemen representing those cities, that the courts are actually turned out of doors. In the city of Boston it is impossible to hold these courts. The court-house in the city of New York—

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish to know if the gentleman from Tennessee is in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill "to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. COBB. I should like to hear the bill read through. The title of a bill does not always convey what there is in it.

Mr. STANTON. It is a Senate bill reported back with amendments.

Mr. LETCHER. I would like to know if the design is that this bill be now put upon its passage?

Mr. STANTON. That is my object.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I object.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McNAIR. On that motion I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MACE and HESTER were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 22.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at forty minutes past three o'clock) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 14, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

When the Secretary read the following portion of the Journal of yesterday:

"Mr. WELLER presented the petition of John A. Sutter, a citizen of California, praying the confirmation of his title to certain lands held under Mexican grants, and indemnity for losses sustained by him in consequence of the forcible occupation of the land, and seizure of his property"—

Mr. WELLER said: The Secretary, I think, has fallen into error in stating the contents of that paper, which, in justice to General Sutter, ought to be corrected. I understand, from the reading of the Journal, that it represents that he prays for the confirmation of his land title in California. Such is not the fact. He expressly states that he has an abiding confidence in the judgment of the courts there, and has no doubt that the land commissioners will ultimately give him what he is entitled to under the treaty. He asks indemnification for the losses which he has sustained. I move, therefore, to amend the Journal by striking out that portion which represents him as praying for the confirmation of his land title.

The motion was agreed to; and the Journal, as amended, was approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of William G. Donahoe, praying to be allowed an invalid pension, he having been rendered totally blind by sun-stroke while on duty as a sentinel at Fort Leavenworth; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the memorial of A. C. Ramsey and E. H. Carmick, praying for an appropriation for carrying the mails between New Orleans and San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ALLEN presented a memorial of citizens of Rhode Island, praying a repeal of the fugitive slave law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SEWARD presented the report of a Convention appointed by the National Industrial Congress, held at Trenton, New Jersey, censuring the Senate, in consequence of its refusal to act on the homestead bill during the last session; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. MASON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the petition of John P. Brown, principal interpreter of the Turkish language to the United States legation at Constantinople, praying compensation for acting as chargé d'affaires, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported in favor of printing one hundred additional copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the revision of the revenue laws, and accompanying documents. The report was agreed to.

GASTON T. RAOUL.

Mr. SLIDELL. As this is regularly private bill day, I ask the consent of the Senate to take up a bill which I presume will meet with no opposition. It is a "bill for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul," which has been reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize G. T. Raoul to enter, free of cost, six hundred and forty acres of land, according to legal subdivisions, on any of the public lands of the United States subject to entry at private sale; which amount of land, when so entered, shall be in full compensation of claim 456, of the report of James O. Cosby, of June 7, 1853, for which a certificate of confirmation, No. 163, was issued January 24, 1838, by the proper register and receiver in the parish of Livingston, Louisiana.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAIRO A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. SHIELDS. A bill was reported yesterday from the Committee on Commerce, to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery. There is a great deal of railroad iron coming to that place, and it is kept back in consequence of its not being a port of delivery. I wish to call up the bill this morning, and have it passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) I understand that the bill has not yet been returned from the printing office.

Mr. HAMLIN. I reported it yesterday morning.

Mr. SHIELDS. The reason why I wish it passed is, that there is a great deal of iron coming to that place which ought to be landed very soon. It is, therefore, a matter of great interest to have the bill passed as speedily as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will inform the Senator that the bill has not yet been returned from the printer, and cannot be considered.

A. G. PENN.

On the motion of Mr. BENJAMIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, for the relief of A. G. Penn. It proposes to authorize A. G. Penn, of the parish of St. Tammany, Louisiana, to enter, by way of preemption, the southwest quarter of section twenty-three, of township six south, range ten east, in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana, upon his paying therefor to the proper officer one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre, but the act is not to be construed as to interfere with any adverse claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF JEFFERSON'S WORKS.

Mr. PEARCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution, providing for the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson; which was read a first time by its title, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. PEARCE. As this resolution has been matured by the Committee on the Library, it will be unnecessary to make the usual reference to that committee. I ask, therefore, that the Senate will proceed, and act upon it at once.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, in the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson, now being published by the authority of Congress, to distribute them in the following manner:

To the President of the United States, one copy;

To the libraries of the different Departments, and of the Postmaster General, and Attorney General, one copy each;

To each member of the present Senate and House of Representatives, one copy;

To the office of the Secretary of the Senate, five copies;

To the library of the House of Representatives, ten copies;

To the library of Congress, six copies;

To the libraries of the States and Territories of the Union, each one copy;

To the Smithsonian Institution, the Military Academy, and the Naval School at Annapolis, one copy each;

To the Joint Committee on the Library, for the purpose of international exchange, twelve copies; and

To such colleges, literary, and scientific institutions or associations as shall be designated by the present Committee on the Library, three hundred copies.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills:

An act to change the name of the American-built brig Hallowell to that of James Rose, and to grant her a new register;

An act to amend an act approved September 27, 1850, to create the office of surveyor general of the public lands in Oregon, &c., and also the act amendatory thereof, approved February 19, 1853;

An act making further appropriations for continuing the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, in accordance with the estimates made by the War Department; and

An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed a tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the half breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nations of Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore signed the above named bills.

CHARLES STAPLES.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider House bill for the relief of Charles Staples, of the State of Maine.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place his name on the pension rolls at eight dollars a month, from January 1, 1853, to continue during his life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

On motion by Mr. BAYARD, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill "to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury building, and also the construction of a building for the War, Navy, and Interior Departments."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAIRO, ILLINOIS, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. SHIELDS. The bill to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery, is now here. I ask for its consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, accordingly proceeded to consider the bill.

It contains the usual provision for a port of entry, for the appointment of a surveyor of customs, and annexes Cairo to the collection district of New Orleans.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HOOR OF MEETING.

On motion by Mr. RUSK, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him yesterday:

Ordered, That on and after Monday next, the daily hour of meeting of the Senate shall be eleven o'clock, a. m., until otherwise ordered.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to insert "ten" instead of "eleven."

Several SENATORS. Oh, no! let it stand as it is.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I withdraw the amendment.

The resolution was agreed to.

RAILROAD FROM NEW ORLEANS TO MOBILE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill granting to the States of Mississippi, Louisiana, and Alabama, the right of way, and a portion of the public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile, have instructed me to report it back with an amendment. As the time which is left us of this session is now short, I ask for the consideration of the bill.

The Senate accordingly proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move to dispense with the reading of it.

Mr. EVANS. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. CLAY. I would suggest that it is in the usual form of such bills.

Mr. EVANS. Is it only a right of way which you ask?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. It grants the right of way, and a portion of the public lands.

Mr. CLAY. It grants the right of way, and land, which has been conceded to all the other roads.

The Secretary commenced to read the amendment, but was interrupted by Mr. STUART. Certainly it cannot be worth while to spend the time of the Senate in reading it. It is like all the others which have been up before. I suggest that the reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. EVANS. I desired to ascertain whether it was a grant of land, or only a grant of the right of way.

Mr. STUART. I will say to the Senator that it is a grant of land for the construction of a railroad; but if the Senator wishes to have it read further, I shall not object.

Mr. EVANS. I withdraw my request for the reading of it.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, the bill was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in, and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading. It was read a third time, and passed; and the title was amended, so as to read:

A bill granting land in alternate sections to the States of Louisiana, Mississippi, and Alabama, to aid in the construction of a railroad from New Orleans to Mobile.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. STUART. I am anxious, if possible, to-day and to-morrow, to dispose of the homestead bill; and I hope the Senate will now proceed to its consideration, so as to perfect it this week.

Mr. GWIN. I suggest to the Senator to wait until one o'clock. A great deal of morning business could be got through with by that time, and it will not interfere with the bill. I am as anxious as he is to pass it, and I will sit it out to-day and to-morrow.

Mr. STUART. I will say to the Senator, that he and I cannot do much at that business. We have tried it every day; and at half past three o'clock the Senate will adjourn. If the Senate will agree tacitly, that on to-day and to-morrow we shall dispose of this question, certainly I ask nothing else; but I hope we are not to be thrown into the next week with the bill, and thereby come into competition with the appropriation bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his motion?

Mr. STUART. I do not like to do it.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask the Senator to permit me to introduce a resolution, upon which there will be no debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the motion of the Senator from Michigan to be withdrawn?

Mr. STUART. I withdraw it for the purpose of allowing the resolution to be introduced; unanimous consent would permit that to be done without withdrawing the motion.

CHARLESTON AND HAVANA MAILS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the transmission of the mails between Charleston, Havana, and Key West, during the months of August and September, as they are now transmitted during the other months of the year.

CALIFORNIA, OREGON, AND WASHINGTON POSTAL SERVICE.

Mr. GWIN. Now, Mr. President, I ask the Senate to consider the postal bill.

Mr. STUART. I submit a proposition to my friend from California. I will withdraw my motion to allow his bill to be considered, provided it does not give rise to debate, or if it does, then that it shall go over.

Mr. GWIN. I will agree to that. I move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill making provision for the postal service in the State of California, and in the Territories of Oregon and Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, with amendments.

Mr. GWIN. I will state to the Senate, that to all the amendments of the committee, except the two which propose to strike out the two last sections, there is no objection at all. I hope all but those two will be agreed to, and then the committee have agreed to withdraw the amendment proposing to strike out the two last sections, which are important to California, and which, on consultation with the delegation from that State, the committee are in favor of withdrawing. The other amendments we wish acted upon.

Mr. RUSK. The two sections propose to give the discretion to the Postmaster General to allow, out of the proceeds of the offices in California, a sufficient amount to pay the annual expenses of the offices. Upon reflection, we think that it is, perhaps, better to give the discretion to the Postmaster General. As a matter of course, Congress could not be well informed of what the actual expenses of the offices in California were, we are so far from there. Perhaps it will be better to trust the discretion to the Postmaster General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator modify the amendment?

Mr. RUSK. I cannot do so without the consent of the whole committee. The plan will be to take a vote, and reject the last one.

The first amendment of the committee was to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five," in the following proviso, contained in the first section:

Provided, That not more than fifty cents shall be charged for any letter, newspaper, or ounce of other mailable matter.

The next amendment of the committee was to add to the first section the following:

Provided, That no letter or letters, or other mailable matter, shall be delivered by any postmaster to said carrier, unless requested, in writing, by the person or persons to whom said letter or other mailable matter may be directed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was to strike out the following sections:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That in consideration of the duties to be performed under the third section of this act, and of all other special duties performed and to be performed under the orders of the Postmaster General, the Postmaster General may increase the annual compensation of the postmaster of San Francisco from commissions, allowances, and emoluments, from the 30th of June, 1853, to a sum not exceeding double the compensation now allowed by law: Provided, That the surplus of commissions, allowances, and emoluments, accruing at his office, shall be paid over as required by the forty-first section of the act entitled "An act to reduce into one the several acts establishing and regulating the Post Office Department," approved March 3, 1835: Provided further, That the Postmaster General may allow to the postmasters in said State and Territories, from the 1st day of July, 1853, such sums out of the postages collected at their respective offices as will, in addition to the commissions, allowances, and emoluments, be sufficient to defray the actual and necessary expenses of their offices.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, in the settlement of the accounts of postmasters in the State of California and Territory of Oregon, serving as such previous to the 30th of June, Anno Domini 1853, to allow to such postmasters all just and reasonable expenses incurred by them in and about the business of their respective offices and the discharge of their official duties: Provided, That no allowance shall be made whereby the United States shall be charged with any indebtedness whatsoever.

Mr. RUSK. I am authorized by the committee to withdraw those amendments.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed. The bill was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That two additional members to the Committee on Enrolled Bills be appointed by the Chair.

RAILROADS IN MISSOURI.

On motion by Mr. GEYER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill to aid in the construction of certain railroads in the State of Missouri by a grant of a portion of the public lands; which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SLAVERY IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. CHASE. Some days since I gave notice of my intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to prohibit slavery in the Territories. I now present the bill, and ask that leave.

Leave was granted, and the bill was read a first time by its title.

Mr. CHASE. The bill which I have just introduced is very brief. It enacts that there shall be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, otherwise than in the punishment of crime, in any Territory of the United States. Its words of prohibition are those proposed by Jefferson in 1784. Their scope is the same. In 1784 Jefferson proposed to prohibit slavery in all the territory of the United States. This bill proposes the same prohibition. The prohibition of Jefferson was incorporated in the ordinance of 1787, and thus became a law throughout the whole territory then subject to Federal legislation. It was renewed in the act for the admission of Missouri, and applied to the vast region west of the Mississippi, north of 36° 30'. At this session this ancient policy of prohibition has been reversed, by the repeal of the eighth section of the Missouri act. The Kansas and Nebraska act substitutes the policy of slavery allowance for the policy of slavery prohibition.

I have no wish to renew the discussion of this great question at this time. I merely wish to give notice, by the introduction of this bill, that the legislation which repeals the Missouri prohibition, and reverses the policy of Jefferson, is not acquiesced in, and that there is a settled purpose in the country to reinstate the prohibition, and extend it over all national territory.

I do not ask that the bill shall be referred; nor do I invoke any action upon it at this session, now nearly expired. The Senate is fresh from the discussion of the subject, and its decision is fixed. At the next session, if I shall then have the honor of a seat here, I propose to submit it to discussion and a vote. In the mean time I invoke the judgment of the people.

Mr. STUART. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order—the homestead bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the Senator from Michigan, I desire to make a motion to lay the bill of the Senator from Ohio on the table.

Mr. CHASE. It is upon the table now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If so, I have nothing to say.

Mr. STUART. I understand the bill submitted by the Senator from Ohio was laid on the table.

Mr. PRATT. No vote was taken on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. WELLER.] The bill has been no question put on laying it on the table.

Mr. STUART. I am willing that the Senator from Tennessee should submit his motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to lay the bill of the Senator from Ohio on the table.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. CHASE. I know it is not, but I rise to a question of order. When a bill is received, it is of course laid on the table. I stated distinctly that I should not ask its reference, and that I should not ask for action on it now. I submit that the bare receipt of the bill takes it on the table, as a matter of course. If the Senator wishes a formal motion for that purpose, there can be no objection in any quarter. That is the very disposition I propose to make of it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I did not hear the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, but I understood the object he had in view; and my purpose in making the motion to lay on the table, was to bring the matter to a test now. I want to know how many Senators on this floor stand with the Senator on the question.

Mr. CHASE. If the Senator desire that, his object can be attained to-morrow. In the ordinary course of business, the bill will come up to-morrow for its second reading, and it can be rejected upon its second reading, if the Senate choose to do it. I do not ask for action upon it at present; but if other gentlemen desire action upon it, I certainly shall not shrink from it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. For one I desire action upon it now. The presentation of a proposition of that sort, to lie over until the next session of Congress, is intended for effect. I desire to know how many Senators upon this floor are willing to agree to the proposition of the Senator from Ohio; and if he will put it in a position in which we can test that question now, I shall be satisfied. He says it has been debated. I have no desire to debate it; but I want a direct vote on it. I want to know how many Senators are in favor of it. I will move to lay it on the table, if the Senator will put it in a position in which I can do so.

Mr. STUART. In the present condition of things, under the rules, the bill of the Senator from Ohio cannot be subject to any such motion. It cannot be read a second time to-day, and until it be read a second time, no such motion is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent, as the Senate has already determined to proceed to the consideration of the special order, which is the homestead bill.

Mr. STUART. Let us go on with that.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise for the purpose of making what may be, perhaps, a personal explanation. I learn that the bill of the Senator from Ohio may perhaps come up to-morrow, and as I shall be absent then, I desire it to be understood that if I were here, I should vote for the bill of the Senator from Ohio.

POST OFFICE AND LIGHT-HOUSE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year, ending the 30th of June, 1855; and a bill making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. STUART, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers."

Mr. CLAYTON had moved to amend by striking out the sixth section, which is in the following words:

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a resident of the United States, but at the time of making such acquisition for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States."

Pending this motion, Mr. CHASE moved to amend the section by striking out the words "now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and," and inserting the word "who" between the words "but" and "at;" and this is the pending question.

Mr. STUART. I wish to say a few words before the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is voted upon. It is a proposition to vary the restriction of the bill as to persons, so as to allow any foreigner coming in hereafter, to avail himself of the privileges of this act. That is the substance of the amendment. I shall vote against it, although in the abstract I am not opposed to that proposition. I shall also vote against the proposition of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. CLAYTON.] If those propositions shall be rejected, I will submit to the Senate, if no other Senator does it, this provision, in respect to the qualifications of persons who shall avail themselves of this law; that they shall be, in the States, persons who are entitled in the particular States to hold land.

The effect of that will be to leave it in the power of any and every State in the Union to prescribe, by its own laws, who shall be entitled to avail themselves of this homestead provision; so that, if in Alabama they do not choose to have foreigners, they can exclude them under this law. In Michigan we desire them. We have a great many of them. We have a large colony of Hollanders, we have Germans, we have Irishmen; and they are as good citizens as we have in the State.

At all events, without taking time to discuss this matter, I will simply say that that proposition will leave the question of State-rights perfect. Every State can then determine for itself, who shall be holders of real estate within its borders under this bill. They cannot under other provisions of the existing laws, because any man, as I said before, can enter lands at ten shillings an acre, and any man can take lands by pre-emption. But if there is any such particular danger as some Senators suppose may arise under this provision of the homestead bill, they can provide against it under the proposition which I have said I intend to submit.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, there are certainly arguments which commend the proposition which the Senator from Michigan has intimated his intention to submit to the Senate very strongly to favor; but it is by no means certain that we shall ever reach that proposition. I presume that the friends of the homestead bill desire to pass it with as little amendment as practicable; and, hereafter, if future circumstances shall require a modification of this legislation, it will be quite in the power of Congress to adopt such suggestions as have been made by the Senate.

The present question, and the only present question is, whether there is any reasonable ground for discrimination between those who arrive hereafter, and those who arrived yesterday or may arrive to-day. Senators, generally, upon both sides of the general question, seem to concede that there is no ground for this discrimination. The Senator from Michigan says that he is in favor of the principle of the amendment which I have submitted. I knew he could not be otherwise consistently with that regard for right and justice which characterizes that Senator; but if he is in favor of it in the abstract, I hope his vote now will manifest that he is in favor of it also in the concrete, as a practical, and not as an abstract question.

Mr. WALKER. The bill before us is a House bill, and until some breach shall be made upon its present form, I shall vote against all amendments. If, however, the Senate shall determine to change the form of the bill, I shall then have some amendments to offer myself; but until I see such a disposition indicated by the Senate, I will vote against all amendments, however I may feel upon the principle of those amendments.

Mr. CLAY. Yesterday I stated that I concurred fully in the view of the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] that the bill in its present form was calculated to produce a great many frauds and perjuries, and that you would, by the practical working of the measure, admit all who might come hereafter to the benefits of this act, at all events; and hence I announced that I should vote with him for the amendment. But on subsequent reflection I have concluded, that inasmuch as I shall vote against the section, if it be amended as proposed, or if it be not amended, I will vote against the pending amendment. I will not help to amend the section at all. I think it is a folly to be patching a garment that I will not wear and mean to throw away.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the amendment of Mr. Chase, resulted—yeas 13, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Brodhead, Chase, Douglas, Fessenden, Foot, Gillette, Norris, Seward, Shields, Sumner, Wade, and Weller—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Toucey, Walker, and Williams—36.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is now on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. DIXON,] to strike out the word "individual," in the sixth section, and insert, in lieu thereof, the words "free white person." This amendment being to perfect the section, the question must be taken on it, before taking the vote on striking out the whole section.

Mr. DIXON. The object of the amendment is simply to confine the operation of the law to white persons. As it now stands, I suppose free negroes would have a right to the benefit of the sixth section.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the Senator whether there are any white persons in this country who are not "free?" I ask this because he uses the term "free white persons."

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator will examine the first section of the bill, he will find that it is confined exclusively to free white persons, while the sixth section is for the benefit of "individuals," without specifying the color. I think, for this reason, it is necessary to adopt the amendment.

Mr. CLAY called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. WALKER. I hope that so immaterial an amendment or change of the bill as this is, will not be made. It is very certain, that under the bill as it now stands, it cannot have the operation which the Senator from Kentucky seems to apprehend; for the bill, in the first and operative section, confines the benefit of it to free white citizens of the United States. In the subsequent section, which he proposes to amend, the word "individuals" is used, and would evidently seem to relate to the first section, but if it did not, what foreigner is there who can come to this country and become a citizen, who is not, in common parlance and understanding, deemed a white man? Certainly, negroes cannot be such. I hope, therefore, that a change so immaterial as this will not be made. I trust the bill will not be sent back to the House of Representatives on such a trivial ground.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, if the Senator will examine the first section of the bill, he will see that it uses the phrase "free white persons." I suppose the object of using that phrase was to exclude persons who are not white. I do not myself understand that the Senator from Wisconsin, who reported this bill, could have had any other object in view, in adopting the phraseology "free white person," than to exclude persons who are not white.

Now, sir, the first section of the bill is confined entirely to citizens of the United States. The sixth section is intended to embrace persons who are not citizens of the United States, but who are residents of a Territory or a State. Does not the Senator see at once that the operation of the bill will be that if you bring into this country foreigners who are black, and if they become residents of a Territory or a State, they will be embraced within the sixth section of the bill which is before the Senate? You may, it is true, exclude black persons who are now living in the United States, who are not foreigners; but persons who are foreigners, and are black, are clearly embraced by the language of the sixth section of the bill, which is that any "individual now a resident of one of the States or Territories," shall be entitled to the benefits of the act upon complying with certain conditions. It is perfectly manifest to my mind that black persons are embraced by this language; but if the Senator does not mean to embrace them, why not adopt the amendment? If it be adopted, there can no longer be any ambiguity about it.

Mr. CLAY. I concur fully with the Senator from Kentucky in his construction of the act, and in further corroboration of it, I will mention that the next section uses the word "individuals;" so that it would seem to my reading that the purpose of it was to provide for two classes: First, citizens of the United States, who are free white people, and secondly, foreigners who may be resident in the country, or who may come here before the passage of the act, and who may not be free white persons. Now, in the State of California, as I understand, there is a large number of persons who, as I suppose, would not be called white people—I mean the Chinese. But, under the provisions of this bill, I presume they would each be entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land. I do not wish to have any misunderstanding or difficulty about the interpretation of the bill. Let us make it plain, and intelligible, and susceptible of but one construction. I shall vote for the amendment.

Mr. STUART. I submit to the consideration of the honorable Senator from Alabama, whether any such person as one to whom he alludes, can, under the laws of the United States, become a citizen? I understand that, under the laws of the United States, none but white persons can become citizens of the country. If that be true, then no man, other than such a one, can avail himself of the provisions of this law.

Negroes cannot become citizens. They may be entitled to hold lands in a particular State; they may be entitled to vote in that State; but they cannot be entitled to citizenship in the United States, according to the laws of the United States. The bill, as it stands, provides expressly, that the person, to make his entry of land available, must, within the five years, become a citizen of the United States. Where, then, is the necessity of any such amendment?

Mr. CLAY. It is just this, if the honorable Senator will allow me to interrupt him: It is true he cannot obtain a patent for the land until he become a citizen; but then he can obtain the use and the occupation of it for an indefinite period of time under the bill.

Mr. STUART. Not at all, because he must be a person who can declare his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and must have the capacity, in time, to become a citizen.

But, sir, as I have said to the Senate before, if I am mistaken in this construction of the bill in respect to the time of occupancy, I shall be willing to amend it to limit it to five years' occupancy, and provide expressly that the right of occupancy shall terminate at the end of five years, unless the occupant was a person who could become, and would take the necessary means to become, a citizen of the United States. The objection now urged is certainly far-fetched. It is supposing an extreme possibility that cannot happen in practice; and I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin, that we should not be called upon to amend this bill in a manner so entirely trivial, as it seems to me this is.

If it were a substantial objection I would consent to yield to it; but I really do not see any difficulty to arise out of leaving the provision as it is.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is certainly some importance in this amendment. Though the right to obtain a title to these lands from the United States by patent, must depend upon the fact of a party becoming a citizen, yet the right to enter upon the lands, to occupy them, and reside there as a settler, is dependent simply on the fact that the individual, in the language of the bill, declares his intention to become a citizen. Now, sir, under the naturalization laws of the United States, the declaration of intention may be made either in a State court or in a Federal court. If the declaration of intention to become a citizen be made in a State court, and that court chooses to receive it, the public officer cannot look behind the declaration of intention, as to the question whether the State court had a right to take that declaration or not. Therefore, I think it is necessary that this restriction should be imposed, unless you mean to admit that the negro population of the United States shall become settlers upon the public lands. Especially do I think it necessary, when I see many of the prevalent opinions of some parts of this Union. In many parts it is contended that negroes are citizens. In such a case a State court would not hesitate a moment to admit the declaration; and certainly the receiver or other land officer taking the entry, will have no judicial authority to look behind the declaration. If the declaration be presented by a party, and his identity be ascertained, he will have a right to settle upon the lands under this bill. I submit that the amendment is essential.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to ask my friends from Kentucky and Alabama one question. I would vote for the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, if I were not perfectly satisfied that the whole question was covered by the sixth section itself. If I understand it, it provides that it shall apply only to a free white man. It requires that the foreigner, to avail himself of its benefit, "shall have filed a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States." Does the Senator from Kentucky admit that the naturalization laws apply to a man of color? Again, it is provided that he "shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent." Now, does the Senator admit that a negro, under any contingency whatever, can become a citizen of the United States? If he admits that, then his amendment is a good one; but I deny that a negro can ever become a citizen of the United States, under the Constitution and the laws of the land. If he cannot become a citizen, the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is of no sort of importance. If Senators admit that negroes can become citizens, they admit that Fred. Douglass may take his place in the Congress of the United States, if he should be elected—a proposition against which I enter my solemn protest. They are not citizens in the contemplation of the Constitution, and can never become citizens. If they cannot, the law is perfect and complete, as it is in the sixth section.

Mr. GEYER. Mr. President, I am friendly to the provisions of this bill so far as they contemplate grants of land to citizens of the United States, native and naturalized, but I am against the provision which proposes to make grants to aliens, and I am especially opposed to the sixth section, because, in my apprehension, by possibility a negro might make a declaration of intention to become a citizen, obtain a certificate, which would admit of his making entry upon the public lands, and afterwards obtaining a title to them, if he resided there during the period required by the bill. But I wish, before I proceed any further, to put one interrogatory to the friends of this section, and it is, why was a discrimination made between the first and the sixth section? Why was the word "white" inserted in the first section, which applies to citizens of the United States, and that word omitted in the sixth section, which applies to aliens?

Mr. STUART. If the Senator will allow me, I will answer that question. I will give him the reason, as the history of the bill shows it. When the bill was matured in the Committee of the House of Representatives, those words were not in the first section, but a motion was made at a later stage of the bill to insert the words in that particular place, and it was done. The bill, originally, did not intend to make the discrimination at all, because it was not deemed necessary to make it.

Mr. GEYER. That explanation, I take it, is merely informing us that the friends of this bill intended to make no discrimination whatever between black and white. They amended the first section by inserting the words "free white," and did not amend the sixth section by inserting the same words. That is what I understand by the explanation of the honorable Senator from Michigan. It explains how, but not why, the discrimination was made.

Now, sir, if it is designed that none but white persons shall obtain a title to land under the sixth section, why should objection be made to inserting the very words which the laws of the United States authorizing naturalization contain? By those laws none but a "free white person" can obtain a certificate of naturalization. If a person, in order to obtain the benefit of the sixth section by a patent, must necessarily be a white person, why omit the word "white"? Why not put it in, so as to place it beyond all question, that colored persons are not intended to be comprehended by it?

But, sir, are we certain that, even as the naturalization laws stand, negroes may not obtain the benefits of this section? I refer not to negroes born in this country, who are claimed to be citizens of the United States in some portion of the Union, but to those who come from abroad.

In the first place, what is to prevent an alien negro coming into the United States, (or a negro whether he be an alien or not,) and going into one of your State courts, and making a declaration of intention to become a citizen? Who shall prevent it? He goes to the clerk of the court and obtains his certificate. Clerks are to be found everywhere who will grant a certificate for a fee. When he has thus made his declaration, he enters upon the land, and cannot be expelled from it for five years. Nor, sir, can he, as I will show presently, be turned out of the possession of the land at any time, because, in order to occupy it, he is not under the necessity of having a certificate of naturalization.

But again, sir, in these times, when we have gentlemen in the public councils, and may have on the bench, who believe in the "higher law doctrine," and who would be ready to seize upon any words, in any act of Congress, to enable them to give an interpretation favorable to their views, what is to prevent them from deciding that this word "individual," standing here in the sixth section, in bold relief against the language of the first section, was intended to abrogate the restriction which confines the naturalization of foreigners to white persons? Who can anticipate what, in these times, would be the consequence of leaving the provision as it is? Are we sure that the judicial officers of the States (and many inferior tribunals have the jurisdiction, and whose power nobody questions, to grant certificates of naturalization) will not grant a certificate to a negro? And when the certificate is granted, who will question it? Can it be questioned by your officers in the land office? No, sir. This section enables a man, upon obtaining a certificate, to get the title to the land, and the validity of the certificate cannot be questioned, if issued by a court of competent jurisdiction.

It seems to me singular that the precedent furnished by the territorial act referred to by the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] has not been followed, and the provisions of the first and sixth sections incorporated in one section. That act provides for a grant of land "to every white male citizen of the United States, and every white male person above the age of twenty-one years, who has declared his intention to become a citizen." This phraseology is unequivocal. Why shall it not be adopted, or language of like import be inserted in this bill? Why persist in leaving its provisions doubtful, and liable to abuse, by a construction rendered plausible, to say the least, by the marked difference in the language employed in the two sections?

But, sir, I have said that the alien need never get a certificate of naturalization at all, and that he cannot be turned out of possession if he does not. By the first section, a citizen cannot, nor can an alien under the sixth section, obtain a patent until the expiration of five years; but he is not obliged to obtain his patent on the day on which the five years expires, nor within the year. If he may postpone it one day, he may postpone it a year, or twenty years. We know, moreover, that there are titles to land emanating from the Government of the United States, where parties have a right to a patent, but often many years elapse before they obtain it. The foreigner has a right to the land rightfully entered under the section, and cannot be disturbed in the possession of it; he cannot be coerced to abjure his allegiance to a foreign Power, and swear allegiance to the United States, until it suits him to do so.

But again, I object to this section, for another reason: Any alien, white or black, be his character good or bad, may make a declaration of intention to become a citizen. The naturalization laws contemplate the grant of citizenship only to men of good moral character, attached to the institutions of this country. And, therefore, the alien must prove by two witnesses that he is a man of good moral character, attached to the institutions of this country, before he can obtain a certificate of naturalization.

We require that an American citizen, in order to obtain the benefits of the act, shall be the head of a family, or twenty-one years of age; and if he is a naturalized citizen, he must have been in the country long enough to give evidence of his attachment to the institutions of our country; he must prove such attachment in a court of justice; he must, on oath, renounce his allegiance to all foreign Powers, and swear to support the Constitution of the United States. It is proposed, however, by the sixth section, to give land to those who have not shown any evidence of a good moral character; who present no proof of attachment to the Constitution or institutions of the country; who renounce no allegiance to any foreign Government; and who may postpone until the end of time swearing allegiance to the Constitution of the United States.

Sir, I have said I was in favor of this bill; and if the sixth and fourth section shall be stricken out I will vote for it with much pleasure; but while I will make no discrimination whatever between the citizens of the United States, natural or naturalized, native or foreign born, I will discriminate between the citizen, naturalized as well as native, against the alien. I will not put the alien upon the same footing with the citizen, native or foreign born. That is the principle on which I act.

I have no apprehension that the bill will be lost in the House of Representatives, if amended. I do not think, however, that it will result in as much good as some gentlemen seem to anticipate. I do not think that it will favor a certain class of individuals, who are looked to with great solicitude—I mean the recruits in the army of occupation, who are to be sent out by the colonization society which has been organized in this city, to Nebraska and Kansas. I do not believe that it is going to reclaim the loafers of the cities, and convert them into honest, industrious farmers. It will diminish somewhat your receipts into the Treasury; but it will accomplish some good, and for that reason I will vote for it, if amended. In the agricultural States, at least, if not in the planting States, or where the public lands lie, there are many farmers occupying small farms, who may be called poor, who, though doing well enough for themselves and their families, are not able to provide homes for their sons, accustomed to agricultural labor on their fathers' farm, who desire to establish themselves, and have not the means to purchase land. They may, under the provisions of this bill, if it becomes a law, establish themselves, and each acquire a title to a quarter section of land in the neighborhood of the parent, it may be; and thus many industrious and worthy citizens may be benefited, not only without loss, but with great advantage to the country. Beyond this, in my judgment, the bill will accomplish very little good.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to have the question settled, whether, under the sixth section, any man, not a white man, can enjoy the benefits of the act. If I thought so, I should vote for the amendment of my friend from Kentucky. But I understood the Senator from Missouri to say it was not clear that, under the naturalization law, a colored man might not become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. GEYER. No, sir. It is clear enough, to my apprehension, that he cannot become a citizen. But what I did say was, that that question would not be inquired into, on making the declaration of intention, and that the discrimination which is made between the language of the first and sixth sections may furnish a judge who is willing to set up a higher law, room to make a construction in favor of the naturalization of negroes.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not suppose that we are proceeding here as legislators, upon any apprehension that any higher law than the Constitution is to become the rule of action for this country. That a man who would outrage the Constitution and laws, might be made a judge, is a possibility; but we are not legislating in view of any such thing. We are legislating according to the facts as they are. Now, I maintain that no colored man can possibly enjoy the benefits of this act; because, before any one who is not a citizen can do so, he has first to file his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and next he has to reside upon the land for five years before a patent can issue. Sir, the very first section of your existing naturalization law is in these words:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any alien, being a free white person, may be admitted to become a citizen of the United States, or any of them, on the following conditions, and not otherwise," &c.

Then it is clear that no man but a white man can become a citizen of the United States under the present naturalization law.

Mr. DIXON. Let the Senator from Tennessee compare the two sections, the one which he has read from the naturalization law, and the sixth section of this bill, and he will see that they are entirely different. It is perfectly true that, as the law now is, none but a free white person who is an alien can become a citizen of the United States; but does the Senator mean or pretend that you may not change the law so as to give the benefits of naturalization to any other persons than those who are embraced in the section which he has read? Why, sir, you can repeal that law; and I say this section is a repeal of it pro tanto, because it embraces persons who are not included in it. That law is confined to free white persons who are aliens. This section is not confined to free white persons who are aliens. That law allows none to become naturalized who are not white. This section extends the benefits to other persons, whether they be white or not. It is therefore a virtual repeal of the law which the gentleman has read. It is inconsistent with that law, and to the extent of such inconsistency repeals it. The whole wording of it shows its effect to be at war with the very principles upon which the whole naturalization system of this country has heretofore been carried out.

It is very true that the naturalization laws require an alien to make a declaration of intention, and to take an oath before he can become entitled to naturalization, and allows none to become naturalized who are not white; but this section embraces all persons who are residents of a State or Territory, whether they be black or whether they be white; and the only thing it is necessary for them to do under it, is to take the oath and make the declaration, to entitle them at once to enter upon the land. What signifies it if the act which the Senator has read embraces only free white persons, as he says it does? I admit it relates only to free white persons; but, sir, the effect of this section is to bring negroes within the provisions of that act, and to extend to them all the advantages and benefits of naturalization which have heretofore been extended to the white man alone. It not only does this, but it goes further. It takes in all the Indians at home and abroad. It takes in the Chinese, the coolies, and every description of individual, from the Anglo-Saxon down to the Hottentot. It takes in every person on the face of the earth who may think proper to come here and become a resident of a Territory or a State, and then swear, as the naturalization laws of the country require him to swear, that he intends to become a citizen. When he does this he may enter upon the land at once.

But, sir, I have said that the provisions of this section are in direct conflict with the act of Congress authorizing the naturalization of foreigners. That act embraces only white persons, and this section takes in all individuals. Its language is any individual "now a resident of any of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act shall have filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen," &c. The word individual, is a general term, and embraces every person, both white and black. And every person, both white and black, not being a citizen of the United States, may (if the officer before whom he proposes to file his declaration will allow him) file such a declaration; and surely every Abolitionist who may happen to be an officer will allow him to file it, and not only to file it, but to take the final oath of naturalization. And will the Senator from Tennessee say that, after having filed it, he may not enter the one hundred and sixty acres of land under the provisions of this bill? Who is to judge of his right to do so. The Register of the Land Office has no right to inquire into, and decide the question, of whether he can or cannot be naturalized, under the laws of the United States, but only whether he has filed a declaration of an intention to do so, according to the naturalization laws of Congress. The right to file the declaration of an intention is one thing, and the filing it, according to the laws, is another thing. Under the naturalization laws, as they now exist, none but white persons have the right to file such declaration; but this section gives the right to file such declaration to any individual, provided he is not a citizen, resides in a Territory or State, be his color what it may. I do not say he may become a citizen; for I will never admit that a negro ought to become a citizen; but I say he may file his declaration to become one, because the only limitations upon his right to do so is, that he is not a citizen, and lives in a Territory or State. Well, sir, if he files his declaration of intention, what then? May he not enter the land, may he not take possession of and settle upon it, cultivate and use it, and have all the advantages of the exclusive occupancy of it; and if he dies, may he not, according to the second section of the bill, devise it to whom he pleases; for that section gives him the right to devise it; and if he dies without having made a last will and testament, it gives it to his widow, or, in case of her death, his heirs.

Sir, I ask the Senator if he would give these lands to coolies, to Algerines, to Indians, and to all the other people of the earth, however uncivilized they may be, or of whatever color they may be; would he give them the right, merely because they reside in a State or Territory, to file a declaration of an intention to become a citizen, and thereby to possess themselves of a hundred and sixty acres of land, and, in case of death, to devise it to foreigners like themselves, or to transmit it, by descent, to their widows or heirs, whether they be citizens or not? And this, sir, must and will be the effect of this section of the bill, when taken in connection with the second section, unless the amendment I propose is adopted. I am willing to put the naturalized citizen, in all respects, upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen, so far as it regards every right to be acquired under the provisions of this bill. But I never will consent that persons who are not embraced in the provisions of the naturalization laws, as they now exist, shall be included in the provisions of this bill—to the extent either of becoming naturalized, or of acquiring the exclusive right to enjoy and occupy the lands belonging to the people of the United States, and then of devising them, or transmitting them to their heirs.

I will say to the Senator, there is another reason which he has entirely overlooked in his comments on the section which is proposed to be amended. If he will look at the first and second sections of the bill, he will find that it is provided that every free white person complying with the provisions of the bill, who has entered upon the land and taken the final oath, shall obtain a patent at a certain time. The Senator will not say that the sixth section of the bill, as it now stands, does not extend to negroes, Indians, and all other individuals the benefits of the first and second sections of the bill, provided they file their declaration and become naturalized. He will not say that an Abolitionist (one who claims the equality of the negro with the white man) will refuse to let him file his declaration, or to take the final oath of naturalization; it may be that the oath would be void, and the right of citizenship not conferred; but it may be otherwise; and I am not disposed to concede anything to the abolition spirit of the age. I would rather leave nothing to doubt or construction, but "would make assurance doubly sure, and take a bond of fate."

It is true he cannot obtain a patent until he becomes a naturalized citizen; and it may be that he never can become naturalized; but still he can, if this section is not amended, file his declaration of intention, which at once entitles him to enter upon the land to the exclusion of all others. Why, sir, he may file a declaration of intention to become naturalized, and yet not be able, under the laws, ever to become a citizen; but if he files his declaration to do so, he has complied with the provision of this bill, to the extent of acquiring a right to enter the land. The sixth section, as I before said, allows any man to do so; for the expression is, "any individual now a resident of any one of the States and Territories, and not a citizen of the United States." Does the Senator mean to say that a negro is not an individual? Does he mean to say that an Indian, or anybody else, would not be embraced in the word "individual"? Sir, it embraces everybody. And why, I would ask, is the operation of the first section confined exclusively to free white persons? Why is it said "all free white persons" in the first section, and "any individual" in the sixth? There must be some reason for this. The Senator from Michigan says that when this question was first before the Committee on Public Lands, the first section of the bill did not contain the expression "free white persons." I will ask the Senator what is the reason it did not, and why it was afterwards amended so as to make it embrace free white persons?

Mr. STUART. I will answer the Senator. It was because the committee of the House, and, as I understand, at least nine out of ten of its members, thought that no person other than a free white person had any rights under the bill. I know that I myself had a long conversation with the former member from Tennessee, who is now Governor of that State, [Mr. Andrew Johnson,] who had charge of this bill in the House, at the last Congress, at which that question was fully considered, and we came to the conclusion that there was no sort of necessity for the qualification, because none other than white persons could become citizens of the United States.

Mr. DIXON. Why, then, may I ask the Senator, did they insert the words "free white persons" in the first section?

Mr. STUART. It was done with the intention of destroying the bill. The motion was made under the belief that if those words were put in, there were men enough in the House, of peculiar notions, who would vote against the bill and kill it.

Mr. DIXON. I do not consider that a sufficient response to the question. The Senator says those words were inserted to destroy the bill.

Why, sir, it is perfectly evident that if the object was to destroy the bill, they would have left out the word "white," because it must have been known that there was a large majority of the Senate, decidedly against extending the privilege to negroes; and therefore, by inserting the words "free white," strength would have been given to the bill. I say to Senators here, who are not in favor of extending such rights to negroes, that they had better beware of this sixth section. Why, sir, a declaration of intention may be filed in any of the State courts, and I ask the Senator from Tennessee this question: Suppose a negro goes into one of the courts of Massachusetts, or any of those States which declare that negroes may be citizens, and proposes to file his declaration of intention to become naturalized, does he suppose a judge there will hesitate to allow him to do so; and having done so, what is there to prevent his entering the land, according to the provisions of this section?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The Senator from Kentucky asks me a question which it will give me very great pleasure to answer. He wishes to know whether I suppose that a judge in Massachusetts, if a negro should come before him and propose to file his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, would decline to receive it? I answer, that I do suppose he would; or if he did not, I would prove by the law that he was a perjured villain. If the Senator will allow me further, I will say that I think I can show him that it is impossible such a thing as he supposes can happen. He asks the question: What is there to prevent a man of color from filing his declaration, and getting his letters of naturalization? I answer, that the law passed by the Congress of the United States prevents it. The very first provision in the law declares that the incipient step, which is the filing of the declaration of intention, shall be by a free white man. It is impossible, therefore, that a colored man can even file his declaration, because the law declares that the persons who are to be entitled to the benefits of the incipient step of naturalization shall be free white men. Then it is impossible that a colored man, as I have said, can ever file a declaration of intention; and if he cannot file a declaration of intention, I ask the Senator how can he enter upon the public lands under this bill?

Mr. DIXON. I answer the Senator by saying that he himself, in the philippic pronounced by him a few days since against some members of this body, who believe in the higher law doctrine, boldly assumed that there were some persons in this Senate, and some out of the Senate, who wholly disregarded the requirements of the Constitution, and did not feel themselves bound by the oaths they had taken to support it. He was foremost in the declaration that these were the opinions entertained by some Senators on this floor, and by persons outside of the Senate Chamber; but now, sir, the Senator, with that earnestness which only belongs to one who feels what he says, states that this would not be done. Now, if they would do what the Senator but a few days ago said they would do, may they not do it in this case? May they not contend, that though the act he has read includes only free white persons, that this sixth section embraces negroes also? The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. SUMNER,] proclaimed here that he did not feel himself bound by the solemn obligation of an oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. SUMNER. I call the Senator to order. I know he does not intend to misrepresent me.

Mr. DIXON. Surely not.

Mr. SUMNER. I made no such declaration. I did not say that I did not feel myself bound by the obligation of an oath to support the Constitution. I said that my oath to support it was not as the Senator from Kentucky understands it, but as I understand it.

Mr. DIXON. That is precisely the way I understood the Senator.

The Senator takes the ground, as he did on a former occasion, that he has taken an oath to support the Constitution, not as the Senator from Kentucky understands it, or the Supreme Court understands it, but as the Senator from Massachusetts understands it; and he attempted to fortify himself behind the opinion of that eminent and distinguished man, Andrew Jackson, to show that he had the right to do so.

Mr. SUMNER. As the Senator refers to the opinion of Andrew Jackson, I am glad of the opportunity to state that another eminent statesman of this country, a rival of Andrew Jackson, and one that I believe he will admit is not inferior to him in fame or character, John Quincy Adams, declared his entire acceptance of that rule of interpretation. Therefore that rule stands not on its intrinsic reason alone, but on the authority of two Presidents of the United States—Andrew Jackson and John Quincy Adams.

Mr. DIXON. I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts has done justice, either to the distinguished ex-President, to whom he alludes, from Massachusetts, or to the distinguished ex-President from Tennessee. Neither of them ever contended that, as citizens, they were not bound to obey the laws as they were, or that they had the right to place their own construction of them or of the Constitution in opposition to that given by the judicial tribunals of the country. As legislators and chief magistrates of the United States, they claimed, as they had the right to do, in making laws, to judge for themselves of the constitutional power to make them. But, did they, or either of them, ever maintain that, as citizens, they were not bound to obey a law passed by Congress, so long as it remained in force, notwithstanding their opinions, as citizens, might have been against its constitutionality? I defy the Senator to show that they ever maintained any opinion so absurd and treasonable. The Senator claims the right, as a citizen, as well as legislator, to construe the laws and Constitution as he understands them; and, understanding the fugitive slave law to be unconstitutional, he is under no obligations to obey it. Let me tell the Senator from Massachusetts that the exercise of such a right as this, would justify every act of crime that can be committed against the laws of the country; and all that the thief, the robber, the murderer, and the traitor would have to do to screen himself from the penalties of the law, would be to say that, according to his construction of it, he had done nothing more than he had a right to do.

And let me say further to the Senator, that those who think with him, that they have the right as citizens to construe the laws as they find, and not as the courts, understand them—will find the claim of such right, a poor plea in bar, should they be arraigned for a criminal violation of them. And I will say further that the exercise on the part of a citizen of such a right, would result in the subversion of all law, and of all order, in the breaking down of all the ramparts afforded by the Constitution and laws, for the protection of the rights of the citizen, and finally in the overthrow of the Government itself.

And now, sir, I wish to say to my friend from Tennessee, that, understanding as he does the claim set up by the Senator from Massachusetts, to construe the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Congress as he and those who agree with him as to the right, understand them, is at once to leave the construction of the naturalization laws entirely to their understanding, and to be obeyed or not as they may understand them. Can the honorable Senator from Tennessee doubt that, in connection with this sixth section, they would so construe them as to give all the benefits of this act to every description of persons, whether black or white, and to administer to them the final oath of naturalization.

And again, sir, when, as was justly remarked by the honorable Senator from Missouri, [Mr. GERRARD,] we have gentlemen in the public councils, and may have them on the bench, in every State in which the lands contemplated by this bill lie, who believe not only in the higher law doctrine, but in the right of negroes to citizenship; and who would be ready to seize upon any words in any act of Congress to enable them to give an interpretation favorable to their views, what is to prevent them from deciding that this word "individual," standing here in the sixth section in bold relief, against the language of the first section, was intended to abrogate the restriction which confines the naturalization of foreigners to white persons?

Now, sir, taking this view of the case, I would ask my honorable friend from Tennessee if it ever occurred to him that the validity of the title acquired by a negro to land, under the provisions of this bill, as well as of his right to citizenship, may not be the subjects of adjudication by the courts of the States in which the land may happen to lie; and that if the right of the negro to the land, under this act, depends upon his right to citizenship, a court believing in the doctrine of the higher law power, as well as of the equality of negroes with white men, will not only decide in favor of the legality of such title, but also of the right of the negro to citizenship. If the honorable Senator would not make citizens of negroes, or enable others to do so, and thereby concede to the Abolitionists a right which they have contended for so long, and so zealously, and which has been resisted with so much firmness by those who would keep up a distinction between the white and black races, it would be well for him to vote for the amendment. Senators opposed to slavery contend that the amendment is unnecessary, and that the object intended to be attained by it is accomplished without it; but this, as I said before, may or may not be, but of one thing I am certain, that in caution there is safety, and that it is unwise to trust those whom you know to be your enemies, and who are "armed to do you to death."

Mr. STUART. The Senator will pardon me for interrupting him. I am very anxious to save time upon this bill as far as we can; and I believe I may say that the friends of the measure will consent to the modification which he proposes, though the section means without it what it will do with it.

Mr. DIXON. I want no controversy about it; but I wish to say to the Senator, that I do not believe it means without it what it will with it, and believing that it does not, I shall vote against the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered upon the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not think that the argument of the Senator from Tennessee answers the objection made to this section, as it stands, without the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. The right to become a citizen of the United States is prescribed in the naturalization laws, and is given only to white persons, but a general declaration of intention may be made by a party who will never become entitled to become a citizen, who may not comply with the subsequent requisitions, who may become incapacitated by some subsequent event from carrying out his declaration of intention. Well, now, by a declaration of intention a person does not renounce his allegiance, because the renunciation of allegiance is only made when he is admitted to be a citizen. The declaration of intention may be made before any clerk of a State court in this country. Under this law, as it stands, as I read it, if any individual—

Mr. STUART. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the friends of the bill will agree to the amendment.

Mr. BAYARD. If that is the case, I will not detain the Senate longer.

Mr. CHASE. I shall vote against the amendment, in the first place, because I regard it as nugatory. It has been demonstrated upon this floor that the change proposed will effect nothing at all. The naturalization law, as it now stands, confines the right of naturalization to free white persons. Upon that policy, at this time, I express no opinion; but the law as it stands is explicit. I shall vote against the amendment, in the second place, because if the law were otherwise, and the amendment could have any practical effect it would be inhuman and unjust. There is hardly a State in this Union in which colored persons are not permitted to hold lands. To extend to them the full benefits of this bill would only recognize in them that capacity to hold real estate, which is secured to them by the laws of North Carolina and of Virginia, just as much as by the laws of Ohio and Massachusetts. I shall therefore vote against the amendment, in the first place, because it is nugatory, and in the second place, because it is inhuman and unjust; and I doubt whether the friends of the bill will promote its chances by agreeing to it.

Mr. CASS. I think myself it is a great deal better to agree to the amendment. The bill wants support; it wants aid; and here are gentlemen who, unless the amendment prevails, will vote against it. Now, Mr. President, the first section of the bill confines its provisions to free white persons. The provision that operates upon every person born in the United States, operates upon white persons only. No colored person born in the United States can take advantage of it. Should we extend to foreigners a greater privilege than to our own citizens? I am very clear, in my mind, that the provision is unnecessary. I believe myself that the latter clause excludes every person who is not white; that a colored person cannot, as has been justly contended, take advantage of the naturalization laws, and therefore cannot take advantage of this law. It has been said that he can file a declaration of intention. I say a declaration is a void act if the person has no right to become naturalized. It is perfectly void; it gives no right; it is a mere piece of waste paper. But I repeat, we all agree that the two provisions should be the same. Some of us contend that they are so; others say they are not; but I believe every man on the floor contends they should be. That being the case, and doubts being raised by some gentlemen, I am willing to vote for the amendment and remove the doubts; and I am the more willing to do so, because I do not want to lose a single vote to the bill.

Mr. MALLORY. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] objects to the amendment upon two grounds. The first is, that it would be nugatory; the second is, that it would be eminently unjust. It would be unjust, as he intimates, because it is unjust to deprive negroes of holding property in the Territories. Does he mean to say that the clause, as it stands, will permit them to come in under the bill? Is that what he means?

Mr. CHASE. I said that the amendment, in my opinion, was nugatory, and in that respect the honorable Senator correctly represents me. I said that if it was effective, it would be unjust; that is to say, if it were to accomplish this object—if the present bill did allow colored persons to participate in the benefits of the enactment, and the amendment should exclude them—that operation of it would be unjust. I do not say that it has that operation; on the contrary, I said quite the reverse.

Mr. MALLORY. It strikes me that it is eminently proper to insert the provision here, as it is in the first clause of the bill. The States, by their own legislation, have determined what are the disqualifications of colored persons. There are certainly many classes of colored blood who do become naturalized citizens of the United States. We witness every day in the courts, that persons with negro blood in their veins have become citizens. If the objection be made in southern States to their coming into the witness box, or to obtaining other privileges, that they are colored persons, they are set aside. In such a case, when it should be discovered that they were improperly naturalized, under this clause of the bill they would, notwithstanding, hold a patent to the lands, although they might not be citizens of the United States in the courts for any other purpose.

Mr. CLAYTON. Although I have a fixed and settled opinion upon this question, as to whether a black, or any other than a white person, can become a citizen of the United States, yet as by many it is regarded as an exceedingly interesting question, I desire to make a remark. I remember, sir, very well, that in the year 1849, applications were made to the Department of State for passports for other than white persons. I refused them, on the ground that a passport contains a certificate that the person who receives it is a citizen of the United States; and as I did not concur in the opinion that any but a white person could be a citizen of the United States, I declined giving the passports. But, sir, I found immediately that I was assailed by a great portion of the northern press, and by many respectable persons at the North, who seemed to think that the point was not correctly settled at the Department. I have never changed my opinion upon the subject; but that opinion to which I refer, that colored persons can become citizens of the United States, and are citizens of the United States, is entertained by a very respectable and considerable portion of the people of the northern States. A provision in the Constitution of the United States declares that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." If, then, it was argued a colored man could be a citizen of Massachusetts, he is a citizen of the United States; and so they held he was entitled to a passport. My opinion is now as I said it was in 1849; but the very fact that such a question was raised then, and that the Department was extensively assailed upon that ground, shows the necessity and importance of the amendment proposed. If there be any doubt at all upon this subject, it is the duty of the Senate to amend this bill, to make it as clear as possible, and to declare that none but white persons shall enjoy the benefits of this act.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I shall vote for the amendment because the friends of the bill want it; but I do it with the express declaration, that I do not admit thereby that it is possible under the Constitution of the United States for a negro to become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. SHIELDS. I really think it makes no difference whatever how I vote in this case; but as I see how my friends are voting, I shall vote "yea."

Mr. PETTIT. I decidedly concur with the Senators from Tennessee and Illinois, that it is utterly impossible that a negro can become a citizen, and consequently that it is utterly impossible for him to enjoy the benefits of this bill; but I shall vote "yea."

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 37, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Norris, Rockwell, Seward, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN'S name was, in the first place, recorded "yea," but he subsequently said: I wish to have my vote changed. There was a mistake in it. I intended to say "no;" I see it is entered "yea" on the list. The name of my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is not entered at all; he votes the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The change can only be made by unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and the vote was changed accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is still another amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Dixon.] It is to add at the end of the sixth section the following:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States, and not entitled to citizenship.

Mr. DIXON. I think that every Senator who will examine the second section of the bill, in connection with this section, will see that an alien, who, having obtained the benefit of the act, on the declaration of his intention to become a citizen, dies, he may, if he chooses, devise his lands to any person; and if he makes no devise, the operation of the two sections together would cast the lands upon the children of the alien. I am not myself in favor of giving the benefits of this bill to persons who are not citizens, or who will not become citizens. I am in favor, when an alien declares his intention to become, and does actually become, a citizen, of giving him the full benefit of it; but if he does not become a citizen, I am not for extending to his children, who are not citizens, rights which they would not otherwise have had. I think every Senator who will examine the two sections will see the propriety of the amendment as I do.

Mr. CASS. I see a hardship in this case. It is this: A man enters upon his land, remains on it for four or five years, makes it valuable, and dies, leaving minor children who would have been citizens by our law on his becoming a citizen, but who are not so by his death; what is then to become of this property? Is it to be forfeited?

Mr. DIXON. I would say to the honorable Senator that the provisions of this act will extend its benefits to aliens, who are grown persons, if they should happen to be children of an alien who has made his declaration of intention to become a citizen, and who dies without becoming a citizen. I presume the honorable Senator would not be in favor of extending the provisions of the act to a person living in England or anywhere else, at the time of the death of his ancestor, he being an alien who has entered upon the public lands.

Mr. CASS. I suggest to the Senator whether he had not better leave that to the local law? If the local law of Alabama, for instance, allows them to hold property, let it be done. I think this might commit a great hardship, especially if the local law permits such persons to hold property.

Mr. DIXON. I suggest to the Senator that this bill does not leave it to the local law.

Mr. CASS. I am aware of that; but I suggest to the honorable Senator whether it would not be better to leave this point to the local law, instead of taking the property from the children.

Mr. DIXON. This is the point. This bill casts the property upon the children of an alien. I put a case to the Senator. An alien living in a State or Territory files his declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States, and at once makes an entry, in pursuance of the principles of this bill, upon one hundred and sixty acres of land. He enters upon the land, and dies, leaving in Germany, or in England, or in Ireland, anywhere else abroad, children who are grown. Having himself made the entry under the provisions of the second section of this act, he entitles those children living in England, Germany, Ireland, or anywhere else, to come here and obtain a patent for the land without being naturalized. Will the Senator agree to that?

Mr. CASS. I agree with the Senator in reference to that, and it is a point which I should wish to have changed; but I think when a man dies and leaves a minor family who would by law, ipso facto, become citizens of the United States; when he becomes naturalized, and leaves the property with them, and they are living upon it, there ought to be some security for them. I think it should be held by them when they are living upon it.

Mr. DIXON. If the Senator will examine the second section of the bill, he will see at once that the law gives the land to the alien child. He gets the full benefit of the law, and he may obtain a patent for the land. It is with a view to prevent that that I offer the proviso.

Mr. CASS. Therefore, I suggest again to the Senator, whether his object could not be obtained by limiting that provision of the act to persons leaving minor children in this country, who are residents with him upon the property?

Mr. DIXON. I will say to the honorable Senator that this bill expressly casts it upon such persons as I have described.

Mr. STUART. Then change it.

Mr. DIXON. My amendment does change the provision of the bill.

Mr. STUART. I suggest to the Senator, instead of excluding children of aliens entirely, to exclude those only who are not residents in this country.

Mr. DIXON. That is what the amendment does.

Mr. CLAY. I suggest to the Senator from Kentucky that his object, and that of the Senator from Michigan, can be accomplished, I think, by an addition to the amendment which he offers. I will take the amendment and point it out.

Mr. DIXON. Will the Senator write out the addition?

Mr. CLAY. I am going to suggest it, and if the Senator approves of it, he can adopt it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] does not deny, as I understand, the position assumed by the Senator from Kentucky. There is no doubt that the bill, in its present form, is in conflict with the laws of many of the States. It is in conflict with the laws of Alabama, where aliens have no inheritable blood, and where property is not transmitted by descent to their heirs. The purpose of the Senator from Kentucky is to amend the bill so as to avoid this conflict, and not infringe upon the rights of the States in determining who shall be heirs. I think I can suggest the proper amendment, which will meet the views of both Senators.

Mr. DIXON. The Senator misunderstands my object. By the second section of the bill, if an alien has entered upon the land, having made a declaration of his intention to become a citizen, and then dies before becoming naturalized, the land is cast upon his children, they being aliens.

Mr. CLAY. I so understood. I understood fully what the Senator was aiming at, and I say his object is to correct that error in the bill—that invasion of the rights of the States. Now I say his amendment will do so, and at the same time meet the views of the Senator from Michigan, with a simple addition. The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is in these words:

“Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States, and not entitled to citizenship.”

And there it stops. Now, I think by adding—but I will write out the amendment to meet the object.

Mr. PRATT. I should much prefer to have the vote taken upon the amendment as offered by the Senator from Kentucky; because if he agrees with the reasoning of the honorable Senator from Michigan, I do not know but that I should be obliged to submit the amendment which he is asked to withdraw.

Mr. DIXON. I do not withdraw it. The Senator from Alabama only proposes to amend it.

Mr. PRATT. I do not want to make a speech upon it.

Mr. CLAY. I propose this modification of the amendment, which will meet the views of the Senator from Michigan, I presume:

“Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States, and not entitled to citizenship unless they could inherit the land by the laws of the State in which the land may be situated.”

Mr. SHIELDS. “State or Territory.”
Mr. CLAY. Well, make it “State or Territory.”

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. WELLER.] Does the Senator from Kentucky accept that modification?

Mr. DIXON. I do not. I think it is wrong. I think the amendment, as I offered it originally, is correct. Some of the States may authorize aliens to inherit lands. I do not know, but I think some of them do. I am not in favor of granting lands belonging to the people of the United States, to persons who remain out of the United States, who are born out of the United States, and who are not citizens, and have taken no steps whatever to constitute themselves citizens, merely from the fact, that their ancestor has filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen, and entitled himself to the benefits of this act by making such a declaration. I think the modification which the Senator proposes is not right; and therefore do not accept of it.

Mr. PRATT. The object of the amendment is to prevent anybody being entitled to hold lands within the limits of the United States who is not a citizen of the United States, or obliged to become a citizen before he can acquire a legal title to the land. That is the object. I suppose that all the Senators here will agree that that ought to be the case; that no one should be entitled to hold lands in the United States who is not obliged to become a citizen of the United States. Now, if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama be adopted as a substitute for that of the Senator from Kentucky, this object would not be attained. Under the provisions of the bill as it now stands, the children of any person who declares his intention to become a citizen, in the event of the death of that person so declaring his intention, would become per se, by the death, the owners in fee simple of the land. There would be no subsequent necessity, in order to their being entitled to the land, that they should become naturalized citizens of the United States, whether they lived here, or whether they were abroad at the death of the ancestor.

Now, I am aware that, under the naturalization laws, when a minor resides here, and the ancestor becomes naturalized, the minor, by that naturalization of the ancestor, becomes a naturalized citizen of the United States; but that is not the case here. The ancestor never becomes naturalized; consequently the child is not naturalized, and the bill imposes no obligation upon him to become naturalized, in order to enable him to become an owner in fee of land within the limits of the United States. The result would be, in all that class of cases, that persons not citizens of the United States would be owners of land within its limits. I think that is wrong, nor can there be any necessity for it. The honorable Senator from Michigan supposes that there would be a hardship on the part of the child residing here not to inherit this estate of the ancestor at the death of the parent. If the child resides here, under the provisions of this bill, on the death of the ancestor, he would become the head of the family, and he would be entitled himself to enter, make his declaration, become a citizen, and take up the one hundred and sixty acres of land which the ancestor left. That would become his land by only declaring his intention to become a citizen; so that the difference would be only, by the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, to provide that no party should become the owner in fee of land in the United States without becoming a citizen; and no hardship would exist, because such a child of a party thus dying would be a foreigner, and would only have to make a declaration of intention to entitle him to all the benefits of this bill.

Mr. SEWARD. The bill, as I understand it, provides that when an alien, having declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, shall settle upon these lands, he shall become the owner thereof, after an occupancy of five years; and it declares further that, in case of his death, his children shall own it—that the land shall become the property of his children. The proposed amendment is to the effect that, in case he shall have died before becoming naturalized, the lands shall revert to the United States. That I suppose to be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. DIXON. The amendment only provides that children (born out of the United States) of persons born out of the United States shall not inherit the land.

Mr. SEWARD. Where would it go? Would it revert to the United States?

Mr. DIXON. It is limited to those only who are born out of the United States.

Mr. BENJAMIN. And living out of the United States.

Mr. SEWARD. I am glad to see that it is limited so far. Would the honorable Senator be willing that it should read “children living out of the United States?”

Mr. DIXON. I am willing to insert “children living in the United States, and who have not attained the age of twenty-one years;” but I would not extend the provisions of the bill to children over twenty-one years, and who are aliens.

Mr. SEWARD. What I want to guard against is the great hardship which it will be, if, after an alien has gone upon the one hundred and sixty acres of land and reduced it into a condition fit to live upon, and he dies, leaving a destitute family there, the Government should not only take the land back, but also the improvements which the settler has made upon it. That is the effect of the proposition as it stands; and if that is so, I shall certainly vote against it.

The Government is the owner of the land. It has the power to attach certain conditions to the grant of the land. It gives it upon any terms that it pleases. If it fixes a condition which seems to be a just and humane one, that the land should revert without the improvement to the Government, there would be less objection to it; but after the settler has invested his labor and money in the land, to withdraw it into the general fund of the United States, and withdrawing not only the original grant, but the improvement which enhanced its value, would be a great hardship. I see no inconvenience to result from this, for it may be in States which have not adopted the policy to let children in such cases inherit the land. I do not see that there is any objection to it in principle. On the contrary, in many of the States, with the laws of which I am acquainted, there has been a great relaxation in the laws on the subject of the descent of lands to aliens. All these objections are removed now, I believe, in most of the northern States.

Mr. DIXON. I suggest a modification of my amendment, so that it will read:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States who are not entitled to citizenship, and who are twenty-one years of age.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the vote is taken, I wish to submit to my friend from Kentucky my views. A man goes and settles upon this land after declaring his intention to become a citizen of the United States. He is prevented from consummating that intention by the act of God, by the act of Heaven. Now, after the head of the family has made a settlement and lodgment on the lands, perhaps after he has cleared out a little home, and built a little cabin, by his labor and sweat there, you add to the condition that he shall cultivate the land, a further provision that, after he has done this, if he dies, his family shall be deprived of the little home that he has made by his labor there. In my humble opinion, that will appear to be an ungracious amendment. I see what the honorable Senator intends; but he must act upon some general principle.

Mr. DIXON. Will the honorable Senator allow me a moment? He will observe that the amendment, as it now reads, only excludes those who are over the age of twenty-one years. Now, would the honorable Senator be in favor of giving the lands belonging to the United States to non-resident aliens who have taken no oath to support the Constitution of the country? It might happen that one of these persons who declared his intention to become a citizen, and settled upon the land, might leave children in the country from which he has immigrated, who would be hostile to the Government and enemies to this Republic, and who might refuse to take the oath of naturalization, should they be entitled to the land? I confess I feel the force of the Senator's remarks.

Mr. SHIELDS. I see that equally; but I think that he can make the provision such that the parties, on the death of the ancestor, should go on the land and cultivate it, perform the conditions which the ancestor obligated himself to perform, and become citizens, or not take the land. That, in my humble judgment, would be carrying out the intention.

Mr. DIXON. I will modify the amendment.

Mr. DIXON called for the yeas and nays upon the amendment; and they were ordered.

As modified, it reads as follows:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States who are not entitled to citizenship, and who are twenty-one years of age.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky has still further modified his amendment, so as to read:

Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens born out of the United States, who are twenty-one years of age, until they shall file their declaration of intention to become citizens of the United States.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 21, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toucey—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Foot, Gillette, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pettit, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Wade, Walker, Weller, and Williams—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Before the vote is taken on the motion of the Senator from Delaware to strike out the sixth section, I desire to offer an amendment, to perfect that section. It is to add an additional proviso, as follows:

And provided further, That foreign born persons who fail to become citizens within five years from the date of their declaration of intention to become so, shall lose all rights under this act.

I simply wish to remark that the amendment carries out the idea which I expressed the other day in debate with my friend from Alabama. I then expressed the opinion that if a foreigner resided upon the land for five years, and failed to take out his naturalization papers, he could not receive the title, because, not being a citizen, he could not get it. The Government would refuse to hold up the land any longer, and he would necessarily lose all rights under it. I find, in conversation with Senators, for whose opinions I have a great respect, that they differ from me about that construction. I have no intention of allowing a foreigner to settle down on the public lands, and remain there ten, fifteen, twenty, or fifty years, if he chooses, without becoming a citizen. I want the people, when they come here, to take out naturalization papers, as prescribed by law, and especially if they come under the benefit of an act like this. All I mean by this amendment is simply that a man shall settle upon the land if he chooses to make a declaration of intention to become a citizen, and perfects that declaration by actually becoming a citizen.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion before he takes his seat, which, perhaps, he may answer? The objection which I have to the amendment is not to its substance, but to its form. If it were extended to six years, I should have no objection to it.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

Mr. PETTIT. Just allow me one moment for explanation, and then, when the Senator understands me, if I am wrong, I may be corrected. Our naturalization laws now first require that a foreigner, upon landing, shall make his declaration; but that is always waived, and he is not limited, but he can stay ten years, or five years, or one year, and then make it; but they require that he shall have been here five years before he can take out final naturalization papers. What is the result? If he comes here, then, under that provision, as the Senator now has it, and stays two days, or one day even, before he files his declaration of intention, he will be postponed two days beyond five years from the time he comes here, and the result will be, as the Senator will see, that he will lose all his improvements because he cannot be naturalized within five years after coming here.

Mr. BROWN. I will say to the Senator that he is mistaken. The party must make his declaration of intention before he can enter upon the land; then his five years commence running. He remains five years upon the land before he can get out his papers; but I do not care, if it will be any gratification to the Senator, to put in six years. All that I want is a limit.

Mr. PETTIT. I am perfectly willing to agree to the amendment, if six years are inserted.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will suggest that the amendment would be better if it provided that that should be the case on the expiration of the five years, if his not perfecting his citizenship was by his own neglect. There might not be a court convenient for him to take out his papers.

Mr. BROWN. There will always be a court somewhere. I will modify the amendment by making it read six years.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment, as it still stands, I think is open to objection. According to my reading of it, its effect will be this: suppose a foreigner to be now in the United States, who is in a condition to become a citizen, but has not yet carried out perfectly his intention to become one. The five years have elapsed; that is, he has declared his intention more than five years. If the amendment is adopted, he would come within the exception, and could not take the benefit of the law, though subsequently he should take out his papers, because the six years may have already expired. There are many cases of that kind; there are many persons in the United States who have declared their intention, but have not become citizens; it often happens from ignorance, and sometimes from other causes.

Mr. BROWN. I see the force of the Senator's remark, and I will modify the amendment so that it shall read six years from the time of entry on the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and declared that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. BROWN. If there is any controversy about it, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 37, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Sidel, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Gillette, Jones of Iowa, Seward, Sumner, and Wade—9.

So it was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have a proposition to offer, to amend the sixth section. By the terms of that section, foreigners coming into the country and declaring their intention to become naturalized are to be entitled to enter upon land, and to take out their patent at the end of five years. They are political minors. By the first section of the bill, the children of American citizens are not allowed to enter on land until they reach the age of twenty-one years. The object of my amendment is to entitle native-born citizens of the United States, who have not yet reached the age of twenty-one, to make their entries; provided, however, they shall not receive their patents until they reach the age of twenty-one. There are many young men in the country, orphans as well as children of parents still living, who, at the age of seventeen, eighteen, nineteen, or twenty, are perfectly competent to cultivate the soil. The bill deprives them of the opportunity of so doing, and makes them wait four or five years before they can make their first entry. My proposition is to allow them to make an entry at any time when they are able, physically, to go upon the soil and cultivate it; leaving them without their title until they have attained the age of twenty-one years, and have cultivated the land five years. The amendment is in these words:

And if any person born in the United States shall, before arriving at the age of twenty-one years, make application for the benefit of this act, he shall be entitled thereto: Provided, however, That no patent shall issue in favor of such applicant before he shall have attained the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The object of that amendment is certainly obvious to every Senator. It proposes that any child who is able to go to the land office, and make application for a grant of land, shall receive the benefits of the act.

Mr. CASS. Is the age limited?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Not at all.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator misunderstands the amendment. The party is not excluded from the condition to reside upon and cultivate the land.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Certainly not; there is no age fixed for the applicant at all. If he is ten years of age he may go and settle upon one hundred and sixty acres of land; and if he remains five years, he is to get a patent.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Not until he arrives at the age of twenty-one years.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Very well; he secures his point. It must be obvious to every Senator that the intention of the amendment, and of most of the amendments offered, is to embarrass the bill and defeat it in the end. A man has ten children; they are all over six years of age, or of any age which enables them to walk, or crawl, or to be carried to the land office; and they make application for one hundred and sixty acres of land. The father carries the child, settles him down there, occupies the land until he is twenty-one years of age, and then he gets a patent for one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. BENJAMIN. And why not?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Why not? Simply because it defeats the purpose and intention of this bill. I have a word to say to the friends of the bill. If they intend to carry it out in good faith, according to its intention and purpose, they must learn now, from the tactics which we have seen, to stand up and resist these attacks which are made upon it. I am for the bill in good faith; and when the Senator from Michigan yielded the first point, I felt that he was yielding a great deal. The moment you admitted an amendment at all, in my judgment, that moment sealed the fate of the bill; and now we are to have this amendment, and every other sort of amendment, when the Senator from Louisiana, as I know he will honestly tell you, will vote against the bill, even if the amendment is put upon it. Senators need not deceive themselves; they mean to destroy this bill by details, and by all sorts of chapparel fighting. They put on all sorts of amendments which strike the prejudices or the passions of the country. Know-Nothingism is put on one side, Native Americanism is put on, and Foreignism, and every sort of ism in the world, with a view to vote at the last against the bill. There is not a man who has offered an amendment who does not mean, in the end, to vote against the bill, although every amendment offered should be attached to it.

Mr. DIXON. I would ask the Senator if he did not vote for one of the amendments offered by myself?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I did; but I voted under protest, because the friends of the bill conceded it, and I stated so at the time. I will ask the Senator a question: Do you not mean to vote against the bill, although both of your amendments have been attached to it?

Mr. DIXON. I will answer frankly that I shall vote against it; and I will state another fact. I prefer another principle, and for that reason I should vote against this bill. I am for a distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the States.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I agree with the Senator myself. I am for a distribution, but he knows, as every Senator knows, that a distribution among the States is impossible.

Mr. DIXON. I do not know that.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then let the Senator offer an amendment of that sort, and get the test.

Mr. DIXON. Let the Senator offer it himself.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will propose a distribution policy, if the Senator will agree, if it fails, to vote for the bill. Then, of course, the Senator says he is for the first, if he can get it; if not, then he is for the next best. I will propose a distribution policy. I will go for that; and if it is lost, I want the Senator to go with me, as I have declared that I take this as an alternative—nothing else.

Now, if we have strength to carry this, let us do it as it is; and I want to know of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] where he is. He said he would fight with me on this question; but he has left me to fight all the battles on this side, and God knows there is enough to crush twenty men like me; and yet, by detail, they are destroying and crushing this measure. Now, if its friends have strength enough to carry it through, let us stand by it, and do so.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will answer the Senator's question, where I am. I am for this bill, and the reason why I have not been talking about it is, that I discovered, long ago, that the tactics of the enemy were to talk out the time, and prevent a vote upon the bill. The best evidence of friendship for it is silence; the best evidence of hostility is to talk away the time till the end of the session, and not let it pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I accept the suggestion of the Senator. There is not a man on God's earth who knows better how to get out of a sharp corner than he does. I will close my speech by asking him and all the friends of the bill to vote down all amendments, and, if we have got strength, to pass it; if not, let them kill it.

Mr. ADAMS. The appeal made by the Senator from Tennessee occurs to my mind as a most extraordinary one. He says the friends of this bill should be gagged. It is immaterial what amendment may be offered, although it commends itself to the approbation of their judgment, although they may know that it is right and proper that it should be offered, that the bill should be perfected, though they may believe the bill to be imperfect, yet, the Senator says, owing to the fact that some gentlemen have made propositions to try to perfect the bill, the friends of the measure are to be forced to vote against such amendments as may be proposed. Such a course of legislation, it seems to me, cannot be approved of, either by this body or by the country. I take it for granted, there is not a Senator on this floor who, in any proposition which is made, is not bound to suppose that it is made in good faith, and will exercise his own judgment as to whether he ought to vote for it, or against it. The fact that a Senator may be opposed to a bill in principle, and may intend ultimately to vote against it, is no reason why he should not endeavor to make it as acceptable as possible to the country and to this body. As I understand the rules of the body, and the rules of propriety, and the rules of justice, they do not exclude a man from endeavoring to perfect a bill. The Senator says that the opposition here has every kind of "ism" in it. It has the "ism" of justice, and of equality, and of right; it has constitutionalism, it is true; but there is no Know-Nothingism in it.

I did not rise for the purpose of discussing this subject, but to enter my protest against any Senator's attempting to control the judgment of other Senators, when any proposition may be legitimately offered that meets the approbation of their judgment.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand the Senator from Tennessee to be opposed to the offering of all amendments, on the ground that they are to be discarded, as having by presumption, no merit. I think he comes very near the case of the man who declaimed violently against Jay's treaty, and when Colonel Walton, a distinguished signer of the Declaration of Independence, who had voted for it upon his responsibility as a member of Congress, said to him: "You inveigh very much against the treaty, and you denounce all who voted for it; have you ever read it?" "No, sir," says he; "and I never shall read it, and I never would read such a"—I cannot use the adjective that he used, but such an "unconstitutional treaty." [Laughter.]

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to say, in answer to the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee, that he is greatly mistaken if he supposes that in any proposition which I make upon this floor to amend this bill, I desire to make the bill itself impracticable. I employ no such tactics. My opposition to the bill is open, manly, and decided, and I have so stated to the Senator himself. I do not mean now to go into the general merits of the bill. I shall do so hereafter; and I think I shall satisfy the gentleman, notwithstanding what he said yesterday, that the policy of the bill will be attacked by its opponents, and they will not satisfy themselves simply, as he thinks, with skirmishing from chapparrals. I say to the honorable Senator, in answer to his appeal to me, that I am opposed to the bill in every particular. I am opposed to its policy. I am opposed to its provisions as they now stand; but I cannot be insensible to the fact that it is by no means an impossible thing that it should pass the Senate; and if it is to pass, I wish it to be as little objectionable as possible to my judgment.

What is the proposition against which it has pleased the Senator to inveigh? He stands up and supports, before the Senate, the proposition of the bill, that any individual, who has not the remotest interest in the country, who was not born here, who may have arrived here but yesterday, should be entitled to go on to the public lands, which belong to the people of the United States, to settle there, to cultivate those lands, and by his settlement and cultivation to entitle himself to a fee-simple in the soil. He does not propose to wait until the immigrant shall have obtained the right of a citizen. He does not propose to subject him to any apprenticeship before he is entitled to enter upon the soil; but from the moment of his arrival he is to be placed upon the same footing as an American citizen born in the United States. Now, by the first section of the bill, a citizen born in the United States is not to be entitled to any of those privileges which the Senator from Tennessee is willing to afford to foreigners, until he reaches the age of twenty-one years. The policy of your bill is to settle and cultivate the public lands. My proposition is to carry out the policy, and to give the same advantages to citizens born upon the soil, as you give to foreigners who have come here but yesterday. Will the Senator deny, for a moment, that if this policy can be carried out by granting these privileges to citizens born on the soil, it ought not to be so carried out in reference to foreigners? He will certainly not so contend; and yet he exclaims, with holy horror, against the proposition by which the children of American citizens are to be entitled to go upon the soil, to settle it, to cultivate it, to carry out the policy of the bill, and to be restricted from their title until they have attained the age of twenty-one years, in the very breath in which he is advocating the right of the foreigner without any limitation of age—there is no limitation of age on the foreigner—and without any restriction of color, as he has just contended. Without restriction of color, age, character, or interest in the soil, or in the institutions of the country, the foreigner, at the first instant he lands upon the soil, is to have the right to create for himself a title to one hundred and sixty acres of your land, and the children of the man who has fought and bled, and, perhaps, died, in the service of the country, are to be deprived of the same right; and yet the Senator talks of an amendment—intended to make the bill odious by an amendment—and of fighting from chapparrals, and not touching the principle of the bill; but keeping ourselves fighting at the outworks. Sir, I offer this amendment in good faith; and I feel confident that it will meet the sanction of the American Senate.

Mr. WALKER. If it were not for the sincerity and earnestness manifested by the honorable gentleman in his speech, I should certainly have thought he was not sincere in offering this amendment. Why, sir, the adoption of the amendment, and the passage of the bill thus amended, would beget a scene of speculation which would exceed any that ever took place under the old floating system of some of the preemption acts. By the amendment a boy, whose father and mother are both living, would be permitted to go and settle upon the public lands, though he is not competent to collect his own debts, not competent to purchase a horse or anything else, but to whose service the father or the mother is entitled. It is immaterial how many children there may be in a family, each one of them, under the amendment, may make his selection for speculative purposes, the benefit of which would probably result to the chief of the speculation—the father or the mother. I can scarcely believe that the Senator can be in earnest in offering such a proposition. If he were a friend of the bill, and this would reconcile him to its support, I could believe more truly that he was sincere in the proposition. But it looks so much like one of those propositions offered, not to perfect, but to embarrass the bill, that, notwithstanding the apparent sincerity of the gentleman, and notwithstanding his known character for candor, I can scarcely believe that he is, to the full extent, sincere in this amendment. I hope it will not be adopted. If it shall be adopted, of course, the friends of the bill in the Senate will feel that the time has not arrived when they can pass a home-stead bill at all. The engrafting of that provision must render the bill, to say the least, less beneficial than otherwise.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALKER. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. What is the objection to allowing an American boy of nineteen years of age to go upon a piece of land; cultivate it, and get his patent at the end of five years, provided he settles upon the land, cultivates it, and complies with all the provisions of the bill, even though his father may have a dozen other children, and may himself receive one hundred and sixty acres?

Mr. WALKER. The Senator puts a question to me which is not contained in his amendment. The amendment says nothing about nineteen years of age. For all that appears from it, the minor may be one, two, or three years of age.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to make it sixteen years. It is already provided that he must settle and cultivate the land.

Mr. WALKER. If the Senator had listened to me, he would have heard me say that he proposes that an individual shall settle on the public lands, who is not even entitled to the wages of his own service, who cannot make a valid contract for the purchase of a horse or anything else. He cannot contract a debt. He can engage in none of the pursuits of life, according to law, because of his incapacity as a minor; and yet the amendment would allow him to occupy land, for purposes of speculation, to be controlled and kept there by an individual or individuals who intended only to make a speculation out of his occupancy. If you intend to give him the right to occupy the public lands in this way, if it is in your power, disembarass him; let him be permitted to buy his stock; let him be permitted to buy his farming implements; let him be permitted to collect the dues to which he may be entitled from the sale of the products of his farm. Give him some privileges which are commensurate with the rights of a land owner. But to place him, in his condition of incapacity, in the position of one entitled to occupy the land, to acquire this preemptive right, and finally to get it for himself, is, to say the least, proposing to place the bill in a condition that would be less beneficial than it is now.

But, sir, amendments have been engrafted upon the bill. They have been engrafted upon the bill, not by its friends, but by its enemies. I was sorry to see some of the friends of the bill cooperate in the adoption of those amendments. Some of them did so, declaring at the time, as the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] declared, that he did so because he saw it would gain strength for the bill. The very gentleman who offered the amendments for which the Senator from Michigan voted, has now announced that he will not vote for the bill under any circumstances. In this manner the friends of the bill have been induced to put upon it the amendments that have been adopted, and which are to send it back to the House of Representatives. I have seen bills under consideration before, but I have generally seen it tolerated on the part of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to put the question to a gentleman who offers an amendment, "If your amendment is adopted, will you vote for the bill?" And if it is announced, "No, I will not vote for the bill," the cry is, "Down with his amendment;" and they never think of adopting it. But now, it seems, it has become a great parliamentary crime, a great offense, to ask such a question. The friends of the bill are to swallow all amendments anyhow, and to get it into a position in which neither they nor any one else desire to see it pass! For one, if this amendment be adopted, I care not how soon the bill goes on the table.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I modify my amendment by inserting after the word "person," the words "of the age of sixteen years and upwards," so that it shall read, "if any person of the age of sixteen years and upwards, born in the United States, shall," &c.

Mr. CLAY. I shall vote for the amendment, and I shall vote for it in as good faith as it was offered. Now, the simple question presented is, whether we will extend to native-born minors the same privileges which are extended to foreign born minors, for this section does not fix the age at which the foreigner shall be entitled to its benefits. It admits those who are minors, as well as those who are adults. Unlike the Senator from Tennessee, and the Senator from Wisconsin, I am not inclined to extend greater benefits and privileges to foreign minors than to native minors. Hence, I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. In my opinion, the section does not admit of that construction.

Mr. CLAY. It seems to me that it can admit of no other construction than that which I have put on it.

Mr. SHIELDS. The foreigner, before he can obtain the benefit of the act, must be able to file a declaration of intention to become a citizen, and that requires, as a prerequisite, that he shall be twenty-one years of age.

Mr. CLAY. No, sir; by no means, according to my reading of the naturalization laws.

Mr. BENJAMIN called for the yeas and nays on his amendment; which were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Thompson of Kentucky, and Williams—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Poor, Gillette, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rusk, Seward, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—20.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I have adverted heretofore to the fact that the word "now," in the expression "now a resident," in the sixth section, is indefinite; and that if it does admit of the interpretation of the friends of this bill, as applying to the time of the passage of the act, still the bill is defective in this: that it does not require of the foreign resident that he should make any oath that he was a resident at the time. Nor is there any provision to test the question whether he was a resident at the time of the passage of the bill or not. You may look through the entire bill, and you will find that there is no provision of that kind. Now, I propose to fix, beyond all question, what the friends of this bill say they contemplate, and that is providing for those who are residents at the time of the passage of the bill; and also to provide a means for proving that when they come to make their application for the benefits of this act. I propose to do so by amending the sixth section, by striking out the word "have," in the fourth line, and inserting "produce evidence of having, previous to the passage of this act," so that the clause will read "but, at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall produce evidence of having, previous to the passage of this act, filed a declaration of intention" &c.

Mr. SLIDELL. I intended to introduce an amendment of a somewhat similar character; and if the Senator from Alabama will accept a modification which I wish to propose, I shall vote with him on this question. I think there would be a hardship in requiring a previous declaration; and I think it would be better to insert the words "who shall have filed, within sixty days from the passage of this act, a declaration of intention," &c. I think there ought to be some record proof of the residence of the party required within a reasonable time after the passage of this act. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama, however, would perhaps deprive many persons who are now here from the opportunity of making a declaration. If the Senator from Alabama will accept my amendment, I will vote with him on this question.

Mr. PETTIT. The word "passage" should be changed to "approval." The date of its approval will always be carried on the face of the bill; but some difficulty might be occasioned by raising questions as to the time of the passage of the bill.

Mr. BADGER. Allow me to suggest on that subject that, under the Constitution, the passage of a bill and the approval of a bill are one and the same thing; because the Constitution says that, before a bill passes into a law, it shall be approved by the President.

Mr. PETTIT. The expression of the Constitution is, "before it become a law."

Mr. BADGER. That makes no difference. The day of the approval of the bill is the day of its passage.

Mr. SLIDELL. Does the Senator from Alabama accept my amendment?

Mr. CLAY. At the suggestion of some friends who object to it, I decline accepting it, and adhere to my own amendment. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall be constrained to vote against the amendment of my friend from Alabama, because I really do not perceive that the word "now" creates any difficulty whatever. I do not see that the word "now" can refer to any other possible time than the time when this bill becomes a law, if it ever does. I do not think there is any other time to which it can legally be referred than the time when the bill becomes a law. It can have no other meaning that I can see in reading the passage, and therefore I do not think the amendment is necessary.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to make this suggestion to my friend from Delaware: Admit that he be right, and that it can refer to no other time than the date of the approval of the bill by the President, still, if he will examine the bill, he will find no provision made in it whereby the fact is to be ascertained that the applicants are now residents. My amendment proposes that when they make application for the benefit of this act, they shall file, with the application, evidence of the fact that they had declared their intention to become citizens previous to the passage of the act.

Mr. BAYARD. I thought the objection to the clause which restricted the right of entry to foreigners now in the United States was, that it would give rise to frauds, but the Senate have voted down any amendment of that kind. If the object be to guard against frauds, under this bill, in obtaining evidence, then I think the amendment ought to go somewhat further, and provide before whom the evidence is to be taken, and by whom the authority of that evidence is to be decided.

There should be something as to the mode of evidence. The language of the amendment is "produce evidence." To whom? What class of evidence? It leaves all in uncertainty. I think it would be better to make the amendment more specific as to the character of the evidence, if you require any, and the designation of the officer before whom it is to be produced. I think both are requisite.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I will suggest to the Senator from Alabama to insert the words, "satisfactory to the register and receiver of the proper land office."

Mr. CLAY. I was about to make that suggestion in reply to the remark of the Senator from Delaware, and I accept that modification.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to say to my friend from Alabama, that I think the amendment which I proposed more fully accomplished his object. It restricts the grants to foreigners who shall file within sixty days after the passage of the act, their declaration of intention. That can only be filed before a court of record, and therefore I require the evidence on which alone he would be admitted to citizenship, when the proper time came for his final certificate. My amendment is offered in good faith. I do not wish that any persons who are not now within the limits of the United States should be enabled to produce proof of their being residents at the time of the passage of this bill. I propose to allow all now here the period of sixty days, within which they will be compelled to file their declaration. I really think it is a more efficient amendment than that offered by my friend from Alabama. If the section were amended, as I propose, it would read in this way: "Any individual now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but who shall have filed within sixty days from the passage of this act a declaration of intention, as required by the naturalization laws," shall be put upon the same footing as others. It appears to me that that is a more stringent provision than the one offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. CLAY. It does not provide that they shall produce evidence, it seems to me.

Mr. SLIDELL. The evidence is the declaration of intention before a competent court—precisely the evidence that would be required when the alien came to perfect his papers and obtain his naturalization certificate.

Mr. CLAY. But you do not provide that they shall produce that evidence before the register.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do.

Mr. CLAY. Then I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, as modified at the suggestion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WADE. If the amendment prevails, it seems to me that the benefits of this bill will be extended only to such as file this declaration within sixty days from the passage of the act; and of course after the sixty days pass away, those who have not complied with this provision will be forever afterwards barred from the privileges of the act; so that it will not have a very extensive operation.

A SENATOR. So much the better.

Mr. WADE. It is better for those who do not want any homestead bill. I simply wish to have that understood.

Mr. STUART. I really hope the amendment will not be adopted. I would ask in all sincerity, why there is any more necessity for requiring record evidence of a man's residence in the country, than there is for requiring record evidence of his age. If he files his declaration, you have to take his own statement in respect to his age. In many of our States you will find it to be true—it is so in the State of Michigan—that men have resided there for years, are entitled to hold real estate, are entitled to the right of suffrage, are entitled to every right that the native-born citizen is, but yet are not citizens of the United States, and never have filed a declaration of intention to become such. Now, sir, one of these persons may have lived in our State for thirty years; and yet, if he sells his farm and wishes to avail himself of the provisions of this act, he cannot do it, under this amendment, unless he now goes within sixty days and files a declaration of intention to become a citizen. That is the requisition of the amendment. Why, it seems to be supposed that that is a necessary character of evidence, to show that he is a resident at the passage of the act. I say you should no more require that to be proved by record evidence, than his age or anything else. If such an objection exists as the Senator from Alabama supposes, that the bill as it now stands does not require that the applicant shall swear he was a resident at the time of the passage of the act, why, introduce an amendment requiring it? Let him be compelled to swear he was a resident; but do not cut off, as you would cut off by this amendment, at least ninety-nine out of every hundred of all the residents in the United States who are now not naturalized. That would be the certain effect of the amendment.

Mr. SLIDELL. Let me say to the Senator from Michigan, that is the very object I had in view. When men have resided so long within the limits of the United States, and not declared their intention to become citizens, I do not wish them to enjoy the benefits of this act.

Mr. STUART. Well, sir, I confess my utter inability to perceive either the logic, the equity, or the justice with which some Senators seem to urge here, so often, that a man should not hold any of our land unless he is a citizen of the United States. Why may not a man enter into society, cultivate land, raise produce on it, add to the wealth of the State and the nation, simply because he is not a citizen of the United States? Sir, his not becoming a citizen is against him, not against us. If he does not choose to avail himself of his rights, and become a citizen of the United States, under the law, he suffers, not the public. He does not enjoy certain rights and privileges which belong to others. That is his loss.

I repeat, sir, I am utterly unable to discover why a bushel of wheat or of potatoes is not as valuable when raised by one who is not a citizen as when raised by one who is, and why the taxes paid to support State, county, and township expenses, to keep up public schools and everything else of value to the community, are not just as well paid by a man who is not a citizen as by one who is. It seems to me that the whole object of the bill is misunderstood. Its object is to get the land cultivated. That is the feeling which I have as the representative of a new State. The very worst thing that can happen is for the United States to hold the land. Then, neither is it cultivated, nor does it pay taxes. The next worst thing is for it to fall, in large quantities, into the hands of speculators. That is not as bad as the first, because then we get the taxes, though we do not get the cultivation.

I ask again, why should the United States, as a landholder, refuse to let an individual cultivate the public lands because he is not a citizen? It is a policy that has sprung up within a very short time. It is a policy that has never had any existence in this country by law. It is a policy that has never been tolerated by sound thinking men till we come to talk about a homestead bill. It therefore follows from the argument—and this is the logic—that a man may hold land at $1 25 per acre without being a citizen, and there is no objection to that; but, at twenty-five cents an acre, it is indispensable that he shall be a citizen. That is the substance of the logic.

Mr. CLAY. But this is a bill to give land for nothing—free farms.

Mr. STUART. The Senator knows as well as anybody that it is the intention of the friends of the bill to put a price on the land. I avowed that before. I stated that I intended, if no other Senator moved such an amendment, to offer one myself to put a price upon the land. The friends of the bill here do not intend, as I understand, to have it passed through the Senate without having some price fixed on the land. So that, I say the logic results in this, that in order to purchase at twenty-five cents an acre, a man must be a citizen, or he is not entitled to cultivate; he cannot become a worthy agriculturist; but add a dollar to the price, and it is of no consequence whether he is a citizen or not! I confess I cannot understand such logic.

But I come back to the objection to this proposition; and it is, that you cut off men by this amendment without any discrimination as to worth. You do not test a man by the principles by which morality tests him; but the amendment simply says that a class, those who do not file their declaration of intention within sixty days from the passage of the act, shall be excluded. Sir, I have ever been opposed to that species of legislation. I conceive that it will do infinite injustice to a very large portion of the people of the United States, and those as valuable as any other people in the United States; and I cannot see any solid foundation for it.

Mr. CLAY. I would ask the Senator from Michigan whether he thinks those people of the United States, of whom he speaks, who have been residing here, as he says, for twenty or thirty years, and never applied for naturalization, are as meritorious and worthy as citizens?

Mr. STUART. I have no doubt about it at all. As I said here once before, a man is no better to-day because he is a citizen, than he was yesterday when he was not a citizen. There is nothing in the fact of being a citizen that qualifies him at all, or adds to his worth as a man.

Mr. CLAY. Well, sir, I confess I have that doubt. I think that if a man, after having been here twenty or thirty years, and never having made, during that period, application to become a citizen, should, for the sake of a free farm, make this application, he would show himself unworthy of the bounty of the Government, and unworthy of being a citizen. He would show that he loved this Government, or his residence here, and the right of citizenship, for the same reason that the ass loves his master's crib, merely for the grain it would furnish him; and I would have such a man excluded from the benefits of this act. But the Senator asks me moreover, why it is that I will not propose to amend the bill, by providing that the foreigner shall swear that he was a resident at the time of the passage of the bill? Simply for the reason, that it is tempting him to commit the crime of perjury, and to add that to the crime of fraud, which he may now perpetrate with impunity under the bill, as it stands. In order to guard against the commission of the crimes of perjury and fraud, I wish to provide by this amendment that he shall show, at the time he makes the application, that he has filed a declaration of his intention to become a naturalized citizen.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, there seems to exist among some gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, a fixed impression that a man who is not a citizen of the United States is, to all intents and purposes, upon a par with the citizen; that, in truth, there ought to be no distinction between them; and that such a distinction cannot be made in justice. Now, I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] who has just addressed the Senate, to this subject for a moment; and also the attention of his colleague, [Mr. Cass,] who, if I understood him, the other day, contended that a man who was not a citizen of the United States was liable to be punished in this country for treason. Sir, it has been settled by the circuit court of the United States, that until a man is naturalized as a citizen, he is not liable to indictment for treason against this Government; he is not under the obligations that a citizen is under to the Government of the United States; and he is not entitled to the protection that the citizen of the United States is. Well, sir, under these circumstances, will any man tell me that one who is not a citizen of the United States holds the same position in reference to this Government that a citizen does? The case to which I have alluded, the honorable gentleman will find reported in 2d Dallas, the case of Alati.

In England, where the doctrine of treason has been extended by construction, and by every other means as far as possible, it has been decided that one who does not owe allegiance to the Government is still liable in the country, under certain circumstances, to an indictment for treason; but in this country it is not so, and has never been held to be so. The very act which prescribes the punishment of treason, declares it to be an essential requisite—and gentlemen will acknowledge it to be an essential requisite—to an indictment for treason, that it should aver that the party indicted owed allegiance to this Government. Some gentlemen, I understand, have looked into the indictment in the case of Aaron Burr, which was drawn up with great care; and they find that that indictment expressly stated the fact that the party indicted owed allegiance to the United States. Sir, this constitutes the great distinction between the man who is not, and the man who is a citizen—the one resisting the Government in the mode pointed out by the Constitution is a traitor, and liable to be punished with death; the other is placed in no such circumstances.

But, sir, the honorable Senator seems to think that, in point of merit, there is no difference between the citizen and the man who is not a citizen. It is certainly very hard if we live under a government which, while it holds us responsible to its laws, and bound even to the extent of the forfeiture of our lives, adopts that principle, and treats us as occupying no better and no higher footing than the foreigner who has just landed on our shores. There seems to me to be the error, the radical error, which has been committed by gentlemen on the other side. I do acknowledge a distinction between the American citizen and the man who is not an American citizen. I am proud of the character of an American citizen. I wish all my countrymen to be proud of that character. I feel that by this mode of cheapening that character you degrade it, and by degrading it you inflict an injury upon the whole country which it will be difficult ever to repair. I trust the sentiment to which I have referred will not prevail; and I trust the action of the Senate, throughout the whole progress of the bill, will not be founded upon any such sentiment.

Mr. BADGER. As it is now late, and I am afraid we cannot get a final vote on this bill to-day, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. STUART called for the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 33, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Hamlin, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Seward, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Toucey, and Williams—33.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rusk, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—18.

So the motion was agreed to; and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 15, 1854.

The House met at seven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated 13th instant, submitting estimates of the amount required to carry into effect treaties recently negotiated in Washington with the Sacs and Foxes, of Missouri; the Delawares, Iowas and Kickapoos, and requesting that the appropriation asked for be made.

Referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

MISLAID BILL.

Mr. ASHE. Some time since a Senate bill for the relief of William Sanger was received in this House and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I was instructed by that committee to make a report favorable to the passage of the bill; but the bill while in my possession has been lost or mislaid. I now move that a message be sent to the Senate, requesting that body to furnish the House with a certified copy of it.

It was so ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a petition which I offered at an early part of the session, praying Congress to clothe the authorities of this city with full powers over the traffic in intoxicating drinks, and to have it referred to the Judiciary Committee.

It was so ordered.

REFERENCE OF BILLS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Massachusetts. There are on the Speaker's table some four or five bills creating ports of delivery in various parts of the West and Southwest, which ought to be acted upon. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have them taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the following bills were taken from the Speaker's table, severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

S. No. 413. An act constituting Madison, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery;

S. No. 418. An act creating a collection district in Texas and New Mexico;

S. No. 403. An act creating a collection district in the State of California;

S. No. 219. An act to constitute Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery; and

S. No. 425. An act to constitute Tusculum, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery.

Mr. HOUSTON. That last bill relates to my 1 district, and unless some gentleman objects, should like it to be passed now. It was important that it should have been passed at an early period of the session. I do not know that there is any objection.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am willing to recall my application to have it referred.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I should like to have it passed.

The SPEAKER. The consent of the House was given to the gentleman from Massachusetts to have the bills indicated taken up, read a first and second time, and referred. If there is no objection, however, they may be now acted upon.

Several MEMBERS. I object.

Mr. EDGERTON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Claims, to which was referred the petitions of Coale & Barr, made an adverse report thereon; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. E. also, from the same committee, to which were referred the petitions of John A. Bryan, of Andrew H. Patterson, and of Polly Carver, made reports thereon, accompanied by a joint resolution, and bills of the following titles:

Joint resolution for the relief of John A. Bryan; A bill for the relief of Andrew H. Patterson; and A bill for the relief of Polly Carver.

Which joint resolution and bills were severally read a first and second time, committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the resolution, bills, and reports, ordered to be printed.

Mr. E., from the same committee, to which were referred bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. No. 230. An act for the relief of Asbury Dickens; and

S. No. 148. An act for the relief of Zachariah Lawrence, of Ohio; reported the former without, and the latter with, an amendment.

Ordered, That the said bills be committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and printed.

Mr. E., from the same committee, to which was referred a resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. R. No. 2. A resolution for the relief of George R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties; reported the same, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Ordered, That the said resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. E., from the same committee, to which were referred bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. No. 311. An act for the relief of Michael Nourse;

S. No. 53. An act for the relief of the sureties of Daniel Winslow;

S. No. 86. An act for the relief of J. Boyd, of Louisiana;

S. No. 89. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Captain William G. Williams;

S. No. 87. An act for the relief of Jacob Gideon;

S. No. 325. An act for the relief of John McAvoy; and

S. No. 208. An act for the relief of John Devlin; reported the same severally, with a recommendation that they do not pass, accompanied by adverse reports, in writing in the cases of bills numbered 53, 89, 87, 325, and 208.

Ordered, That the said bills be committed to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and the bills and reports printed.

On motion by Mr. E., it was Ordered, That the Committee of Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill of the Senate (S. No. 315) entitled "An act for the relief of Israel Johnson," and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. E. also, from the same committee, made adverse reports upon the petitions of the heirs of Captain John Burnham; of stone-cutters on the Capitol extension; of Dr. S. A. Thompson; of James Mackall; of John S. Gatewood; of the widow and heirs of John Hogan; and of Charles Winters; which were severally laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NICHOLS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill for the purpose of reference.

There being no objection,

Mr. N. introduced a bill for the relief of Lloyd Dorsey and others; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

RESOLUTIONS OF RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present certain resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Rhode Island.

There was no objection, and

Mr. D. said: Concurring in the justice and expediency of the measure, I desire to present an act to reverse and annul the sentence of the supreme court of Rhode Island for treason rendered against Thomas W. Dorr, June 25, A. D. 1844. I also desire to present the resolutions of the Legislature in reference to the Nebraska bill.

The resolutions were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

SIDNEY P. POOL.

Mr. STUART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a bill which was overlooked yesterday when I made reports from that committee.

A MEMBER. Is it a private bill?

Mr. STUART. It is. It is a bill for the relief of Sidney P. Pool.

There was no objection, and the bill was received, read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

SCOTT'S INFANTRY TACTICS.

Mr. PENNINGTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution, for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That twenty-five thousand copies of Scott's Infantry Tactics, in an edition of one volume, be printed for distribution by the members of the House.

There was no objection, and the resolution was received and referred, under the rule, to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I call for the regular order of business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion by Mr. VANSANT, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Charles Reeder.

Mr. EVERHART. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the petition and papers in the case of Elizabeth E. Pennington, which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, for the purpose of having them returned to her.

Mr. COBB. I have no objection, if copies of them are left on the files of the House.

Mr. EVERHART. I have no objection to that.

There being no objection, leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. EVERHART. I also ask the consent of the House to withdraw the petition of citizens of Delaware county, State of Pennsylvania, from the files of the Committee on Commerce, for the purpose of having them referred to a similar committee in the Senate.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. HOUSTON. Unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EDGERTON] has a good deal of anxiety about the Private Calendar, I would like very much to take up one of the appropriation bills in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to-day.

[Cries of "No! no!"]

CHARLES LEE JONES.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the bills reported to the House yesterday by a Committee of the Whole House. The first in order is "a bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House do now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion until the bills on the Speaker's table, reported from a Committee of the Whole House yesterday, are acted on. Their consideration will occupy but a short while.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDGERTON. We can only consider private bills under the rule on Friday and Saturday of each week; and, therefore, to-day and next Friday are the last days we can possibly have for consideration of the Private Calendar. The bills on the Speaker's table, to which reference is made, can be taken up and considered any day. They can be more easily reached than the Private Calendar for the disposition of other bills in Committee of the Whole House. We had better go into committee to-day, consider the Private Calendar, and report what business we can to the House. I make that motion.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. EDGERTON in the chair), and proceeded to consider the bills on the Private Calendar.

SAMUEL COLT.

The CHAIRMAN. The business first in order is the consideration of House bill (No. 59), "for the relief of Samuel Colt."

Mr. ORR. That bill was laid aside yesterday, on a division of the committee, and I suppose the same reasons for its postponement operate to-day. I move that it be laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

FERDINAND CLARK.

House bill (No. 103) "for the relief of Ferdinand Clark."

Mr. ORR. I move that bill be also laid aside. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ORR. I move that the committee resume the consideration of the Calendar at the point where we left off yesterday.

The motion was agreed to.

DANIEL STEENROD.

House bill (No. 182) "for the relief of Daniel Steenrod."

The bill provides that the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, be referred to the Secretary of War; and he is hereby authorized and directed, in such mode as to him shall seem just and expedient, to appoint an umpire to hear evidence in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, and ascertain and fix what is justly and equitably due the said petitioner thereon; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay such sum out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated by law.

Mr. MACE. I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "Secretary of War," wherever they occur, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "First Comptroller of the Treasury."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. This is a very singular bill, and I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. MACE. The object of the bill is simply this. During the progress of the construction of the national road, in the vicinity of Wheeling, Mr. Daniel Steenrod had a large contract upon that road. Various modifications were made in that contract from time to time; but a difficulty arose between him and the superintendent, in relation to the amount of pay which he ought to receive for certain alterations that had been made in the work different from the plan under which the contract had been taken. The papers connected with the case are very voluminous. They have been before the Committee of Claims many years. The Senate has been in the habit, almost every session, of passing a bill for the relief of the claimant. But the Committee of Claims, after examining the statement, thought that it would be impossible for them to arrive at a correct conclusion in the premises. The committee, therefore, inasmuch as the record in the War Department, and the evidence before the committee, contain substantially all the facts in the case, think it more advisable to leave the ascertaining of the amount due the claimant to the Government, and to provide that after a careful investigation shall be had by a commission sitting in the city of Wheeling, that amount shall be paid. We have, therefore, so worded the bill as to require that this investigation be had, and when an award is made, that the amount of it should be appropriated.

The object which I have had in proposing this amendment is, that I wish to place the whole case under the care and control of Mr. Whittlesey, who, perhaps more than any other man in the country, knows the facts in the case, and the claims which have been presented to Congress. Mr. Whittlesey was the chairman of the Committee of Claims for a series of years, and is now Comptroller of the Treasury. It is on that account that I have made the motion to substitute him in place of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ORR. What is the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. MACE. The appropriation cannot exceed $6,000.

Mr. ORR. I would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana to move another amendment, at the end of the bill, to this effect: Provided, That the award shall not exceed the sum of $6,000 or $7,000.

Mr. MACE. Well, say $7,000, and I will agree to that amendment.

Mr. COBB. I am satisfied that I can suggest another amendment which the gentleman from Indiana will accept. It is to make some clerk in the Department, or some person connected with the Government, an umpire.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is unusual to give the appointment of a commission to the head of a bureau, and not to the head of a Department.

Mr. MACE. I have no objection to accept the suggestion of my friend from Alabama, that an umpire be selected from the persons connected with the Treasury Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. Has the first amendment been put, to strike out the Secretary of War and insert the Comptroller of the Treasury?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been put and agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was about to say to the gentleman from Indiana, that it is very unusual to take the appointment of a commission away from the head of a Department, and to leave it to the head of a bureau. And if it amounts to the same thing, I think it should be given to the head of a Department. I think that would be right. But I also think this bill objectionable in other respects.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish simply to remark, that the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means [Mr. Houston] struck me as a very good one at first view. But when the proposition was made to refer the matter to Mr. Whittlesey, a gentleman proverbial for the strictness of his application of the rules and principles of justice and right to all accounts, I confess my objection was removed.

Mr. HOUSTON. My remarks did not go to the merits of the bill at all. They were simply intended to bring to the notice of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] the fact that it was an unusual course of procedure to take the appointment of a commissioner from the head of a Department, and transfer it to the head of a bureau. I prefer leaving it with the head of the Department; for neither of those gentlemen are to investigate the account. They only appoint a commissioner, and whatever award that commissioner makes is the law, according to this bill, and we must pay it; and there is no suspension or revision of the account kept in the hands of Mr. Whittlesey, or with the head of the Department.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will simply say, in reply, that we all know and believe that Mr. Whittlesey revises every account which comes before him. Perhaps there is not a more intelligent, a more efficient and conscientious officer under the Government. No account passes from his hand without its undergoing his revision. I have had something to do with this account years ago; it is a transaction which has been bandied about a good while.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia that this debate is out of order. The amendment has been agreed to by the committee, and can only be reversed by unanimous consent.

Mr. MACE. Do I understand the Chair to state that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Alabama, and acceded to by me—that is, that Mr. Whittlesey appoint, as umpire, some gentleman connected with the Treasury Department—has been adopted by the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at all.

Mr. MACE. Then I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Indiana, that he moved as an amendment to the bill, to strike out the words

"Secretary of War," and insert in lieu thereof "First Comptroller of the Treasury." The Chair put that question to the committee, and the committee agreed to the amendment.

Mr. MACE. Then I move the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama as an additional amendment.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest to him that the amendment is superfluous.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Indiana, if he acceded to the proposition of the gentleman from South Carolina, to limit the amount to $7,000?

Mr. MACE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then that question has not been put to the committee.

Mr. MILLSON. Before that question is put, I desire to offer an amendment to a previous portion of the bill. I move to strike out all after the word "authorized," in the fifth line of the bill, as follows:

"And directed, in such mode as to him shall seem just and expedient, to appoint an umpire to hear evidence in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, and ascertain and fix what is justly and equitably due said petitioner thereon; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay such sum out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated by law."

And to insert in lieu thereof, the following:

To appoint a commissioner to take evidence in the city of Wheeling, or elsewhere, to ascertain and to report what is justly and equitably due said petitioner thereon, and if said report is approved by said Comptroller, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay such sum out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MACE. I have no objection to that; I will accept it.

Mr. MILLSON. The committee will see that I have changed the word "umpire" for that of "commissioner." An umpire is one who decides a difference between two arbitrators. There are no arbitrators in this case, and therefore I have substituted the word "commissioner." I have also provided that the commissioner shall go on and take testimony, and report to the Treasury Department. I object upon principle to this Government being bound by the decision of any commissioner. I think the amendment I have proposed is important. It directs the Comptroller to select a suitable commissioner to take testimony and report to said Comptroller. If he shall approve the report, then the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay the award.

Mr. COBB. I would suggest to the gentleman from Virginia, that he modify his amendment so as to make the Comptroller select, as commissioner, some officer now in the employment of the Government, who shall receive no extra compensation or allowance therefor.

Mr. MILLSON. I think it very well to leave the Comptroller full discretion in the selection of the commissioner.

Mr. COBB. Well, sir, I will move the amendment I have indicated. I move to add the following:

Provided, That the said commissioner shall be selected out of such persons as are now in the employment of the Government, and that no extra compensation shall be allowed.

My object is, that the Comptroller shall select this commissioner from those now in the employ of the Government, and thereby save the expense of an outside commission. I see no reason why he should not select such a person. He will be able to select one who is entirely competent, perhaps one who may have had this very subject under consideration at different times.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the gentleman know where Mr. Steenrod lives?

Mr. COBB. I do not.

Mr. MACE. I will tell the gentleman; he lives at Wheeling.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should then be very much opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia to appoint this commissioner at Wheeling, because the Comptroller might appoint some one interested in the case.

Mr. COBB. Well, sir, I hope we shall provide that some one shall be employed who is now in the employment of the Government. Let him report to Mr. Whittlesey, the Comptroller; and if he approves it, I have no objection to the amount being paid. I suppose there can be no objection to my amendment; and I would ask the gentleman from Virginia to adopt it as a modification of his amendment.

Mr. MILLSON. I have no objection.

The question was taken on Mr. MILLSON's amendment, as modified; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MACE. I now move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

BROWN, RUSSELL AND CO.

House bill (No. 189) "for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co."

The bill directs the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the claims of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co., for losses of oxen and wagons sustained in the transportation of military stores from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fé, and limits the amount to be allowed to $38,800.

Mr. MILLER. I do not know that it is necessary for me on this occasion to enter into an explanation of the facts involved in this case, as it may be in the memory of members who heard the report read at the Clerk's table when the bill was up before on objection day. The case was then explained by my colleague, [Mr. Benton,] who reported the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill for the relief of these parties was reported on favorably by the Committee on Military Affairs of this House at the last session; but it was not reached on the Calendar. I believe that the report accompanying the bill meets with the approbation of the Committee on Military Affairs. Although I am not a member of that committee, still I have taken some pains to examine into the claim, and the evidence by which it is supported. I am satisfied that it is a highly meritorious claim, and one that ought to be speedily passed, that full justice may be done to the parties who have suffered so greatly in their efforts to supply our troops in New Mexico with necessary subsistence during the year 1850. The object of the bill, Mr. Chairman, is to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the claims for the losses sustained by these parties, and losses sustained under the most extraordinary circumstances. Every member will be satisfied, on reading the committee's report, that these losses ought to be reimbursed. The report is a short one; and as it is full, and to the point, if there be no objection, I ask for its reading, although it has been once read heretofore.

The report was then read by the Clerk, from which it appears that in the fall of the year 1850, an extraordinary necessity arose for forwarding military supplies from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fé. Owing to the lateness of the season, and the risk to be encountered in such a journey in the winter time, the acting quartermaster, Brevet Major Ogden, could find no persons willing, at any price, to undertake the service, except the memorialist and his partners, James Brown and John S. Jones. These persons entered into a contract with Major Ogden, acting on the part of the Government, to receive the supplies at Fort Leavenworth, with suitable means of conveyance, to be approved by said officer, and transport the same, "with all practicable dispatch," to Santa Fé. The contractors accordingly entered on the service with three trains, consisting of one hundred wagons, and upwards of twelve hundred head of oxen; and after a toilsome journey, and much exposure, arrived at a point about forty-five miles from Santa Fé, when they were stopped by a snow storm of extraordinary severity. Mr. Brown, one of the contractors, was in charge of the trains, and at this point left them, and went into Santa Fé, to report his progress to the officer in command there, and procure his assent to a suspension of the journey until better weather. Mr. Brown was taken ill on his arrival at Santa Fé, and died a few days after, in consequence, as was believed, of the hardships and exposures he had suffered. After waiting several days for Mr. Brown's return, the person next in charge went also to Santa Fé, and there finding his principal at the point of death, represented to the commandant of the post, Captain Easton, the condition of the trains, and the state of the weather and roads; and that it would cause great loss to endeavor then to proceed; asking, consequently, his concurrence in a temporary delay. This was refused by Captain Easton, in consequence, as is shown by his affidavit, and those of the clerks in the quartermaster's department, of the necessities of the garrison, and he demanded that the supplies be brought on immediately, and if not, that he would have them brought at the contractor's expense. The agent, consequently, returned to the encampment, and thence hastened the supplies through to Santa Fé. To effect this, it appears by the deposition of the agent, C. O. Jones, that he expended upwards of $14,000 in the purchase of forage, and in the hire of extra teams and men; and from sundry depositions, that nearly the whole number of the cattle belonging to the trains perished from the exposure. It also appears that, on the settlement of the estate of the deceased partner, (Brown,) the actual loss of the contractors in the transaction was a fraction less than $40,000. It is shown that these losses might have been avoided by a temporary delay at the point where the trains were encamped.

Mr. MILLER. The claim of these parties, as the committee will have seen by the reading of the report, grows out of a contract made with the quartermaster at Fort Leavenworth in 1850. That contract was made at a very late period of the season, for the transportation of supplies from Fort Leavenworth to Santa Fé, for the use of the army at the latter point. The distance, I believe, between the two points, is about eight hundred miles. The contract was made very late in the fall, and, as the report states, the services of no person could be obtained to undertake the transport of these supplies except the claimants, who had, previously to this time, served the Government in the same capacity. And I may be permitted here to say, that they are as energetic and enterprising men as any that were ever employed by the Government in the same service. These contractors were, as I remarked, the only persons whose services could be procured, or who would undertake the service at so late a period of the season. They undertook, by their contract, to transport the supplies to Santa Fé with all practicable dispatch; and, for the purpose of fulfilling their contract, they employed about a hundred wagons, with about twelve hundred oxen—making six hundred yoke. They arrived within about forty-five miles of Santa Fé, when they were overtaken by a snow storm, which was unusual and unprecedented, even in that portion of the country; and they had to take refuge in a gorge of the mountains for protection from the severity of the weather. While there, one of the contractors—Brown—and the only one of them that was then with the train—left the train, and proceeded to Santa Fé for the purpose of informing the officer in command of the troops there that provisions were within forty-five miles of Santa Fé, but that it was impracticable to carry them into Santa Fé without the loss of animals during the continuance of the severe stress of weather. The commanding officer at Santa Fé, seeing that the troops were in need of supplies, and particularly of antiscorbutics—as they were then suffering severely from want of that kind of provisions—acquired that the contractor should bring in the supplies at all hazards, although the contract was to carry them with all possible dispatch.

Mr. Brown was a man of great energy of character; and although he was willing to undertake the task, yet while he was still in Santa Fé, and before he could return to the exposure to the snow-storm which he had undergone and died. One of the agents who had been left in charge of the wagon train then went on to Santa Fé, and was ordered by Captain Easton to bring in the provisions at all hazards. Although he had had twelve hundred oxen to draw the one hundred wagons, still they were not sufficient to draw them during that storm; and he expended $14,000 for the purpose of hiring additional aid for the transportation of these supplies; they undertook the task, and proceeded to Santa Fé. But the consequence was, that out of twelve hundred oxen that had been provided for the transportation of these supplies, they lost every one but seventeen, making some eleven hundred and eighty odd oxen that had died from exposure to the storm.

There was another train engaged in the transportation of supplies to the same place, a few miles behind them, in a gorge of the mountain, during this storm. They remained there till it had passed, and subsequently went into Santa Fé; and the oxen used in that train were afterwards sold for beef, and at high prices. So that it will appear to the committee that the loss was occasioned by that order of the officer at Santa Fé, commanding these contractors to take the provisions into Santa Fé at all hazards.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I am impressed with the conviction that there is an important principle involved in this case, which ought not hastily to be adopted by the committee. I believe it to have been a very hard case for those contractors. They probably have met with a great loss; but the whole matter seems to rest upon this one fact, that, instead of abiding by their contract, they surrendered their own judgment to the officer in command at Fort Leavenworth.

Mr. MILLER, (interrupting.) There was but one of the contractors sent with the train, and he went on to Santa Fé for the purpose of advising the commanding officer that he could not get the provisions in. While there, he died from the effects of exposure during that snow storm. There was no contractor left with the train. There were only agents, who were ignorant of the terms of the contract. One of them went to Santa Fé, and the commanding officer required him to transport the train of provisions at all hazards.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I believe that I apprehend the case correctly. If I understand it now, that officer had no more authority over that contract than any individual member of this House. I wish to be distinctly understood, because it is an ungracious task to oppose any claim. These men were bound to fulfill their contract with the Government; and by that contract, as appears from the report, and from the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri, they were under obligation to take those supplies to that point in the time in which they did. But one of the contractors goes to the commanding officer, and he demands that the supplies shall be forthwith brought in. His demand had no more to do with the contract than the act of any other individual. The contractor was under no more obligation to pay any attention to his commands and directions than to those of any other man. And are the funds in the Treasury of the United States at the command of every military officer in our employ? Is it in the power of that commanding officer to involve us in an expenditure of $40,000? It strikes me not.

The whole matter seems to rest here: Had that officer the power to involve this Government in this unnecessary expenditure, contrary to the terms of the contract? If I am wrong, I wish to be set right.

Mr. BENTON, (interrupting.) I very cheerfully undertake to comply with the desire expressed by the member from Ohio in his last remark, that if wrong, he wished to be set right. I undertake to comply with that request, and to show him that he is about nine hundred miles wrong. [Laughter.] The gentleman says that these contractors yielded to Major Ogden, and surrendered their judgment to his, which they ought not to have done. Now, Major Ogden was at Fort Leavenworth, and with him the contract was made for transporting these provisions to Santa Fé. He inspected the train, with the burdened wagons, and the twelve hundred oxen, and judged them to be sufficient, and they went on their way. Now, we all know, that in the western country, on those vast plains, when there comes on a storm, no animal life can stand it, if exposed to it; and, therefore, when a storm arises, the effort is to get into a grove of wood, or into a gorge in the mountain—into a cañon—and there lie still until it has blown over. And woe unto those who are not able to get into the woods, or into a cañon. Men have perished; mules have perished. Fourteen hundred oxen perished at one time because they were not able to get to the woods.

When these storms come on you must get shelter; you must lie still until they have gone by. All this was foreseen; all this was known by Major Ogden, who made the contract, and by the contractors; and, therefore, no definite time was fixed within which they should reach the other end of the journey. Well, sir, they proceeded, and had reached within fifty miles of their destination, when this storm came on; and when they did what all persons under such circumstances would have been bound to do—they took shelter in a mountain gorge or cañon. And here let me say, that another train—I am not certain whether public or private—took shelter from the same storm near them. They watched until it had blown over, and then took their train into Santa Fé, and sold their cattle as beef cattle, after having done the transportation. And that would have been the result with these parties, if they had not been placed in duress, and been compelled to go on. One of the contractors went forward during the storm, to let the commanding officer at Santa Fé know that they were coming, and what stopped them. He lost his life in consequence of the exposure to which he was subjected. An agent then left the train, and went to Santa Fé. The commanding officer gave orders that these supplies must be there by such a time. The order of the commanding officer was peremptory for him to go on with the supplies; and he threatened that if the contractors did not come on, he would send out and bring the supplies in at their expense. Under these circumstances they were placed under duress; they were not able to exercise volition. They must either incur the enormous expense of being brought in by force, under a military escort, or go on at the risk of their lives. They proceeded, and lost their twelve hundred oxen, and $14,000 was the expense incurred in endeavoring to comply with this military order.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I notice by the report of the committee that these contractors agreed to forward the supplies with all practical dispatch. Now, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri—for I am sure, from his experience, he will be able to inform me—whether this commanding officer at Fort Leavenworth could change that contract in any respect?

Mr. BENTON. Nine hundred miles from the point! [Laughter.] The commanding officer at Fort Leavenworth did not change it, nor had he anything to do with the order. It was Captain Easton, at the other end of the journey—nine hundred miles off.

Mr. GIDDINGS. The gentleman does not comprehend me, or I do not comprehend myself. Do I understand the gentleman that the difficulty occurred in consequence of the commanding officer at Fort Leavenworth saying he would furnish other means of transportation, if the contractors did not go on?

Mr. BENTON. Not at all. Not at all. Remember that this road is nine hundred miles long. The course has two ends to it. [Laughter.] One end is on the Missouri river at Fort Leavenworth; the other end is on the Rio Grande del Norte at Santa Fé. At one end is Major Ogden, the quartermaster who contracts; at the other end is Captain Easton who commands. One sends the provisions, and the other is to receive them. Captain Easton sends out not to employ for transportation but to take possession of the supplies, and bring them in at the expense of the contractor. That is the point. I hope my friend is answered.

Mr. GIDDINGS. With great respect to the gentleman, I want to inquire of him whether the officer possessed that power?

Mr. BENTON. Which of them?

Mr. GIDDINGS. Captain Easton. Had he the power to transport these provisions at the public expense when the contractor was abiding by his contract.

Mr. BENTON. He had the precise power either to send out a military escort and take possession of them, or to hire men to go out, take possession, and bring them in.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Was that the contract?

Mr. BENTON. No, sir. It was no part of the contract.

Mr. GIDDINGS. That is what I want to get at.

Mr. BENTON. He is commanding officer, and judges of the necessity for supplies; and it is what he thinks necessary, under the circumstances, that he is bound to do to get them. That is the point.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Had that commanding officer any power to change the contract in any respect?

Mr. BENTON. I do not understand that any change was made in it.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Had he the power to make this Government liable for one dollar beyond the contract?

Mr. BENTON. Yes, sir. He is the commanding officer. He is responsible for the post. He is responsible for the protection of the post against public enemies, and for the preservation of the lives of the men. He is to see that provisions are furnished, and he is the judge of what the necessities require him to do. He cannot send to the Government here to ask whether he will do this or that thing. Right or wrong, he is the judge, and there is no appeal from his judgment. The thing has to be done at once.

Mr. GIDDINGS. As to the power of the commander to judge in regard to the lives of the men under him, I fully concur in what the gentleman has said; but what I wish to impress on the committee and the gentleman, with all deference to his greater experience, is, that the officer had no power to change this contract in any respect, or to make us liable to these contractors beyond it. If he had sent out and bought other provisions, we should meet his demand; but when he told these contractors to violate their contract, and they did so, the demand comes here in a different point of view. That is the light in which I view the question. I have no interest in this thing.

Mr. BENTON. Nor I either. I have no interest in it either.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM HANKINS.

House bill (No. 190) "for the relief of William Hankins."

The bill authorizes the Secretary of War to pay William Hankins $244 88, to be received in full discharge of all claim against the United States growing out of a contract made on 15th August, 1835, for the delivery of wood at Fort Johnston, in the State of North Carolina.

The report of the committee shows these facts: On the 15th of August, 1835, a contract in writing was made between the petitioner and Lieutenant J. H. Winder, acting assistant quartermaster, on the part of the United States, by which the petitioner agreed to deliver and cord in the woodyard at Fort Johnston, North Carolina, two hundred and thirty cords of the first quality oak wood, to be delivered as follows: fifty cords on or by the 31st December, 1835; fifty cords on or by the 1st March, 1836; fifty cords on or by the 1st May, 1836; fifty cords on or by the 1st July, 1836; and thirty cords on or by the 1st August, 1836; for which the petitioner was to receive $4 89 per cord. Hankins delivered the first fifty cords of wood, for which he received his pay. He delivered also fifty additional cords of wood, for which he has, as yet, received no pay. Lieutenant Winder having been relieved from duty at Fort Johnston, and Major Saunders appointed to succeed him, a disagreement arose between Major Saunders and Hankins, in consequence of which no further deliveries were made. The petitioner claims as due to him the price of the two hundred and thirty cords, alleging his readiness to comply with his contract with the Government, deducting the fifty cords already paid for; but payment is limited to the price of the second delivery of fifty cords, in reference to which there cannot be a reasonable doubt of his right to demand and receive payment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass. There is not a shadow of doubt that the payment of this claim ought to be allowed. If any information is desired by the committee in regard to it, I am ready to give it.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

SARAH K. JENKS.

House bill No. 195 "for the relief of Sarah K. Jenks, and the legal representatives of Hartshorn R. Thomas, in the matter of the brig Jane."

The bill authorizes and requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,503 to Sarah K. Jenks, the widow of Jonathan Jenks, deceased; and the sum of $2,179, in equal parts—share and share alike—to the legal representatives of Hartshorn R. Thomas, deceased, namely: the sum of $726 34 to Louis G. Thomas; the like sum of $726 33 to Edward K. Thomas; and the like sum of $726 33 to Joseph Sherner, guardian of the children of Samuel W. Thomas, deceased—amounting in all to the sum of $4,682.

The said payments to be a discharge in full for all liability of the United States for the loss of the brig Jane and her cargo, seized and destroyed by the Spanish authorities at Laguayra in the year 1812.

Mr. MACE. I offer the following amendment:

Provided, That said sum of money, nor any part of it, is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, unless there remains in the Treasury an unexpended balance of the fund appropriated to pay similar claims under the treaty with Spain of the 22d February, 1819; and if there should be any of the money not expended as aforesaid, the said Sarah K. Jenks is to be paid first the sum specified as due her, and the other persons next: And provided further, That in the passage of this act a precedent is not intended to be established, and is not established, to pay any similar claim or claims, or any part thereof, in any mode or manner other than herein indicated.

If the committee will listen to me for a few minutes, I will explain the character of the bill under consideration. When the matter first came before the Committee of Claims it underwent an elaborate examination, and a report was made recommending the passage of the bill which the Clerk has just read. The claim arose out of a class of cases connected with the treaty of 1819. After the committee made the report, they became satisfied that if they established a precedent which would go beyond the five million appropriation, it might in the end prove exceedingly disastrous to the Treasury of the country. I have therefore prepared an amendment, which expressly stipulates that no money is to be paid under the bill, unless there is a balance unappropriated of the $5,000,000 set apart by the treaty of 1819. I have examined the subject, and I believe there is a balance of about $1,900 remaining unappropriated under that treaty. I was unwilling, and so was every member of the committee, to establish a precedent for letting these claims in upon the Treasury of the United States.

The bill, sir, is simply this: Out of the sum of $5,000,000, which was retained for the purpose of satisfying these claims against the Spanish Government, or out of that portion of it which is unappropriated, the sum provided for in this bill is to be paid. The committee did not intend to lay down the precedent that any of these unsettled claims are to be paid out of the common Treasury of the country. Therefore I think that, under any view of the case, it is proper to pass this bill. There is no question of its being a just claim, and no money passes under it, except out of the unappropriated balance of these $5,000,000.

Mr. FLORENCE. My colleague [Mr. CHANDLER] is more familiar with the facts of the case than I am, but I desire merely to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether the bill reported by the Committee of Claims does not appropriate some $4,000? In that event, and if there is but $1,900 remaining in the Treasury applicable to this account, how can this sum of $4,282 be paid? If it is a just claim, we ought certainly to pass the bill without any such restrictions. At least this is the light in which the matter appears to my mind. In the first place, if we should adopt this amendment or proviso submitted by the gentleman from Indiana, it would render the bill null and void to all intents and purposes; because a bill making an appropriation of $4,200, subject to the restriction that it be paid out of a fund of $1,900, is an absurdity.

Mr. MACE. I will explain the matter to my friend from Pennsylvania very briefly.

Mr. HASTINGS. I think it would be better to have the report read.

Mr. MACE. Oh, the report is very long.

Mr. FLORENCE. It would take two hours to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASTINGS] insist on having the report read?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do; or else that the bill be laid aside informally. I do not think we ought to legislate on a subject of this kind without a thorough understanding of it.

Mr. MACE. I desire to explain fully to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to the committee, the reason why this report was first made, allowing the whole amount claimed, and the reason why the committee unanimously came to the conclusion to report the amendment which I, as a member of that committee, have offered. The claim was first adjudicated on under the treaty to which I have referred, and by which $5,000,000 were set apart to pay these claims. The commission which adjudicated these matters, allowed claims to the amount of nearly $10,000,000; and the consequence was, that the claimants had to have a pro rata allowance made to them—some fifty-nine cents on the dollar. There were a vast number of claims submitted to this court, of as much merit, perhaps, as any that were presented to a similar committee, and acted favorably upon—this claim among the rest.

Mr. BRIDGES. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana if the claim was before the Department?

Mr. MACE. This claim was submitted among the rest. The board adjudicated upon it, and at first allowed it; but subsequently, before they adjourned, they reconsidered it, and made an order, in which they say, in only one line, "this claim is disallowed," without giving any reason for that rejection. Now, the reason for the amendment which was referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is simply this: that if we were to make a precedent of this case for claims to be paid out of the common Treasury of the country, perhaps claims amounting to thirty millions of dollars, as meritorious as this, would be advanced and forced upon the consideration of Congress. The committee, therefore, came to the conclusion, that so far as the action of that board was concerned, in regard to all this class of claims; we would treat the adjudication as an estoppel to all claims of a similar character. Therefore, in the proviso, I have simply said that if any money remains unappropriated out of the $5,000,000, it shall be paid towards this claim, expressly stating in the proviso that it is not to be a precedent for the purpose of paying other claims.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wish to ask the gentleman how much money remains in the Treasury out of the $5,000,000 appropriated under our treaty with Spain, of February 22, 1819, to pay the claims against the Government of Spain assumed by the United States Government?

Mr. MACE. I believe it is about $1,900, all told. I would say, further, that, as a member of this House, and as a member of the Committee of Claims, I would not open the door for a single moment to let in a claim beyond the amount of the $5,000,000 appropriated.

I move that the bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. CHANDLER. I like the course of the argument of the gentleman who advocates the passage of this bill, so far as it goes. It gives us a gleam of justice to those who have a claim upon that fund. I do not see, however, why those claimants, whoever they may be, should have the whole of that $1,900, when I have, this whole season, been charged with the custody of a claim of nearly $500,000, which was adjudicated by that very board as just, and should have been paid. But, because the vouchers were not presented in season, it was cut off. This claim was also cut off, and yet these gentlemen are permitted to come in and ask for their money. If one dollar is due to them, every dollar is due to them; and we have no right to say to them, we will pay you the $1,900, and not the half million. We have no right to say that there is a little sum in one corner of the Treasury which you may have. If these parties are entitled to anything, they are entitled to more than that; and if they are entitled to anything, other parties, with equally as strong claims, are entitled to have as much as they are.

The gentleman who introduced this case here, has correct views of the rights of claimants upon the Treasury, but he is rather indistinct in his views of what is our duty toward those claimants. The gentleman knows I speak in no disrespect. But it is a growing right, an augmented intelligence, a gleam of day from the other side of the House, which leads us to hope that before long those who present just claims against the Government will not be thrust aside, because their claims are too large, or because they are too old, when they have been augmented by our delay, and have grown old by our refusal of justice. If this claim is just we ought to pay it, if it is unjust say so. There is no compromise principle, there is nothing in justice which is to be settled by halves. If the Government of the United States cannot pay, let it say so. It has more than once said so. If it will not pay, let it say so. If it pleases to set itself up in defiance of these claimants, let it do so. Let it stand in all the dignity of wrong.

But let not gentlemen come here into the House of Representatives, and say to these claimants: Here is a little sum left, if it will answer your purpose you can have it when we get ready to give it to you. Let them not say to the poor soldier: Here is a little tract of land which you may have when we get ready to give it to you. Sir, there are other claims growing out of this treaty; and you might as well take this $1,900, and divide it into nineteen hundred shares, and let every man take his dollar and go home. There would be as much justice in such a course as there would be in that proposed by the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Let us do justice to every claimant, whatever may be the consequence. Though the Treasury may quake from its very emptiness, let us do right. Do not let a great nation, boasting of its greatness, say to its claimants, you shall not have what is right, but you must take what it is convenient for us to give. Sir, the gentleman from Indiana will do me the justice to believe that I do not speak disrespectfully of him. But, sir, I have a great disregard for the course of argument pursued by him in reference to this claim.

Mr. MACE. What I said in reference to this claim must have been misunderstood by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I stated that there are a great many meritorious claims growing out of the treaty of 1819, which have not been paid, for the simple reason that there was no money left of the appropriation set apart for that purpose out of which they could be paid. I will state the circumstances under which that amount was appropriated. By the treaty of 1819, between this Government and Spain, the United States agreed to appropriate $5,000,000 for the indemnification of American citizens, for losses from Spanish spoliation. That is all the agreement which our Government has made in reference to it. The $5,000,000 were appropriated, and have been expended, with the exception of the sum of $1,900. This Government has, therefore, fulfilled its obligations under the treaty, and it would be a violation of the whole policy of the Government, after having complied with the stipulations of the treaty, to assume such other claims for Spanish spoliation as may arise hereafter.

Mr. MILLSON. I merely rise to state to my friend from Indiana, that perhaps some members of this committee may derive a false impression from the statement he has made of the connection of this Government with this $5,000,000, which he says this Government set apart for the payment of these claims. Now, sir, I understand that the gentleman from Indiana simply means to say that the Government of Spain set apart $5,000,000 for the payment of these claims. The Government of the United States never set apart one cent for any such purpose. It was not bound to pay one of these claims. It stipulated with Spain to purchase Florida for a certain amount, and Spain consented that $5,000,000 of the amount which this Government agreed to pay, should be set apart for the payment of the claims of citizens of the United States held against that Government. And, therefore, although this money was taken out of the Treasury of the United States, it was in fact, appropriated by Spain for the payment of debts she owed to citizens of the United States.

Mr. MACE. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for stating the case much more clearly than I had stated it, and precisely as I would have stated it. He has stated it so clearly that I think there can be no mistake in reference to it. We do not propose to appropriate one dollar for the payment of this claim. We simply say that if any of the money, which was set apart for the purpose of paying these claims, is left, it may be applied to pay this claim.

Mr. HILLYER. I am satisfied by the explanation which has been given. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to say that a certain amount was set apart by virtue of the treaty purchasing Florida, for the payment of indemnity for Spanish spoliation; that the claims of our citizens have been adjudicated by a commission created for that purpose; that some $10,000,000 was passed on by that commission; and that this claim among the rest, was passed by that commission, but was subsequently, without explanation, rejected. The difficulty in my mind is this: The original amount set apart for indemnity to our citizens was $5,000,000, but the commission allowed $10,000,000 of claims. I do not understand, therefore, how any portion of this $5,000,000 can be now in the Treasury; that is, any portion to which this claim is entitled. If the amount the gentleman speaks of be in the Treasury and unclaimed, it must belong to those persons whose claims have been already adjudicated and allowed by the commission.

Mr. MACE. It appears from the testimony in the case, that fifty-nine per cent. was paid of the claims allowed by the commission, payable out of the $5,000,000, and that there was accidentally or designedly a balance left. That is the explanation I have in regard to this point.

Mr. MAXWELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no interest in this claim, and know very little about it; but I am unwilling to have the proviso put on it. If it be true that the claim is a just and meritorious one, and one which the Government is bound in justice to pay, let it be paid without fettering it with any proviso. If it be true, also, that there are other claims held by persons on whom depredations were committed by the Spanish authorities—other claims founded in right and justice, and which this Government, in duty to its citizens, is bound to pay, will you by this bill preclude the Government from so doing? I think it inexpedient and improper. Besides, what will be the merit or force of that proviso, if there should come another case before Congress found to be as just and meritorious as this one? Will that proviso have any force or effect to prevent Congress from passing on it just as we are now passing on this claim? That Congress will have as much right, not only to determine the merits of the case presented, but the propriety of the claim being paid, in case it should be found to have merit. Therefore I think that the proviso is improperly proposed, and I hope it will not be attached to the bill.

In reference to what has been said about the $5,000,000 being exhausted, I have but little to reply. I know it to be the fact that there are drivers claims against the Government, which, if submitted to the gentlemen of the committee, would be found, I think, to be as just, meritorious, and deserving of our consideration as this one. Now, what is the Government to do, if such be found to be the fact? Will it turn these claims adrift? Will it tell these claimants that the Government only promised to pay $5,000,000, and that that being found insufficient, their just claims shall not be satisfied? You have cut off all connection between them and the Spanish Government, so far as the enforcement of their claims is concerned, and induced them to look to you for payment; and when they come here and show a good claim, that injury and outrage have been committed on them, that their property has been destroyed, and that for years, and long years, justice has been denied them, shall they be put back with such reasons? Will you turn round upon them and say that this amount is exhausted. True, you have a just claim; true, it is a claim that should be paid; true it is that the Government of the United States undertook to pay all these claims; but she limited herself to $5,000,000; and some other citizens who have been more fortunate than you appeared before the commissioner first, and have got a prior place for their claims upon the Calendar, and all the money is exhausted.

Mr. MILLSON. This is a very simple matter, if the House will only take the pains to understand it. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. MAXWELL] objects to the proviso, and he complains that the Government of the United States will not pay all the amounts that may be ascertained to be due to the various petitioners who preferred demands against the Spanish Government for wrongs done them some years ago. He says that the Government of the United States appropriated an amount too small to pay all these claims. Why, the Spanish Government would have been very glad to have made no appropriation at all. It was the Government, of the United States who tried to get from the Government of Spain as large an amount as possible for the payment of all these claims; and if seven millions of dollars could have been set apart, why, our Government would not have objected to it. On the contrary, our Government would have been exceedingly glad to have set that amount apart. If ten millions of dollars could have been allowed to be applied to the payment of these claims, it would have been so much the better, and so much the more agreeable to the Government of the United States.

It was not the Government of the United States that limited this appropriation. It was the Government of Spain that desired to restrict the amount to be deducted from the sum payable to her to the lowest amount. The Government of the United States had prosecuted these claims for years, but had prosecuted them unsuccessfully. It was very well known that the Spanish Government was not in a condition to pay these claims. It was poor and bankrupt, and not one cent of this money would ever have been paid but for the purchase of Florida, which furnished occasion to the Government of the United States to deduct from the purchase money the sum of five millions. The Government of the United States consented to give for Florida a larger amount than she would have otherwise given, merely to have the opportunity of deducting from the stipulated price the sum of $5,000,000 for the payment of claims due by the Spanish Government to our citizens.

Mr. CHANDLER. In the first treaty of 1819—for there were two—our Government tried, in offering to pay the $5,000,000, to pay as little as possible, and not as much as possible. "It is naught, saith the buyer; and when he is gone his way, he boasteth." They tried to make it as small as possible, and to pay as little as possible. But after that treaty of 1819, without any augmentation of the sum to be paid—$5,000,000—there was an immense augmentation of lands acquired, in fee-simple, from the Spanish Government.

Mr. MILLSON. What I mean to say is, that the Government of the United States would have been exceedingly gratified if Spain had consented that the whole consideration of the cession was to be paid to our own citizens rather than to a foreign treasury.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Government of the United States, the gentleman will perceive, in doing that, released Spain from paying any more to our people. The people did not authorize that, but in the exercise of the eminent domain, and of the right of sovereignty, the Government did so.

Mr. MILLSON. As to this matter of the Government of the United States releasing the Spanish Government from claims due to our citizens by that Power, I have no confidence in any such idea as that.

Mr. CHANDLER. Nevertheless it is so.

Mr. MILLSON. The Government of the United States cannot release Spain from debts due to our citizens. The Government of the United States can simply agree not to prosecute these claims. The Government of the United States can conclude not to make them the cause of war. The Government of the United States may agree not to trouble a foreign Government about such matters any further by continuing negotiations on the subject. But the Government cannot release a claim due by the Spanish, or any other Government, to any of our own citizens.

If the Government should undertake to do so, the citizen who has a claim is not bound by that action of the Government, but has still his claim against the Government by which it was originally due. It may be, and I doubt not it is the fact, that a foreign Government, being relieved from all apprehension of a war, gives itself very little trouble about unadjusted claims; but still the claim is no less good, as no authority resides in the Government of the United States to make such a contract. But however that may be, what I am endeavoring to show now is, that the sum of $5,000,000 was set apart for the stipulated purpose of being paid to citizens of the United States having claims against Spain. The Government undertook to adjust the claims not due by itself but by Spain.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Government assumed them.

Mr. MILLSON. And it agreed to pay these claims, so far as the money set apart for that purpose would satisfy them. That amount was $5,000,000. All that we had to do was to determine upon the several amounts due, and the individuals to whom they were due.

Now, sir, the Government of the United States appointed a commission for that purpose—a commission composed of some of the most eminent citizens of the Union. It consisted of Judge

White, of Tennessee, Mr. William King, and Governor Tazewell; and, I undertake to say, that a more illustrious board of commissioners never has been appointed since the foundation of the Government. It was a court of the last resort as to the amounts due. There was no appeal from its decision. This case came before the commissioners, and it was decided by them. It is true, as I stated just now, that at first they allowed the claim, but they subsequently reversed their judgment, and rejected the claim on the ground of want of jurisdiction, that claim not being, in their opinion, embraced within the terms of the treaty.

Now, sir, so far from rejecting the proviso, the grave question recurs, whether this bill should pass at all, in any shape. I am very decidedly of the opinion that it will be a very mischievous precedent to set, notwithstanding the disclaimer of all intention of establishing a precedent. What have we to do with this claim? By what right do we undertake to adjust it? Was it ever a claim against the Government of the United States? No, sir; it was a claim against Spain; and Spain stipulated with us that our commissioners should adjudicate that case; and Spain stipulated, by treaty, that the decision of these commissioners should be final and irrevocable. Now, the commissioners considered the claim, and rejected it. By what right do we undertake to decide the propriety of that allowance or disallowance? There may be a surplus of $1,900 left, and that, the Government may, in good faith, appropriate to the payment of unliquidated demands. But if it is to be appropriated to any persons, it ought to be appropriated to those persons who, by some unavoidable accident, could not come before the board. The claims which were unadjusted by that board, are computed to amount to $20,000,000. If we are to pay the $1,900 to anybody, do not let us pay it to an individual who laid his claim before the board, and had it rejected by the board.

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman remarks that $20,000,000 of claims were unadjusted by the board. Does the gentleman mean to be understood to say that they were admitted to be due, or merely that there were claims pressing to that amount?

Mr. MILLSON. I spoke hesitatingly on that point. I said I had heard that the amount of claims unpaid was something like $20,000,000. Of course I spoke of it as a conjectural amount, and as merely indicating that a large amount of claims were not satisfied. I did not refer to claims allowed by the board, but to claims rejected by the board, or never brought before them.

Mr. FLORENCE. Then I understand that the claims allowed by the board amounted to $9,000,000, the pro rata amount paid being fifty-nine cents on the dollar. The sum of $5,000,000 having been appropriated under that treaty, the fifty-nine cents on the dollar being paid, amounted to $9,000,000. Then the gentleman's information is, that there are $11,000,000 more.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not speak of it definitely. I am only stating that my general impression has been—not derived from any examination, because I do not know that I have made an investigation of the matter, at any time—but my impression has been that the claims not presented, or if presented, rejected by the board, amounted to $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. It is impossible to say what is the precise amount of the claims either not presented, or if presented, not allowed.

Mr. FLORENCE. As this matter is somewhat important to the decision which this committee may come to, I ask the gentleman if he knows whether this is the only claim, allowed by the board, outstanding, or whether there is a petition before any committee, either of this or the other House, asking indemnity under this treaty?

Mr. MILLSON. This claim was not allowed by the board; for if allowed, it would have been paid. It was first allowed; but that decision was afterwards reconsidered, and the claim was rejected, and we must take it for granted that the last decision of the distinguished commissioners is the correct one.

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman will allow me to refer him to the decision of the board, and to the statements which follow, so that the matter may be understood in this connection.

The extract is as follows:

"Tuesday, November 18, 1833.—The board met pursuant to adjournment. Present as before. The journal of yesterday having been read and confirmed, the board proceeded to pronounce on the following cases which had been set down for examination, viz:

"Numbers 1081 and 1100. Jonathan Jenks. Brig Jane Fosse.

"Upon examination of the testimony filed in support of this claim, the board are of opinion that it be allowed as valid, for the value of the vessel, for the expenses necessarily incurred in defending the property, and for the loss sustained upon the cargo.

"H. W. WHITE.

"WM. KING.

"L. W. TAZEWELL.

"Attest: T. WATKINS, Secretary."

Mr. MILLSON. It was hardly necessary for the gentleman to have read that extract, for I have already stated these facts. I stated that this claim was first allowed by the commission, and that they afterwards reconsidered that action, and rejected it upon the ground that it did not come within their jurisdiction under the treaty.

Mr. FLORENCE. But they have given no reason for it.

Mr. MILLSON. We have nothing to do with their reasons. We have no control over their decisions. There was no appeal from their decision. When they had given their decision it was sic volo, sic jubeo, stet pro ratione voluntas—thus, I wish and order; my will stands in the place of reason.

Now, sir, my friend from Florida seems to suppose that some great wrong has been done these petitioners. He complains that we will not pay them the amount due them. Sir, we owe them nothing. It was a matter left to the decision of the commissioners, whether Spain owed them anything. They came before that commission, and their claim was finally rejected. They had the same opportunity that all the other claimants had before that commission. They gave them a fair hearing. It was their misfortune that they were not able to furnish the evidence which was requisite to establish their claim before the commission.

But the gentleman seems to think the Government is bound to indemnify the citizens of the United States for all losses they may incur in consequence of depredations committed by foreign nations. Sir, why should it be bound? Does the gentleman suppose the Government is bound, whenever it may fail to obtain redress for injuries done to our citizens in foreign countries? Is the Government bound because it may not choose to go to war to redress them? Sir, the question of peace or war, is one to be determined by the sovereign power, according to its own will, and its own judgment of the momentous national issues that may be involved in it. There is no Government on the face of the earth that holds itself under an obligation to declare war, against its own will, against its own interest, merely because some of its citizens may demand that it should do so for the purpose of obtaining indemnities for losses sustained by them.

It seems to me, then, that this bill is founded upon a very questionable policy. I know nothing of the parties concerned. I know nothing of the individual hardships of which they make complaint. But I do know that if these claims can properly be preferred anywhere, if these demands can be made at all, they should be preferred against another power. We have nothing at all to do with them. They must be made against Spain, if at all.

Mr. MACE. I regret exceedingly that my friend from Virginia cannot support this bill, after this proviso which I have offered, shall have been adopted. Now, sir, I shall trouble the committee with but very few remarks upon the subject. I do not doubt the standing and integrity of the commissioners who were appointed to adjudicate upon these claims against Spain. This claim was first allowed by them, and afterwards disallowed, upon the ground that it did not come within their jurisdiction. The facts of the case, in brief, are these: Jonathan Jenks, some seven or eight years before the date of this treaty, took a cargo to South America. The cargo was confiscated by the Spanish authorities. He did not then present the claim against the Government of the United States, but prosecuted it before the Spanish courts.

The records show, that while the supercargo was waiting for two years, in order to get justice, the case went through all the Spanish courts. It was adjudicated by the highest judicial authority there, and something like $8,000 was allowed, and that, too, long before the treaty of 1819. As I before remarked, the commission, in the very face of the decision of the highest Spanish court, disallowed this claim. It set aside the solemn record of the court. As one of the members of the Committee of Claims, whose business it was to look into the decisions of the commission, I have examined this case. It is well for them that no reasons were given for their decision. I did not examine the reasons of the commission for allowing other claims, but it was a mere pretext on their part to set this claim aside because they had no jurisdiction over it. And it was only disallowed on the last day of the session.

But before the treaty of 1819, as I have already stated, the highest court of Spain adjudicated the case, and allowed something like $8,000. Now, justice to these claimants, who reside in the district of my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. FLORENCE,] even and exact justice to them, demands the payment of $8,000, with interest from the time of the adjudication of the Spanish court.

For the purpose of guarding, and placing the claim beyond all controversy, I offered the proviso which stipulates that no part of it is to be paid out of the Treasury, and that it is only to be paid out of any balance remaining of the $5,000,000.

Now, something has been said about other claims. I may use a lawyer's phrase, and say that there is a race of equities on the part of these claimants, to see who will seize first on this pitiful sum of $1,900. Well, so far in the race, Mrs. Jenks has the lead of the rest, and she wants Congress to grant her this miserable pittance. The bill will settle no precedent, nor will it operate injuriously hereafter. I regret that I narrowed myself down to suit the gentleman from Virginia, and still find that he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. HASTINGS. I understand the gentleman from Indiana to state that the commission rejected this claim without assigning any reason for the rejection. By the report, I see that they did assign as a reason that they had no jurisdiction of the case; in other words, that it was not one of that class of claims intended to be provided for by the treaty.

Mr. MACE. And that was a beautiful reason. Now, what was the character of the claims to be adjudicated by the commission? Why, sir, claims which our citizens had against the Government of Spain growing out of spoiliations on their property. They had before them the adjudication of the highest Spanish court, that spoiliations had been made on Jonathan Jenks's property, and allowing something like $8,000.

Mr. MILLSON. Was this decision of the court made before or after the treaty?

Mr. MACE. I understand that it was made before the treaty?

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman will see at once that it was the interest of Spain to throw the whole burden upon the $5,000,000.

Mr. MACE. I trust, with the explanation I have made, that a vote will be taken upon the amendment, and that then a vote will be taken upon laying aside the bill to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. SKELTON. This case is one of too much importance to be passed over lightly by this committee. It involves a principle of perhaps more importance with regard to the financial affairs of this country than any question that has been before this body at this session. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] remarked that he was gratified to find that the other side of the House was awaking to a sense of justice. I do not know whether he intends to insinuate that our predecessors who have occupied seats in this Hall have been lacking in that essential element of character. I do not know that he intends to insinuate that the party to which I have been attached has heretofore turned a deaf ear to just claims; but we might be led to infer from his remarks that it was his intention. It is the duty of this House, when a question is presented here, and before we tax the people for the payment of the duties of an individual claimant, to examine and decide whether it is a just claim or not. It is not sufficient that members should get up on this floor and charge us with a want of desire or intention to render justice to others. I say such a course of proceeding is not satisfactory to me. We are here to guard the public Treasury, and not to allow a dollar to go out, unless the claim is proven to be a just one. I hope we shall hear no more of this cant about refusing to render justice to a claimant before this House, when the facts of the case have not been proven to our satisfaction.

I have not voted, nor do I intend to vote, a dollar out of the Treasury of the United States for claims, until gentlemen show me that they are just, and that the claimants have just demands against the Government. Away with this idea of illiberality and stinginess, in refusing to satisfy claims. We have correspondents of the press every year, proclaiming to the country that Congress is not willing to do justice to private claimants, until the whole country begins to believe that we are a set of rascals, and that we are not willing to pay just demands against the Government. Before I took my seat in Congress, I thought that a great deal of injustice had been done in this way. But since I have examined the subject, I am inclined to think that ninety-nine out of every hundred private claims which committees report favorably on, are without foundation.

But gentlemen say that time is not a bar to these claims. That is very true; but it is a bar generally against getting any proof against them. These old claims are almost always proven by ex parte evidence.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania tells us that there is foundation for the claim now before the committee, but has he shown us that Spain owed these men anything? He has not given us a particle of proof to show that Spain owed these claimants a dollar. Now, what is the effect of this?

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman appeals to my colleague, [Mr. CHANDLER,] and asks him what evidence is there that this claim is a just one. Now, I say to the gentleman from New Jersey, that any claim which passes through the crucible of the Committee of Claims of the House conveys to the country the best evidence of justice and right, [laughter,] and a favorable report from that committee is sufficient in the estimation of the House and of the country to justify us in ordering the amount to be paid.

Mr. SKELTON. I would say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that I want to have the proof myself that the claim is just. It is the duty of a Representative on this floor, to be himself satisfied upon the evidence presented to his understanding, and not to rely upon any committee of this House.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the gentleman will permit me—

Mr. SKELTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania may be satisfied himself with the report of a committee, but I am not. I do not see that he has any right to ask me to vote upon a question on grounds that are sufficient to satisfy him: for I have discovered that the amount of evidence which is sufficient to satisfy him of the justice of a claim goes very far from satisfying me. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman from New Jersey, who in his place here on the floor is reviewing my course, will at least, permit me, to justify myself.

Mr. SKELTON. Oh, certainly.

Mr. FLORENCE. When the gentleman from New Jersey asks my colleague to refer him to the evidence, I stand up here in this House, and before the country, and declare that it comes recommended by the Committee of Claims is sufficient for us. If there are gentlemen more conscientious, more disposed to do justice, more disposed to review facts closely and evidence critically, than are the Committee of Claims, I have yet to understand where the organization of such gentlemen is, whether they compose a committee or a legislative body. And I say that when this committee comes and presents anything to the consideration of this House, and asks for its action in accordance with that recommendation, I take it for granted that their recommendation is right, and I have so much confidence in them that I would always support it.

Mr. SKELTON. I can show the gentleman from Pennsylvania and this committee, that he is not always willing to take their recommendation. They have recommended an amendment to this bill; and he objects to this amendment, [laughter,] showing conclusively to this committee that he is not willing always to take their judgment in cases of this kind.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee of Claims have done any such thing as recommend that amendment. If I understand it—and I paid very close attention to the gentleman who reported this bill—he submitted the amendment on his own account. He submitted it because he conceived that it was a just claim, and that this was the only opportunity that had been given to get $1,900 in lieu of the full amount admitted to be justly due by the Committee of Claims. He submitted it because the impression on his own mind was that these people referred to in the bill, were entitled to it strictly, that they were poor, and that they could not come before the House, or before the commission appointed to adjudicate these claims, because the prosecution of it would be attended with the expense of having translations made, as I understand, for these Spanish evidences. That, sir, I suppose, is the reason why the gentleman, impelled by a sense of justice, offered this as an amendment, so that these people might get even $1,900 out of the $4,200 due to them.

Mr. SKELTON. According to the gentleman's own statement, these claimants have a claim against the Government of the United States to the amount which was deposited in the Treasury of the United States by Spain, and no more. This is the admission on their part, that the United States Government is not bound to pay any of these claims.

But with regard to the gentleman's remarks concerning the committee, I will say that I respect that committee. I have not a word to say against them. I probably have as much confidence in that committee as in any other committee of this House. But it is our duty, a duty obligatory upon us as the Representatives of the people, before we vote away the people's money, to satisfy ourselves individually that the claim for which we vote the money is a just one.

When we asked for the reading of the report in this case, in order that we might know upon what principle the claim was based, what was the reply we received? They said it was too lengthy, and we could not get through with it to-day. If it is so lengthy that we cannot dispose of it to-day, let the case go over until we have time to examine the report.

But, sir, in this claim, as in a number of other claims, there is a principle involved which is important to this good. The two cases which were passed by informally yesterday involved the same principles. We have now upon the Calendar of this House other bills appropriating millions of dollars for other kind of claims. I ask the committee if this Government is to be converted into a grand insurance company against fire, water, and depredations upon our commerce by pirates or foreign nations? Now, sir, let no gentleman in this Hall lose sight of the fact that the great mass of the American people are not engaged in commerce.

Mr. MACE. I rise to a question of order. I have no objection to the stump speech of the gentleman from New Jersey, but I want him to confine his remarks to the amendment under consideration. He is not doing that, and, therefore, I raised the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that by the rule he is required to confine his remarks to the amendment under consideration.

Mr. SKELTON. I am confining my remarks to the bill under consideration. There is no limitation to debate, by which I am obliged to confine my remarks on the bill to the amendment. But if I am not in order, I will make another motion, which will allow me to proceed. I move that the bill be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass. Is that motion in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The first question in order is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE.]

Mr. SKELTON. If the gentleman from Indiana, and those who advocate this claim before the committee, are intending to stifle discussion in the committee, let them stand up here and say so. In the light of day let them say so.

Mr. MACE. The gentleman has touched now upon the very point which I make. If he wishes to discuss the bill, I am willing that he should do so. But I want him to confine himself to the bill, and not wander upon other subjects, as he has been doing.

Mr. SKELTON. Does the Chair decide that it is not in order to discuss the merits of the bill now?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair makes no such decision. The Chair decides that the gentleman has no right to discuss the character of the Committee of Claims, or the French spoliation bill, or loss of goods by fire, or any other such question.

Mr. SKELTON. Well, sir, I was using those arguments because the arguments which apply to the one case apply to the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the discussion of the bill, before the House.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I should like to know whether it is not in order for the gentleman from New Jersey to comment upon the course of the Committee of Claims, when the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] was permitted to enter into a fulsome laudation of that committee? [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman from New York is entirely mistaken as to the character of my remarks. I only did the committee justice—simple justice—even-handed justice. [Laughter.]

Mr. SKELTON. I do not want to proceed out of order, and I want to know if the decision of the Chair is that it is in order to discuss the merits of this bill at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman can discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. SKELTON. That is what I wish to do. Then I am in order.

I said that the bill before the House, if passed, would send abroad to the world the impression that there was one class of individuals in this community who were entitled to indemnity for all their losses in all their enterprises and in all their engagements, while the great mass of the American people who are engaged in agricultural and industrial pursuits, who are entering into no speculations, and running no risks, should be made to pay these indemnities—they must be compelled to pay the losses incurred by risks of storms, by risks of war, by risks of fire, and by risks of water.

Sir, I want this committee to look into the subject. If this principle is to be established—as it will be established by the passage of the bill—I state to this committee that there are hundreds of individuals in my district who are better entitled to thirty or forty millions of dollars for losses sustained in the revolutionary war than are these claimants.

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) The Chair must state to the gentleman from New Jersey that he is wandering from the subject.

Mr. SKELTON. No, sir; I am not wandering from the subject.

[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion of the revolutionary claims of New Jersey is not in order at this time.

Mr. SKELTON. I was going on to make the application. I was going to show that the principle involved in this case was the same as that involved in others.

Mr. ORR. If the gentleman from New Jersey pertinaciously insists upon disregarding the decisions of the Chair, I ask that the rule may be enforced, and that he shall take his seat until permitted to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine himself in his remarks to the question under consideration.

Mr. SKELTON. I do not wish to weary the committee, nor do I wish to prolong my remarks, and I will only add, in conclusion, that the very sensitiveness which is shown by this committee, the very dislike to discussion, is of itself strong proof that this bill ought not to pass; that it is one of those bills that cannot bear the light.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it would be in order to move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the motion of the gentleman from Ohio would be in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not make it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALSH. I thought that fact was indelibly impressed upon the mind of the gentleman after his experience in reference to the Nebraska bill. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not desire to discuss this bill, nor do I think there is any need of further discussion; for after the elaborate remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON,] I presume the members of the committee have made up their minds to pass the bill. [Laughter.] I will, therefore, only say, that I shall vote against the amendment, and for the bill.

One word, however, in reference to a remark made by the gentleman from New Jersey, in which he alluded to something said by me. When the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASTINGS] asked to have the report and accompanying documents read, I suggested that it would take two hours to read them, and that it would perhaps be well enough to go on with the consideration of this bill. I desire to say to this committee—

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I had no object in view but the saving of the time of the committee.

Mr. SKELTON. My point of order is, that if it is not in order to debate the bill in opposition, it is not in order to debate in its favor.

Mr. FLORENCE. I have said all I desired.

The question was taken on Mr. MACE's amendment; and it was adopted.

Mr. MACE. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the bill be laid aside indefinitely.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order.

Mr. WALSH. I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order.

Mr. WALSH. Well, then, I have a few words to say in regard to the motion of the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion on the motion, of the gentleman from Indiana is not in order.

Mr. MACE demanded tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORR and WALSH were appointed.

The question was taken on Mr. MACE's motion, and it was disagreed to, the tellers having reported—ayes 46, noes 81.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

GILBERT C. RUSSELL.

House bill (No. 196) "a bill for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell."

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay, or cause to be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Gilbert C. Russell, of the State of Alabama, $20,000, provided the same shall be received and receipted for by the said Russell in full satisfaction of all balance of claims and demands of every description in his favor against the Government of the United States growing out of, or in any manner connected with, the construction of the fort at Mobile Point, in the State of Alabama.

Mr. READY. As the report in this case is a very long one, I will explain the claim, and I think I can present it in such a manner that the committee will more readily understand it than by reading the report. The claim consists of various items, and the report discusses the claimant's right to these items separately. While the committee recommend one of them, they arrive at an unfavorable conclusion with regard to others.

This claim grows out of a contract entered into in 1818, between the Government and Benjamin W. Hopkins, of the State of Vermont, to erect a fort at Mobile Point, in the State of Alabama. Mr. Hopkins commenced operations, and made extensive preparations for prosecuting the work according to the contract, but shortly thereafter, in 1819, he died. His administrator made a contract with Samuel Hawkins, by which he transferred the benefit of the contract with the Government to Mr. Hawkins, who undertook on his part to comply with the original contract, as entered into by Mr. Hopkins. Mr. Hawkins proceeded with the work for a period of time, and then he sold out the contract to Gilbert C. Russell, the claimant. Mr. Hawkins, I should mention, had been recognized by the Government as the contractor, after his purchase. When Mr. Hawkins sold his contract to Mr. Russell, in addition to transferring it to him by deed, he also executed a power of attorney, constituting him his agent to prosecute the work in his name. The power of attorney was intended to meet the contingency of the Government refusing to recognize Russell as the contractor. The Government did refuse to recognize Mr. Russell as the contractor, but it recognized him as the agent of Hawkins.

Mr. Russell proceeded with a large and adequate force in the construction of the fort according to contract. After he had expended a large amount, and performed a great deal of labor, the Government, in October 1821, became dissatisfied, from some cause or other, sent a military force on the ground and wrested from him the work, taking into its possession all the materials, implements, stock, and everything connected with the construction of the fort.

Mr. Russell then applied to the Eighteenth Congress, praying to be remunerated for his property forcibly taken from him under the order of the Government, and destroyed or converted to public use; and for compensation for labor done and performed upon said fort. The matter was before Congress for two or three sessions. But at the second session of the Eighteenth Congress the Committee of Claims, through Mr. Elisha Whittlesey, reported in favor of the claim for large amounts, specifying, however, the particular items embraced in that allowance. And they reported a bill directing that the Third Auditor of the Treasury ascertain, by proof, the value of the property owned by the petitioner at Mobile Point at the time of its seizure; that he ascertain, by proof, the value of the labor performed by the petitioner towards the erection of the fort at Mobile Point, whether it was in erecting barracks, or in preparing materials for the further prosecution of the works at that place; and the sums, when ascertained, to be paid out of the Treasury. Said bill passed both Houses of Congress, and became a law on the third day of March, 1825.

In pursuance of this law, testimony was taken, under the directions of the Third Auditor; but in consequence of the difficulty of procuring all the testimony desired by each party, because of the distant points at which some of the witnesses resided, the Auditor was unable to arrive at satisfactory results.

The subject was therefore again brought to the attention of the Nineteenth Congress, at its first session. Additional testimony was taken, upon which, together with the testimony previously taken, the Committee of Claims reported in favor of the petitioner for the amount of certain specified items, amounting to $60,963 67½.

Mr. Whittlesey then stated in his report that there were materials and other personal property belonging to Mr. Russell at Mobile Point, at the time of the seizure, but that the evidence was too unsatisfactory as to the character and value of these articles to enable the committee to make an award in reference to them; and the claims in respect to this personal property were consequently suspended for further proof.

It is for the items, the claims for which were thus suspended, that the bill now reported proposes to make compensation to Mr. Russell. Since that time, and since the payment of the items then allowed by Congress, additional proof has been obtained; and the testimony of two witnesses—Isaac Chaffin and Lewis S. Coryell—has been taken, and is on file.

I will state the substance of their testimony. Mr. Chaffin was employed by certain contractors for the construction of fortifications at Dauphin Island, to superintend the making and delivering of brick and other materials for the fort at that place. He went to Mobile Point about the 10th of October, 1821, and staid there five or six days. He testifies that he and General Turner Stark (the latter is said to have died shortly afterwards) made an estimate of the value of the materials procured and delivered by Colonel Russell for the fortifications on the Point; that his estimate was $21,500, and General Stark's was about $25,000.

Lewis S. Coryell was in Washington during the session of the Thirty-First Congress, in 1851, and his deposition was taken by direction of the Committee of Claims. He was negotiating with the officers of the War Department, in 1821, for the contract to construct the fort at Mobile Point, which was after it had been decided by the Secretary of War to take the work out of Colonel Russell's hands. He went to Mobile Point to examine the works to be erected there, and everything connected therewith. All this appears from the voluminous correspondence printed with the report of the Committee of Claims, in the Eighteenth Congress, as well as from his deposition. To the third interrogatory propounded to him, as follows:

"Did you make an estimate of the loose property at the Point, consisting of tools, implements, wagons, carts, &c.?"

He answers:

"I did make an estimate of the loose property at the Point, at Mobile, Alabama, consisting of tools, implements, wagons, carts, &c., prepared to carry on and execute the work to be erected there, and it appears from the memorandum now in my possession, made at the time, in December, 1821, or early in January, 1822, that he estimated the loose property to be worth $20,000."

In reference to this witness Coryell, he appears to be a man of high character and intelligence, and well qualified to make an estimate of such property. It appears that the Secretary of War had great confidence in him, and was anxious to give him the contract. He went to Mobile Point, and examined the work, and estimated the value of the property, at the special instance of the Secretary of War. He stands highly recommended by Hon. Samuel D. Ingham, a man who afterwards held a high official position, as this committee is well aware. This was a high indorsement of his character, and, in the opinion of the Committee of Claims, entitled his testimony to great consideration, and therefore the committee chose to adopt his estimate in preference to the estimate of Chaffin and Stark, which was a little higher. I believe, upon his estimate, that the claimant is entitled to be paid $20,000, it clearly appearing that articles, estimated at that amount, were taken possession of by the Government, and it also appearing, from the items specified, that he has never been paid for them. The former action of Congress upon this subject establishes the right of Russell to be paid for this property, taken possession of by the Government; and I consider the only question now to be, as to the amount which he is entitled to be paid for the property.

The testimony of a witness by the name of J. W. Wing, the agent of Russell, and superintendent of his operations, speaks to the fact that these are items of property which were taken possession of by the Government, and were not embraced in the report made by Whittlesey, as his report shows.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS C. GREEN.

House bill (No. 199) "for the relief of Thomas C. Green."

The bill, which was read, provides that the Commissioner of the General Land Office be required to issue a patent to Thomas C. Green for the southeast quarter section of section thirty-three, in township eleven north of range three west, in the military tract of Illinois, and that said patent recite the fact that the former one was filled out erroneously for the southwest quarter, and has been lost, and therefore a new patent has been issued to the grantee.

Mr. HUGHES. There is no report on this case, from the fact that the preamble or enacting clause of the bill sets forth all the facts that are necessary to enable the committee to understand the case. An error was made at the Land Office. A patent was issued for a southwestern quarter section of land, instead of a southeastern quarter section, so that there are two patents issued for the same tract of land. This bill is merely to authorize the issuance of another patent in lieu of the one erroneously issued. But, sir, I do not feel disposed to discuss the bill. I presume there will be no objection to it, and I therefore move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

VICTOR MORASS.

Senate bill (No. 76) "authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere."

The bill was read. It authorizes Victor Morass to enter, without payment therefor, at any United States land office in the State of Michigan, two hundred and eighty acres of land, the same to be entered in legal subdivisions, and on any land subject to private entry at said offices, and not covered by any preemption right. That, before the said Victor Morass shall have the benefit of the provisions of the act, he shall file with the Secretary of the Interior, in such form as shall be prescribed by said Secretary, good and sufficient deed or deeds of release to the United States, executed by himself, and all persons having rights thereto through or under him, of all the premises which were confirmed to said Morass by "An act to confirm certain claims to lands in the Territory of Michigan," approved April 17, 1828.

Mr. NICHOLS. I will merely say that the facts are the same in this case as in that last before the committee. It is to allow the claimant to locate lands in lieu of those to which his title had failed. I move that it be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOSHUA KENNEDY.

Senate bill (No. 73) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased."

The bill and report were read.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased, out of any moneys not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $6,500, in full compensation for the destruction of property by the Creek Indians in the year 1813.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN PHAGAN.

Senate bill (No. 127) "for the relief of John Phagan."

The bill provides that there be paid the sum of $444 to John Phagan, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full payment for his services in taking charge of a delegation of Seminole Indians, and removing them from Florida to the country west of the Arkansas.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Chairman, in 1828 the policy of the Government was to remove all the Indians west of the Mississippi river. Captain Phagan was then the agent for the Seminoles. In the opinion of the Secretary of War, it became necessary that a delegation of the Seminoles should be induced to make a tour of the country west of the Mississippi for examination, with a view of making it their future home. The Secretary addressed a letter to Governor Duval, of the Territory of Florida, in which he said that if Captain Phagan, then a citizen of North Carolina, would accompany the delegation west, he should receive for his services two dollars a day; but if he declined, that he would pay any other competent person employed for that service by Governor Duval three dollars a day and necessary traveling expenses. Captain Phagan, on being informed of the contents of the Secretary's letter, consented to accompany the Seminole delegation to Arkansas. He was gone two hundred and twenty-two days, and on his return he presented his account for payment. It was refused payment because there was no law authorizing the service. This fact was ascertained by the Secretary after his order had been issued.

The Senate have passed a bill giving this claimant $444, the amount designated by the Secretary of War. The payment of this claim has been delayed for a number of years. It has passed one branch of Congress heretofore, and the Senate have now passed a bill giving him the compensation which ought to have been paid twenty years ago, but without allowing him interest. Although I believe interest should have been allowed in this case, I am willing to take the bill as it stands, and I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WOODBURY.

Joint resolution (No. 5) "directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, Maine."

The resolution provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent, and credit him with the entire amount paid to the heirs of Keziah Hartshorne, deceased.

The report was then read, from which it appears that the petitioner, as pension agent at Portland, Maine, pursuant to the directions of the Commissioner of Pensions, dated January 20, 1849, placed the name of Keziah Hartshorne, deceased, upon the pension roll for revolutionary services; and, subsequently, upon the presentation of the pension certificate, paid the amount therein specified to be due, to the heir of said Keziah Hartshorne, deceased. On the settlement of his accounts at the Treasury, for the first quarter of 1849, the amount of two years of the pension included in said certificate, viz: from the 4th of March, 1841, to the 4th of March, 1843, was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, on the ground that there was no law allowing a pension for those two years.

Mr. FLAGLER. If there is any doubt in the minds of the committee as to the equity of this case, the letter of the Commissioner of Pensions, which recites the facts more in detail, might be read. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN S. KING.

House bill (No. 238) "for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of John S. King, and that he cause to be paid to him the sum of eight dollars per month for and during the term of his natural life; said pension to commence from the first of January, 1853.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read.

It appears that the petitioner, John S. King, was drafted and mustered into the service of the United States at Knoxville, Tennessee, in November, 1814; that he served six months in Mobile and elsewhere, acting against the British naval forces; that on his return home, and before his discharge, he was seized with violent fever, and had to remain where he was attacked for some time; that the disease settled into his limbs, and crippled him from that time to the present, and that he is now totally disabled.

Mr. WALSH. I move to strike out the word "natural" in the bill, as being superfluous and ridiculous.

Mr. COBB. Tell us what effect your amendment will have.

Mr. WALSH. I want to have him paid his pension during his life; I do not care whether it is natural or unnatural. [Laughter.]

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM MOORE AND JOHN HASCALL.

House bill (No. 239) "for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall."

Mr. THURSTON. I move that this bill be passed by informally. The gentleman who reported it is not now in his seat.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I hope the suggestion of the gentleman from Rhode Island will be concurred in, for this is a bill in which I take some interest.

A MEMBER. The reading of the report may be satisfactory.

Mr. BAYLY. The reading of the report will not satisfy me. I am against the bill, and, as yet, I am not exactly ready to answer the report. I beg, therefore, that the bill may be passed over informally. Besides, it is one of these patent cases, requiring the Commissioner of Patents to do what the law does not now authorize. In such a case as this I ask that the bill be passed over till I have had time to investigate the facts of the case.

[Cries of "Certainly!" "Certainly!"]

The bill was passed over informally.

EZRA WILLIAMS.

Senate bill (No. 125) "for the relief of Ezra Williams."

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the claimant, Ezra Williams, the sum of $500 in full for his services, out of office hours, in putting an alphabetical index to the numerical register of warrants in the land bounty division of the General Land Office, under the direction of the late Commissioner, Richard M. Young.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire to state to the committee that when this bill was called up before I made an objection to it; but I am now satisfied that the bill ought to pass, and I withdraw that objection.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES COOPER.

Senate bill (No. 90) "for the relief of Charles Cooper."

The bill, which was read, provides that the proper accounting officer of the Treasury Department be authorized and directed to pay to Charles Cooper & Co., of Bangor, Maine, $300 in full for interest due to them from the United States, on a liquidated amount of $30,989 payable by contract, on the 13th day of August, 1850, and then duly required, but withheld until the 12th day of October following for want of an appropriation therefor.

Mr. WALSH. I object to that bill; it proposes to pay interest.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I will state that this bill is precisely similar to one which has passed the House this session. It is not an ordinary claim for interest. It is for interest upon money which was due to these individuals under positive contract.

Mr. NICHOLS. There was a case, according to my recollection, precisely like this, presented in the House by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLIER,] where a contract had been made with an Army officer, by which a certain amount was to be paid. The claim for interest, however, was refused by the House, and the bill passed appropriating precisely the sum named in the contract, without any allowance for interest.

Mr. PECKHAM. I would inquire of the gentleman when this claim was presented to the Government?

Mr. WASHBURN. It was presented immediately after the money was due.

Mr. EDGERTON, (Mr. MACE temporarily occupying the chair.) This case is precisely similar to others which have passed the House. This Government made a contract with the memorialists at Boston, under which they were to transport a certain amount of lumber to San Francisco. These parties fulfilled their contract, and returned to Boston, and applied for the payment of the amount agreed upon. The officer at San Francisco certified that the contract had been fulfilled; but when the memorialists applied for the money, there was no appropriation out of which it could be paid. The appropriation was not made until the 30th of September, and the payment was delayed until some time in October.

This claim is for interest upon this amount from the time the account was presented in Boston, having been certified to upon the fulfillment of the contract, until the time when it was paid, in October following. The only reason why the money was not paid was, that the general appropriation bill was not passed until the 30th of September. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the committee do now rise. I do not want this bill passed to-day.

The motion was disagreed to.

The bill was then laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES DUNNING.

Senate bill (No. 91) "for the relief of James Dunning."

The bill directs that there be paid to James Dunning $255 98, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full, for interest due to him from the United States on a liquidated amount of $13,472 62, payable by contract, on the 18th day of June, 1850, but withheld until the 12th of October following for want of an appropriation.

On motion by Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS S. J. JOHNSON.

House bill (No. 240) "for the relief of Thomas S. J. Johnson, of the Territory of New Mexico."

Mr. MILLER. I understand that some additional facts have been sent in by the Auditor, which may make it necessary to refer the case back to the Committee of Claims, and I therefore move that the bill be now informally laid aside.

The motion was agreed to.

OLIVER LEE.

House bill (No. 241) "for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Charles H. Lee, administrator, and Eliza Lee, administratrix, of the estate of Oliver Lee, deceased, late of the city of Buffalo, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $580 32, the amount of a judgment recovered against Pierre A. Barker, formerly collector of the port of Buffalo Creek, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of New York.

The pending amendment was read, as follows:

Insert after the word "cents" the following:

"With interest thereon, to be computed from the 20th of August, 1844."

Mr. McMULLIN. I should like to know why we should pay interest on this claim. Let the report be read.

The report was read in extenso. It shows that Oliver Lee was the owner of the schooner Savannah. In January, 1838, she was seized by Pierre A. Barker, the collector of the port of Buffalo, by the direction or advice of General Winfield Scott, who was then in military command on the Niagara frontier, on suspicion of being employed in aiding the Canadian patriots contrary to law. Lee sued the collector before the supreme court of New York. In March, 1839, the United States district attorney for the northern district of New York was directed to defend the suit, by the Secretary of the Treasury, on behalf of the United States. He procured the renewal of the cause to the circuit court of the United States, under the act of Congress; a trial was had before the circuit court of the northern district of New York, in June, 1844, the district attorney of the United States appearing and defending the suit, and judgment was recovered, amounting, with the costs, to $580 32.

Mr. McMULLIN. It seems that it is a very small matter to occupy the time of the committee. Judgment was obtained against this collector. He has proved insolvent, and now the Government is called upon to pay this debt. I have no objection to paying it, but I do not think it is fair to come forward and ask interest. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the amendment; for without it I will vote for the bill.

Mr. COBB. I believe the gentleman who reported the bill is not in his seat.

Mr. HAVEN. I think we ought not to have any controversy about it.

Mr. COBB. If I was satisfied that interest had not been computed in the original report, I would be for paying it. We have no evidence that the committee took into consideration the length of time that the claimant here has been deprived of his dues.

Mr. HAVEN. I have no control over the amendment. A gentleman in a district adjoining mine has charge of the matter. The suggestion made by my friend from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.] is incorrect, from the fact that it appears by the report that the committee propose to pay the claimant the precise amount of the judgment according to the docket.

Mr. COBB. Then he ought to have interest.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

CHARLES A. KELLETT.

Senate bill (No. 139) "for the relief of Charles A. Kellett."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund to Charles A. Kellett, or his legal representatives, such sum as he had paid to the collector of the port of New York, as tonnage dues, on the entry of the Chinese junk Key-ling, provided the same shall not exceed $500.

The report of the committee was read.

It appears from the report that the said junk was brought to the country, not for purposes of commerce, but as an object of curiosity; that the expenses far exceeded the receipts of the said junk; that the object of Mr. Kellett in bringing it here was to benefit the cause of science, by producing to the western world a curiosity from the eastern; and, consequently, the committee think that the tonnage duties collected on her entry into the port of New York should be refunded.

Mr. WALLEY. This is the same report as made by the Committee on Commerce at a former Congress. The committee were unanimous on that occasion. The bill passed the House unanimously, but was lost in the Senate for want of time. This session the same bill that had passed the House has passed the Senate. All the facts in the case are contained in the report that has been read. There can be no objection to the bill. I therefore move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Massachusetts. It is whether this Chinese junk was ever out of the country? Whether she was not manufactured here, and whether Barnum, the humbug showman, was not the real owner? [A laugh.] Also, if the public authorities of New York had not to interfere to rescue the poor Chinamen, or rather the crop of mulattoes, palmed off for Chinamen, from the oppression of those who owned her? [Laughter.]

Mr. WALLEY. That is a question which it is out of my power to answer.

The question was then taken on Mr. WALLEY's motion; and it was agreed to.

JOSEPH MITCHELL.

Senate bill (No. 29) "for the relief of Joseph Mitchell."

The bill directs the proper officers to examine the claim of Joseph Mitchell, of Maine, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain, to bounty land and arrearages of pay and bounty, and to issue a warrant for such bounty land, and pay such arrearages as would have been due to him if he had received an honorable discharge on the expiration of his term of enlistment at the close of the war.

Mr. HIESTER. The report is short and satisfactory. I hope it will be read.

The report from the Committee on Public Lands was read.

Mr. WALSH. I have not the slightest doubt that this gentleman is all that he is represented to have been before he deserted. Calico Pete was regarded as an honest man until he committed his first hotel robbery; and Robert Schuyler was regarded as one of the most upright and honorable business men in the city of New York before his late fraudulent issue of stock. Now, what this man was previous to his desertion has nothing whatever to do with the fact of his desertion. If this bill is passed, it will be simply paying a tribute to a man who basely deserted the service in which he enlisted. I hope it will not pass.

Mr. HIESTER. When this matter is properly explained to the committee, I think they will have no objection to the bill. It is merely a bill to authorize the issue of a bounty land warrant to a soldier in the war of 1812, who was unjustly marked as a deserter. The evidence before the committee was this: Joseph Mitchell, the claimant, enlisted as an alternative, either for the continuance of the war, or for five years. By an inadvertence of the recording officer—and this is proved by the admission of the officer himself—he was marked as having enlisted absolutely for the period of five years, which would extend the time beyond the close of the war. At the termination of the war he left, under the other alternative of his enlistment. The books, by this error of the officer, exhibited him as having enlisted for five years, and he was consequently marked as a deserter. The evidence of these facts is the admission of the officer and the testimony of witnesses who were present at the time the contract of enlistment was made. The evidence was perfectly satisfactory to the committee, and authorized the conclusion that there had been an error committed, and that injustice had been done to this man.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think that we are exactly prepared to enter into the investigation of any difficult cases, at this late hour. The next case on the Calendar is one which requires some discussion. It has been discussed much in former years, has been rejected two or three times, and passed once or twice. The House is thin, and I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BRECKINRIDGE and COBB appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 31.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. EDGERTON] reported that a Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and that he was directed to report to the House bills of the following titles, without amendment, and with a recommendation that they do pass:

House bill (No. 189) "for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co.;"

House bill (No. 190) "for the relief of William Hankins;"

House bill (No. 196) "for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell;"

House bill (No. 199) "for the relief of Thomas C. Greene;"

Senate bill (No. 76) "authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;"

Senate bill (No. 73) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased;"

Senate bill (No. 127) "for the relief of John Phagan;"

House joint resolution (No. 5) "directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, Maine;"

House bill (No. 238) "for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia;"

Senate bill (No. 125) "for the relief of Ezra Williams;"

Senate bill (No. 90) "for the relief of Charles Cooper;"

Senate bill (No. 91) "for the relief of James Dunning;"

House bill (No. 240) "for the relief of Thomas S. J. Johnson, of the Territory of New Mexico;"

House bill (No. 241) "for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased;"

Senate bill (No. 139) "for the relief of Charles A. Kellett;"

Senate bill (No. 29) "for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;"

House bill (No. 182) "for the relief of Danie. Steenrod," with amendments; and House bill (No. 195) "for the relief of Sarah K. Jenks, and the legal representatives of Harts-horn R. Thomas, in the matter of the brig Jane," with a recommendation that it do not pass.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed "An act for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn," and joint resolution of the House (No. 7) entitled "A joint resolution of the thanks of Congress and the presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham," with an amendment, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

On motion by Mr. WALBRIDGE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James M. French be taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BENSON. An adverse report was made to the House yesterday in the case of Elijah Frye. It was afterwards discovered that a portion of the papers had been referred to one member of the committee, and the remainder to another member. Neither made out a case. The papers considered together, would, I think, make a good case, and I therefore move that the report and papers be again referred to the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RUFFIN. When I was absent this morning, in attendance on the special committee of investigation, application was made and granted for leave to withdraw the petition and papers of Mrs. Pennington. I had reported to the Committee of Claims, and that committee had directed me to report adversely on the case. I now wish to state that had I been in my place, I should have objected to the withdrawal of the papers.

Mr. SHANNON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported back Senate bill (No. 363) "for the relief of Jonas P. Levy and José Maria Jarrero," with a recommendation that it do pass; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that we may proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table, for the purpose of referring some bills from the Senate. It will not consume more than fifteen or twenty minute's time.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. ROWE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House thereupon (at three o'clock) adjourned till Monday, at eleven o'clock, a. m.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 15, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. CLAY and BENJAMIN the additional members on the Committee on Enrolled Bills, authorized by the order adopted yesterday.

CORRECTION OF A VOTE.

Mr. SLIDELL. I do not know that the Journal can be corrected as I wish; but I desire to state a misapprehension which I entertained about a question on which I voted yesterday. My colleague [Mr. BENJAMIN] offered an amendment to the homestead bill, by which children born in the United States were permitted to enjoy certain privileges, and to enter upon one hundred and sixty acres of land. As presented by my colleague, it was without restriction as to age. I was called out of the Senate Chamber, and in my absence he modified his amendment by restricting it to persons above the age of sixteen. If I had known the amendment was in that form, I should have voted for it. Under a misapprehension, I voted in the negative. I wish to make that explanation; and, if possible, I should prefer to have my vote corrected on the Journal.

Several SENATORS. That cannot be done.

Mr. SLIDELL. I understand that it is not inconsistent with the usages of the Senate, when the result is not changed by the correction of a vote, given in error, to allow it to be corrected. If it be so, I ask the privilege of having my vote recorded in the affirmative, instead of the negative, on that amendment.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be done by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of the heirs and legal representatives of Captain Thomas Dinmore, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSON presented a memorial of the compositors, proof-readers, and makers-up employed in the office of the Congressional Globe, praying to be allowed the same extra compensation as is allowed to the reporters of the proceedings of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

NAVAL DEPOT AT BEAUFORT.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the 26th March, 1853, in relation to the establishment of a naval depot at Beaufort, in North Carolina, with the accompanying documents and map or chart, be printed, and that three thousand additional copies be furnished, five hundred of which shall be for the use of the Navy Department, and that the map or chart be engraved and printed under the direction of the superintendence of the Coast Survey.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA BILL.

Mr. PETTIT. I am daily in receipt of letters requesting that official copies of the act providing for the organization of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska be printed and circulated. I am credibly informed that the copies published in the newspapers here, even though officially published, are denied all over the Union, as being authentic. I therefore offer the following resolution, and ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have it considered at this time:

Resolved, That there be ten thousand copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act, certified by the Secretary of the Senate, printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CHASE. I prefer that the resolution should lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the resolution being objected to, it must lie over.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitting estimates of the amount necessary to carry into effect treaties recently negotiated in the city of Washington with the Sacs and Foxes of Missouri, Delawares, Iowas, and Kickapoos; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 7th instant, information in relation to the improvement of the bar at the mouth of the St. John's river, Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHIELDS asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of Charles W. Carroll; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMANDER INGRAHAM.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, for the last five or six months, there has been lying on the table a House joint resolution "of thanks of Congress, and the presentation of a medal to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham."

The object is to bestow some testimonial on him for his gallant conduct in the rescue of Koszta at Smyrna. It was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs several months ago; but the Senator from North Carolina then wished to add some amendments to it, to which I believe there is now no objection on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It proposes to present the thanks of Congress to Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop-of-war St. Louis, for his judicious and gallant conduct on the 2d day of July, 1853, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment, on board the Austrian brig-of-war Hussar; and the President is requested to cause to be made a medal, with suitable devices, and presented to Captain Ingraham, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his valor, promptness, and judicious conduct on that above memorable occasion.

The President is to cause this resolution to be communicated to Captain Ingraham, in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects contemplated.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, the reason why I suggested that I wished to make some amendments to this resolution, was not at all because I was reluctant to do honor to the officer to whom the resolution refers, and who I think is eminently entitled to be distinguished by a proper vote of Congress on the occasion. But upon looking into the resolution, I found that by some oversight the precedents that had taken place in our history, had not been attended to. In the first place, I remarked that the highest testimony of regard which can be conferred upon an officer of the Army or Navy, entirely above even medals and swords, is the thanks of Congress. In the naval history of this country, the thanks of Congress have been given to naval officers but on three occasions, and those were to the commanders of squadrons—Perry and McDonough, on our lakes, and Commodore Preble for his extraordinary naval campaign on the Mediterranean. Neither Hull, nor Bainbridge, nor Decatur, nor any of those gallant officers who signalized themselves in doing honor to the country in single combats, ever received a vote of the thanks of Congress. I think, therefore, that, with regard to Commander Ingraham, he will have no reason to complain if the resolution puts him on a footing with Hull, and Bainbridge, and Decatur, and Jacob Jones, and other officers of that kind.

In the next place, Mr. President, the third section directs that these resolutions shall be communicated to this officer by the President of the United States, in such manner as he may think best calculated to give effect to the purpose of Congress. Now, sir, that has never been done in the naval service of the country, either to him who commanded a single vessel, or him who commanded a squadron. There are cases in which Congress have passed expressions of approbation in respect to officers who have fallen in the service of the country, when they have directed the President to communicate to the surviving relatives the condolence of Congress in the affliction which they, as well as the country, had sustained.

I propose, therefore, to amend the resolution in this way, which will put it precisely on a footing with the resolutions which Congress adopted for the officers I have named—Hull, Decatur, Jacob Jones, Bainbridge, and others. I propose to strike out the first section which contains a vote of thanks, to amend the second section by striking out all of that section after the word "President" in line three, and to insert the words which I send to the Chair; and third, to strike out the third section, which directs these resolutions to be communicated to Commander Ingraham. It will then consist of one single resolution, brief, direct, and equivalent to what was done in the case of the officers I have mentioned. After that is done I shall have an amendment to offer to the title. If the amendments I now propose be adopted, the joint resolution will read:

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States be and he is hereby, requested to cause to be made a medal, with suitable devices, and presented to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham, of the Navy of the United States, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on the 2d of July, 1853, in extending protection to Martin Koszta by rescuing him from illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian war brig Hussar.

The amendments were agreed to, the joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in, and ordered to be engrossed. The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed; and, on motion by Mr. BADGER, its title was amended, so as to read:

A joint resolution, directing the presentation of a medal to Commander Duncan N. Ingraham.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department during the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1855, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

LIGHT-HOUSE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for light-houses, light-boats, buoys, &c., and providing for the erection and establishment of the same, and for other purposes, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THOMAS K. GLENN.

Mr. RUSK. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn, to report it back without amendment. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it now.

I will state the substance of the bill. It is for the relief of a mail contractor who bid on two short routes. One he bid for at $300, the other at $125—one being shorter than the other. There is

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, JULY 17, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 111.

a letter accompanying the bill from the Postmaster General, which shows beyond doubt that in filling up the contracts, Glenn made a mistake and put $125 for the long route, and $300 for the short one. That is very evident. He endeavored to get a release, and notified the Department before he was required to execute the bonds, that he had made a mistake; and he now asks that the bid shall be corrected. This the Postmaster General does not recommend, but he has no objection to it. It was a clear mistake beyond all doubt, and he deserves relief.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Postmaster General to cause the account of Glenn, for carrying the mail from Raleigh to Roxborough, North Carolina, from July 1, 1851, during the time he has been engaged, and to the termination of his contract, to be settled and paid in such a manner as to correct an alleged mistake made in his proposals, if the Postmaster General be satisfied of the existence of the mistake; but the difference to be paid, with what he has already received, is not to exceed the amount of the next lowest bid, or $275 per annum for the performance of the contract.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business. I am satisfied that it will not detain us over five or ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

GEORGETOWN GAS-LIGHT COMPANY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The bill of the Senate to incorporate the Georgetown Gas-Light Company has been returned from the House with an amendment. If there be no objection the Senate will proceed to consider the amendment.

The amendment was to strike out the eleventh section of the bill, and insert the following:

Sec. 11. And he it further enacted, That each of the stockholders in the Georgetown Gas-Light Company shall be held liable, in his or her individual capacity, for all the debts and liabilities of the said company, however contracted or incurred, to be recovered by suit, as other debts and liabilities, before the court, or tribunal having jurisdiction of the case.

Sec. 12. And he it further enacted, That all the rights granted to the Washington Gas Light Company, by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Washington Gas-Light Company, approved July 8, 1848,' approved August 2, 1853," to lay gas mains or pipes in the city of Georgetown, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

PRIVATE BILL DAY.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the resolution of the 24th of January last, setting apart every Friday for the residue of the present session for the consideration of private bills, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

CHILI ASTRONOMICAL EXPEDITION.

Mr. BROWN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of having printed for the use of the Senate, ——— thousand copies of the observations of the United States astronomical expedition to Chili.

PAPERS RECOMMENDED.

On the motion of Mr. FOOT, the papers in the case of Mrs. Mary A. M. Jones were recommended to the Committee on Pensions, together with additional testimony, which he presented.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. STUART obtained the floor.

Mr. HUNTER. With the consent of my friend, I wish to submit a motion, that the Senate go into Executive session again. I will explain my reason when we get there.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate again proceeded to the consideration of Executive business.

After some time the doors were reopened.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. CHASE. There is a bill on the Calendar for the relief of Isaac Swain. The Committee on Claims have carefully considered it, and have allowed him about one third of his claim. In their report they are unanimous. I hope, therefore, the Senate will consider it now.

Mr. ADAMS. The only objection I have to that is, that I desire to dispose of the homestead bill to-day, so that it may not be in the way of other business next week, and I do not think we have more time left to-day than is necessary for the proper disposition of that bill.

Mr. STUART. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion, and let us take up the homestead bill, and dispose of it to-day.

Mr. CHASE. It will not take two minutes to dispose of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question, and no quorum voted.

Mr. STUART. I desire to make a suggestion. I wish to come to an understanding, if I can, with the Senate, and I should feel obliged if Senators would give me their attention for a few minutes. I think I am authorized to say that there will be no difficulty in agreeing upon an adjustment of the homestead question which will be satisfactory to a very large majority, and I hope to all, of the Senate. It is, therefore, then, a question as to time. If the Senate prefer that we shall take up the subject to-day, or on Monday, at half past eleven o'clock, with the general understanding that on that day we shall dispose of the question, I shall be very glad to do so, and now either allow any other business, of a private or a public character to be disposed of at this time, or adjourn.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the Senator will give those who are uninitiated the grounds of the proposed arrangement which will be satisfactory to all.

Mr. STUART. I would say that it is substantially a homestead provision, with the provisions of the bill of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] I think that a very large majority of the Senate, and, as I said, I hope everybody will agree upon these provisions in substance. In the details we may differ; but I hope we shall have no real difference in principle. It is substantially the provision of the homestead bill, with the graduation principles of the bill of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not so understand the provisions of the bill of the Senator from Virginia. If it is the homestead bill over again, I am against it for one.

Mr. STUART. Well, sir, I did not know that everybody would be for it. I said that I hoped, and I might say I believed, a majority of the Senate were for it. But what I wish to settle now is, simply the question of time—whether it is the sense of the Senate to proceed with the subject to-day, or have a general understanding to proceed with it to a vote on Monday.

Mr. BADGER. I think, with one modification, we may agree to the suggestion of the Senator. I think that his suggestion to take up the subject on Monday, and proceed with it till disposed of, is fair and reasonable; but discussion may arise which may make it inconvenient and unreasonable to take the vote on that day. The understanding may be that we shall take it up, and, if it is not disposed of on Monday, proceed with it on Tuesday.

Mr. STUART. Of course, I intended my suggestion to be with the qualification that we shall have a vote as soon as possible.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator allow me to say a word? It is right that I should recall to mind the fact, that I gave notice on a former day, during the present week, that I should ask for an Executive session on Monday, for the reason that we have Executive business of importance to act upon. I reserve to myself a right to make that motion.

Mr. STUART. The Senator will allow me to say that all our public deliberations are subject to the necessities of Executive sessions. With the understanding that we shall take up the subject on Monday, I shall defer calling it up to-day.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say a word to the Senator from Michigan before he takes his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion made by the Senator from Ohio is still pending. No quorum voted upon that motion. If there be a quorum now present, the vote will be taken on that proposition.

Mr. CHASE. As there seems to be an indisposition to take up this bill to-day, and for the purpose of accommodating myself to the evident wishes of the Senate, and further, for the purpose of allowing the Senator from Michigan to come to some understanding as to what is to be done with the homestead bill, and hoping that the Senate will indulge me in the consideration of this very worthy man's case on Monday, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Mississippi wished to make a suggestion to me. I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to ascertain, if I can, what we are about to agree upon; whether we are coming to an understanding that we are to take the bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia, which the Senator proposes to offer as a substitute for the present homestead bill, or whether we are to take the homestead bill with the simple alteration of the graduation clause in it?

I ask the question, because, if it be expected of me that I am to take the bill as introduced by the Senator from Virginia as an entirety, I wish to say to the Senator and others, that I shall have to consider that bill much more favorably than I have done thus far, before it can get my vote. I have very decided objections to it, and I do not want to come to any understanding that we are to take it.

Mr. STUART. All I mean to be understood as saying is, that it is substantially the provisions of the homestead bill, modified in its details to some extent to meet the wishes of the Senate, with the principle of the graduation bill of the Senator from Virginia. This is the substantial provision which we propose to try and agree upon.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I should like to know what this agreement is, and who are the parties to it? The Senator from Michigan has announced to us that somebody or other has settled the business for us; that we are to take the homestead bill mixed in hotch-potch with the bill of the Senator from Virginia.

I should like to know who settled that, and upon what authority the Senator undertakes to say that there is a large majority, or any majority of the Senate, in favor of any of the provisions of the homestead bill? I remain in utter ignorance of it, and all around me that I can find, are in the same condition.

Mr. STUART. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question now pending, therefore this discussion is all out of order.

Mr. BROWN. I would suggest to the Senator from Michigan to move to take up the homestead bill, and that will give him the opportunity to reply to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. STUART. In order to reply to the Senator from Delaware, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order, the homestead bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I now wish to say to the Senator from Delaware what I supposed I had said very distinctly before. I do not mean to say that there is an arrangement entered into by anybody upon this question, that is reduced to a certainty. I only meant to state that, from a very general conversation with Senators, I believed a very large majority in the Senate could agree upon the substantial provisions to which I alluded.

Mr. CLAYTON. What are they?

Mr. STUART. The homestead bill, probably with a price added to the land—a bill containing the possessory clause of five years, the patent to be received at the end of that time; with a qualification of persons, something in this wise: that if persons take lands under the homestead provision in a State, they must be such as are, or shall be, by the laws of the State, entitled to hold land in it; and in respect to the Territories such persons as are entitled now, by existing laws, to preëmp-tions.

Mr. CLAYTON. What price to be paid for the land?

Mr. STUART. A graduated price, such as is indicated in the bill of the Senator from Virginia: one dollar an acre for lands which have been in the market five years or more, seventy-five cents for those which have been in the market ten years or more, fifty cents for those that have been in market for fifteen years and more, and twenty-five cents for those that have been in market twenty years or more.

Mr. CLAYTON. Do you call that a homestead bill?

Mr. STUART. That is a graduation bill. I have now stated all that I meant.

Mr. DIXON. I believe there will be no agreement made here this evening on this question, and therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, July 17, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN], on last Monday, to suspend the rules, for the purpose of reporting from the Committee on Public Lands Senate bill No. 11, making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

OTHO HINTON.

Mr. CORWIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to release the bond or recognizance given for the appearance of Otho Hinton, now in suit in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio, and to disburse said suit, on payment of all the costs by the defendant, and upon such further condition, if any, as under the circumstances he may deem equitable.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CORWIN. I move to suspend the rules in order that I may introduce it.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion now pending to suspend the rules, and it can only be done by unanimous consent.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, it was Ordered, That he have leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of William Wheatley, in order that they may be returned to him.

THE LOPEZ EXPEDITION.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not inconsistent with the public interests, to communicate, at his earliest convenience, to this House, the correspondence between this Government and our Minister at the Spanish court, in relation to the Lopez expedition, and the persons engaged therein.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LILLY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the consideration of a private bill, that it may be put upon its passage.

Mr. EASTMAN. I object.

Mr. ELLISON. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, solely for the purpose of reference.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. McNAIR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution for the purpose of reference.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen upon both sides of the House notify the Chair that they will object to everything out of order. The question now pending is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN], to suspend the rules for the purpose of reporting back Senate bill

"making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in that State."

Mr. PERKINS. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

ley, Walsh, Wells, and Zollcoffer—70.

So two thirds not voting in favor thereof, the rules were not suspended.

EFFICIENCY OF THE ARMY.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to permit me to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, with a view to put upon their passage, the two following bills of the Senate:

S. No. 119. An act to regulate the pay and increase the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. No. 120. An act to promote the efficiency of the Army by retiring disabled officers.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to ask my colleague whether his purpose is to have these bills put upon their passage now?

Mr. FAULKNER. That is my object.

Mr. EASTMAN. I object.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Can we not have the bill read for information. I want to know what its provisions are.

The SPEAKER. The titles of the bills have been read. That is the usual course. One of them is very long.

Mr. PERKINS. What I want to know is, whether it is the number of troops that is to be increased, or the pay of the soldiers.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would remark, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that neither of these bills proposes to increase the number of regiments. The object of one of them is to increase the pay of the rank and file, as well as of the officers; and the other is to establish a retired list in the Army; both of which measures are deemed essential to the efficiency and good organization of the Army.

Mr. COBB. I wish to have the bill read. I may want to vote for it.

The SPEAKER. It is not usual to have a bill read on a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. COBB. Well, I may want to vote for it, and how can I do so intelligibly until I have heard it read?

The SPEAKER. The usual course is to announce the character of the bill by its title, and move to suspend the rules.

Mr. COBB. As I said the other day, the title does not always cover everything.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that as a matter of right the gentleman from Alabama can insist on the reading of the bill.

Mr. COBB. Then I suppose I have a right to read the bill myself while the vote is being taken.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the motion to suspend the rules, for the purpose of introducing and putting upon their passage the two bills.

Mr. COBB. Is it usual to take a vote upon the introduction of two bills at once?

The SPEAKER. It is not common to do so.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I call, then, for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order. It is in the power of this body to suspend its own rules for any purpose it chooses; and the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is designed to enable him to introduce and act upon the two bills.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I would inquire if it is competent to introduce two bills at once?

The SPEAKER. That is not proposed to be done.

Mr. JONES. I supposed it was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that it is competent for the House to suspend the rules, or otherwise to make two bills, or a number of bills, the special order for a week, or for two days, as was done in the case of the territorial bills. The Chair has no doubt about the rule upon the subject, and it is in order to move to suspend the rules for the purpose indicated by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. FAULKNER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 64; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, David J. Bailey, Thomas
H. Bayly, Banks, Belcher, Breckinridge, Bugg, Carpenter,

So two thirds not voting in favor thereof, the rules were not suspended.

DUNKIRK A PORT OF ENTRY, ETC.

Mr. FENTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee on Commerce a bill creating a new collection district in the State of New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and to constitute Dunkirk a port of entry. My object is to put the bill upon its passage.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. FENTON. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to report it.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then put upon Mr. FENTON's motion; and there were, upon a division—aye 114, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to; two thirds voting in favor thereof.

An amendment in the nature of a substitute was reported by the Committee on Commerce, making the counties of Cattaraugus and Chataque, and the harbors, rivers, and waters on the southern shore of Lake Erie, in the State of New York, west of, and including Cattaraugus Creek, and the shores on each side of said creek, and west along the shore and territory bordering Lake Erie aforesaid, to the Pennsylvania State line, and the islands in the said lake contiguous thereto, heretofore embraced in the district of Buffalo Creek, a collection district, to be called the district of Dunkirk. It also makes the port of Dunkirk a port of entry for said district, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek, ports of delivery.

The second section provides for the appointment of a collector for the said district, to reside at Dunkirk during his continuance in office, together with such subordinate officers of the customs as are provided by law, their compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, not to exceed $1,000 per annum. Provided, that in case no classification of collectors of customs shall be made, the compensation of the said collector shall be $500 per annum, together with such fees and emoluments as are authorized by law.

The third section makes provision for the appointment and compensation of deputy collectors.

Mr. FENTON. I move the previous question upon the engrossment of the bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know whether this is reported by a committee?

Mr. FENTON. It is recommended by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McMULLIN. I should like the report read.

Mr. FENTON. There is no written report in the case; but if the committee desire it, I will make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make his statement while the demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. FENTON. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, for the purpose of saying a word. The bill reported has the unanimous concurrence of the Committee on Commerce; it has the approval and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, and is not, I understand, objectionable to the honorable Representative from the Buffalo district, from which this is taken.

There can be no doubt of the propriety, importance, and even necessity, of the creation of this district, &c., in conformity to this bill.

Its important commercial relations, accelerated by the termination of the New York and Erie railroad at Dunkirk, its increased and increasing navigation interests, and its proximity to the Welland canal, sharing largely, it must be presumed, in the foreign commerce from that source, and now greatly enhanced by the negotiation of the reciprocity treaty: from these considerations I may urge, without impropriety, your speedy action in this case, and will be excused for asking your favorable consideration at this moment.

I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FENTON moved the following amendment to the title, and it was agreed to:

Add these words:
And the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek, ports of delivery.

Mr. FENTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ARMORIES.

Mr. DICKINSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee, to whom was referred the consideration of the change in the superintendency of the national armories be authorized to visit Springfield, in Massachusetts, and Harper's Ferry, in Virginia, during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of making such further examination into the subject matter of their inquiries, as may enable them to furnish Congress with the full and possible information before their final action in the premises."

Mr. WALSH. I object. We have had a select committee on mail steamship contracts in session for five months, without examining a single witness, and which now comes in with a white-washed report. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. I move that the rules of the House be suspended for the purpose I have indicated; and on that motion demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and KERR were appointed.

The question was taken; and the rules were not suspended; the tellers having reported—ayes 38, noes not counted.

LOUISIANA LAND BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Senate bill No. 8, entitled "An act making grant of lands to the State of Louisiana, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State," was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, but that committee has not yet had an opportunity to report it back to the House. I now move that that committee be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. JONES. I move a suspension of the rules for the purpose I have indicated, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken, and the rules were not suspended.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Belcher, Bliss, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Chastain, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Dent, Dowdell, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmunds, Edmundson, Ellison, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Kelt, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lindsey, Lindsey, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, David Ritchie, Rutlin, Russell, Seward, Simmons, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Walley, Walsh, Wells, Daniel B. Wright and Hendrick B. Wright—93.

NAYS—Messrs. Ball, Benson, Benton, Churchwell, Cook, Corwin, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Eastman, Thomas D. Eliot, English, Florence, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Henn, Hunt, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lilly, McCulloch, McDougall, McNair, Macy, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Parker, Peckham, Pennington, Puryear, Ready, Rogers, Rowe, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Yates, and Zollcoffer—62.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 95) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1855."

The pending question being on an amendment offered by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, to insert after the words "for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $250,000," the following:

Provided, That so much of all laws heretofore passed, which authorize the appointment of military officers to superintend operations at the national armories, be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and from and after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent and well qualified civilian as superintendent at each of said armories.

Mr. KEITT, who was entitled to the floor, yielded it to

Mr. VANSANT, who addressed the committee for an hour in opposition to the military superintendence of national armories, and in favor of Mr. STANTON's amendment. His remarks are withheld for revision, and will be published in the Appendix.

Mr. KEITT then took the floor and addressed the committee in reply to Messrs. STANTON and VANSANT, and in favor of the military superintendence. [See Appendix for his speech.]

Mr. BANKS obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island. Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to offer a very few remarks on this question. It strikes me that in our Government our great aim should be in all cases to keep the military and civil power as distinct as possible. They are antagonistic, however much we may attempt to disguise the fact. Military power is despotic and does everything by authority of command, and without reason. Civil power distributes itself; it leaves to every man his right to judge, and think, and speak, and act. And for this they should be kept as distinct and as separate as may be. And in the case before us, it seems to me that the change from the civil to the existing military superintendency was a wrong done to the entire mechanical interest of the country—a wrong perpetrated on its integrity and capacity, and should not be made without the most careful, deliberate, and thorough investigation. The change appears to have been made at the suggestion of military men who had an interest, and who accomplished it through the agency of the Secretary of War, without ever proceeding to an investigation of the matter, and without ever making any charges which would sustain them in making such change. That was the way the work was accomplished. This House refused several times after the matter was brought before them, to concur in the change, and it was only by the artful management of the gentlemen who annexed an amendment to the army bill, that it was finally accomplished. It never had the hearty concurrence of this House to carry it into effect, if I understand the matter. For that reason, it seems to me that we ought to consider this subject fully now, and see if there was any good reason for making a change of this kind, which will prove so degrading to the great mechanical interests of the country.

Mr. McNAIR. I rise to a question of order. I ask the Chair whether the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BANKS] has a right to yield the floor to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. DAVIS] to make a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts yielded the floor entirely to the gentleman from Rhode Island, and has put himself upon an equality with other gentlemen.

Mr. DAVIS, (resuming.) The great interest of this country, next to the agricultural interest, is the mechanical interest. Before that interest the military interest of this country is as nothing. The one is only partial, and to be used at specific times, as little as possible; for we should aim to prevent, as far as we can, the need of military power. They furnish the means, give the very ability to carry into effect the military power of the country, and, consequently, it should be made subservient to the civil power in all cases, except when it is called into the field in actual service. The agricultural and mechanical power is creative, while the military is destructive; and in that sense one is antagonistic and inferior to the other, inasmuch as it is nobler to create than to destroy.

But to come to the details of this matter. It is said that these shops produce arms under the military rule cheaper than under the civil rule. If I read the report of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON], right, this is not the fact. If it was so, any gentleman acquainted with the progress of mechanical arts for the last ten years, would have no difficulty in making out a case that they ought to manufacture them cheaper. The progress in the mechanical arts for the last ten or twelve years, during the military rule, has been wonderful in its results. There is ten-fold more produced by the same amount in some kinds of mechanical labor than there was ten or fifteen years ago, and these armories ought to produce arms cheaper now. But it does not appear that they have produced them cheaper, or as cheap, as when the armories were under the civil rule. You may rely upon it, that military rulers are incapable of going into, or the understanding, details of mechanics.

No man can doubt that who is acquainted with mechanics, and acquainted with the way in which these military matters are carried on. Military men never have to count the cost. They are simply employed as agents to do a certain thing, while a civilian or mechanic has to begin at the beginning, and see whether he can make both ends meet. One is generally the agent of the Government, and the other, before he becomes the agent of the Government, has had to go step by step in his own career, and ascertain what he can do with a limited amount of money, and what results he can accomplish. In this you will always find the unfitness of military men for accomplishing anything economically. It is in the very nature of their education that it should be so; and it is in the nature of the education of men brought up to business that they should connect means and ends together, and in this respect it seems to me that there is an entire unfitness in appointing military men to superintend civil business.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] has read us a report in justification of the removal of the civil superintendents, which was made immediately after the removals were made. These charges were made against the superintendent of these works, and that report was got up to justify the removal. But they should have been made beforehand, if there was anything in the facts to justify that act. I do not doubt that, like every other institution of this Government, that that one has been made to some extent, a political engine. It has been regulated by the Government. It is, I regret to say, a part of the system that every man who has a place from this Government shall be, to some extent, a political man. But I do not understand that mere military rule relieves us from that. I do not understand that a President, or any other executive officer, cannot as well direct politically through military men as through civilians. And so far as that charge is concerned, it may well be said to fall to the ground.

But the main objection, the deep objection, in my own mind, to the military system, is this: that the rule of military men is incompatible with the freedom which belongs to the civilian. And it is an insult to place over the mechanics of this country a mere military man. I should feel it an indignity, were I a workman in that shop, to have a military man come to me in the spirit in which military rule must always be carried on, and tell me to do this and to do that. The civilian or mechanic is the entire and perfect equal of the military man, and often his superior in useful cultivation.

Mr. KEITT. May I ask the gentleman from Rhode Island one question?

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. KEITT. I ask the gentleman whether he would feel degraded, if he were a military man, to be placed under an officer?

Mr. DAVIS. I can speak for myself. I never should be a military man if I could avoid it. I do not, for myself, believe in the military rule. I leave those who choose that kind of rule there to exercise it, without any kind of reason, or to submit to its exercise by superiors in rank. But I should feel degraded as a civilian, and I do feel the degradation of a portion of the constituency which I represent, if, in the progress of the business of other workshops of the nation, there should be military men appointed to rule over them. I think civilians better qualified to engage in all the business connected with workshops than any military man can be, unless he begins at the beginning.

Mr. KEITT. I would ask another question of the gentleman from Rhode Island, if he will permit me.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. KEITT. The question I ask is, whether the rules of the national armories are not precisely the same under the two systems; and whether, under the military superintendence, the mechanics are not subjected to the same body of rules as they were under the civil superintendence?

Mr. DAVIS. I say they have changed even that matter. The officers were changed as soon as the military men were placed there.

Mr. KEITT. I was speaking of the system of rules.

Mr. DAVIS. The system of rules were changed. As soon as the military officers got possession of those shops, there was a change made, and men were placed directly under the rules of military superintendents, instead of men who were answerable to the President for the exercise of their power.

Mr. KEITT. The rules were in force in one case, and they were not in the other.

Mr. DAVIS. I say the result of this whole matter lies in this: You had for nearly half a century these establishments carried on by civilians, and there is no evidence before this committee that the general result of that superintendence was not as satisfactory as that which has taken place for the last twelve years; nor that the arms were not manufactured as cheaply. And I ask, why was it changed without solid and substantial reasons? Why was the military rule introduced? The Secretary who made the change gave, as one reason, that he has nothing for those officers to do. I pray they should not be placed over the mechanical interests of the country, because those interests are paramount to the military; and, as a civilian, I protest against this rule of military men, except in their own exact position and sphere, whatever that may be, and I pray it may be as limited as possible, believing, as I do, that a great military power in this Republic tends towards its destruction, is incompatible with republican freedom, and republican right to speak, think, and act for themselves.

I say again, there has been no substantial reason given in this report why the change should have been made. I hope this House will take measures to have these civilians restored, and the military men left to their own proper sphere. The work was well and economically performed when they had charge of the works. The arms were as good as the improvements of those times would admit, and undoubtedly we shall have better arms twelve years hence than we have now.

Mr. STANTON, (interrupting.) I wish to say one single word here. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. KEITT] read from the report of Mr. Goggins, of Virginia, in reference to the perfection to which the military commandants had brought these arms.

Mr. KEITT. The gentleman is mistaken, for I read nothing from his report.

Mr. STANTON. It is quite immaterial from what he read. He read something in reference to the subject. Now, I wish to show to the committee, that as late as 1839, two years before the military change was made, the same perfection had been attained by the civilians, and the fact is reported to this House, under the sanction of the committee which had investigated the subject.

Mr. William C. Johnson, in 1839, from a committee to whom was referred the subject of establishing a national foundry for cannon, made a report, in which he uses this language:

"The system of machinery is reduced to such perfection that every part of a musket and rifle is made with such nice precision and accuracy that every screw or spring made for a given part or purpose will fit every musket or rifle that is made in each of the public factories. Take any part of a musket made in the Springfield factory, and it will be precisely, in every particular, like those parts made at Harper's Ferry. All the parts of two muskets may be taken asunder, though one be made at Harper's Ferry and the other at Springfield, and thrown into an indiscriminate mass, and there may be taken from the heap thus blended, at random, the component parts of a musket, and these put together; and the musket thus formed will be as perfect as precision can be, although half the musket be made at one factory and the other half at the other. The chief of the ordnance department has frequently tried the experiment with success. Hence a musket or pistol made in the public factories of the United States is almost indestructible; for, from the fragments of arms on a battle-field, a musket can readily be put together as perfect as when first made."

That was a report made by a committee to this House, and such is the conclusion to which they arrived.

Here, too, is the testimony of Captain Manadier, one of the Ordnance Corps, and I believe at present the chief of that corps. On page 61 will be seen what he says about the comparative quality of muskets:

"Judging from the inspection reports received from the armories, and from the satisfaction which the arms have given to those who have used them, there is no reason to believe that there were ever any arms of bad quality under either system."

This is the testimony of an ordnance officer; and how can it be said, in the face of this testimony, that the military superintendents have brought about these improvements, when it is shown that they were brought about in 1839, two years before the military men came into the superintendency of these establishments?

Mr. DAVIS. The gentleman has touched the very point I wanted to come at—and it is a very important one—that the machinery by which this perfection of manufacture was accomplished was in use two years before this military system was introduced. Now, if you will examine into the facts, you will see that that result was brought about by the civil superintendency, and not by the military system. Now, sir, the question for us to decide is, is there such substantial reason in favor of the civil superintendency as to justify the change? And how can we better decide that question than by relying upon the report of the commission appointed by the President to investigate the subject? I have examined the report to some extent, and it seems to me their investigation was thorough and complete; and made, as it was, by such men as Chancellor Walworth, Governor Steele, and Mr. Stevenson, of Virginia, it seems to me that you have all the testimony that you require. It seems to me that you are just as well prepared to act as you would be by repeating that testimony.

I say, therefore, that the object of this delay is not to obtain new light, but to retain these men a little longer in their places; which they have not obtained by fair, open, and frank means, but into which they have obtruded themselves without warrant.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that you shall preserve the military and civil powers of the Government separate and distinct. If this belongs to the civil department of the Government, let it go there. Give to the civil power what belongs to it, and to the military power what belongs to it.

Mr. SKELTON. I propose to offer a substitute for the amendment now pending.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman from New Jersey will allow me, I will move that the committee rise, for the purpose of going into the House, and fixing some time for closing this debate.

Mr. SKELTON. I will say to the gentleman that I shall occupy but a very few minutes with the remarks I shall make.

Mr. PECKHAM. I hope the debate will be allowed to proceed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not propose to interfere with the time of the gentleman from New Jersey, but to fix some time.

Mr. SKELTON. I will yield, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move, then, that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Chairman, in place of the provisions in the bill on this subject, which read as follows:

"For the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $250,000.

"For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry, $39,200."

I move to substitute these words:

That the manufacture of arms at Harper's Ferry and Springfield be discontinued, and that the Secretary of War be authorized to make contracts for the manufacture and supply of all arms which may be necessary to supply the Army and Navy; and that the sum of $200,000 be appropriated for that object.

I offer that as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. Chairman, I have listened with uninterrupted attention to the remarks which have been submitted to the committee, and am now of the opinion that both sides have each made out its own case. The objection to civil superintendency is, that under it the office of superintendent is a sinecure for political hangers-on; that the system is subject to great abuse, and is liable to all party fluctuations. On the other hand, the objection to military superintendency is, that it is one of tyranny and oppression, and not calculated for the government of the mechanics employed by the Government. We submit with great reluctance, in this country, to military dictation. There is no reason why a military man should be put to superintend either of these armories, other than the one stated by the opponents of the proposed change, which is, that by so doing the office of superintendent is withdrawn from the political arena, and subjected to party changes. These military superintendents, it is very evident, know nothing about the manufacture of arms, and have to employ actual mechanics to superintend the work.

Now, the amendment which I have offered is one which, in my judgment, ought to be adopted. I deem it sound policy for this Government to abstain from engaging in any of the industrial pursuits of the country. It should not manufacture any of the articles which can easily be obtained from the manufactories of the country. At the establishment of these institutions there may have been, or there was, a necessity for the Government to manufacture its own arms; but that necessity no longer exists. There are manufactories of arms all over the country. They are to be found in all the principal cities, and they manufacture arms equal to any turned out from the national armories. Indeed, sir, I understand that the manufacture of arms cost more in the national armories than in the private manufactories. From the latter they can be furnished cheaper by contract than from the former. We have evidence before us, showing that we can obtain arms equal in quality, if not superior to those made at the national armories by contract; and if that be true, besides the fact of their being purchased cheaper than they are made at the armories, I would ask the necessity for the Government engaging in the manufacture any longer? There is as much reason and necessity for the Government continuing its manufacture of arms, as there is for it to manufacture clothing and shoes, or to farm and grow the necessary provisions for the soldiers. Does anybody say that sound policy demands that we should engage in the manufacture of clothes and shoes for the Army and Navy? Certainly not. A proposal of that character would be frowned down by Congress. Then I claim that there is no more necessity for the Government engaging in the manufacture of arms than for it to engage in the making of clothes and shoes for the Army and Navy.

I think it time that the Government should be divested of all those powers which may be given to civilians. Its patronage is growing with a rapidity that is alarming to every true patriot. I look with alarm at the increasing patronage of the General Government, and I should like to see it divested of all power that can be legitimately dispensed with, and given back to the people, where it properly belongs. For these reasons, and many others which I will not detain the committee by repeating, because I did not rise to make a Buncombe speech, as I was charged with doing when I had the floor on Saturday last, I offer the amendment to this bill which has been read, because it is in accordance with the genius of our institutions, and calculated to promote the best interests of the country. I hope it will be adopted by the committee. We wish to get rid of this contest about the civil and military superintendence of the armories. If we do not adopt this amendment, this contest will still go on, and it will continue to agitate the country. If we adopt the principle embraced in my amendment, it will settle this question, and it will never again be brought into the Halls of Congress. I find that in this bill $49,200 are appropriated for improvements in machinery. In the calculation of the cost of arms we do not calculate the cost of these improvements, or the cost of the beautiful buildings which have been built by the Government for the accommodation of our military officers. We have none of these things included in the expense of arms. As I remarked before, when you come to sift this matter, you will find that arms can be manufactured cheaper and better outside of these armories.

Mr. BANKS obtained the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the committee rise, with a view of offering a resolution in the House to close debate.

Mr. BANKS. I have no objection to yielding the floor for that purpose.

Mr. McDougall. I desire to propose an amendment to this bill, which will require a longer discussion than can be had under the five-minute rule. It is a very important amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California cannot move an amendment now, for there is an amendment already pending.

Mr. McDougall. I am opposed to the motion that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting the debate, as I desire to be heard upon an important amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. Let us take the vote on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] if his object is to move to close debate on this bill?

Mr. HOUSTON. It is.

Mr. WALSH. This is an important bill; and if that is the object of the gentleman, I will vote against the motion to rise.

The question was put on Mr. Houston's motion; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Faulkner?]

Mr. BANKS. I do not understand for what purpose the gentleman from Virginia wishes the floor. I am willing to yield it to him if it is for a proper purpose.

Mr. FAULKNER. My object in seeking the floor is this: I presume the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] rises for the purpose of speaking on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton.] Now, I say that the House must first dispose of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. SKELTON.] This is now the pending amendment, and it must be disposed of before the question can be debated arising from the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair will remember that a resolution was adopted by the House, on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] restricting debate in Committee of the Whole to the immediate proposition before that committee. I therefore ask that the question be taken on the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey before this debate goes on.

Mr. BANKS. I do not desire to debate the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey, for I do not precisely understand what it is. But I wish to speak to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Banks] will have to confine his remarks to the pending question, which is the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BANKS. Then I propose to state a question of order; and I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey be read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BANKS. I raise the question of order, that that amendment is not in order at this time, inasmuch as the first proposition is one for the regulation of the armories for the manufacture of arms, and the second proposition being for the abolition of the armories altogether, cannot be in order as an amendment to the amendment, though undoubtedly it would be in order if the first proposition were disposed of. I desire to speak on the first amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. What is the objection to taking the question now on that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment to the amendment was offered by the gentleman from New Jersey without objection; and, in the opinion of the Chair, the point of order is made too late.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then why not take the vote now?

[Cries of "Certainly!" "Certainly!"

The question was taken on Mr. SKELTON's amendment to the amendment, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. BANKS then addressed the committee for one hour in favor of Mr. STANTON's amendment. His speech, withheld for revision, will be published hereafter.

Mr. BARRY obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. KEITT, who said: Mr. Chairman, with the simple remark that I did not abuse mechanics, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania,] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

COOSA AND TENNESSEE RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. COBB. Duty to myself and constituents, and the peculiar position I occupy in this House, admonish me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of a bill "granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee River Railroad, in said State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing." Four months ago that bill stood the ninth on the Calendar. In a few moments I cansatisfy every member of the necessity for its passage at this time.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. COBB. Then I move that the rules be suspended for the purpose I have indicated. I am not anxious that the motion for suspension should be considered to-day. If gentlemen desire an adjournment, let it go over to Monday next.

Mr. FLAGLER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to secure the unanimous consent for the Committee on the Judiciary to report a bill to which there is no objection. It is to fix the terms of the courts in New Orleans, and is intended to promote public justice. It enables us to try criminal cases at the proper time. There are now no fixed terms, and those observed are not legal. If this bill is not allowed to pass, objections will be made to indictments, and justice will fail. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw his motion to adjourn, and allow the bill to be reported, and put on its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. Can this bill come in while there is a motion for the suspension of the rules pending?

The SPEAKER, pro tempore, [Mr. ORR.] It can by unanimous consent.

Mr. FLAGLER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, in order that the bill referred to by the gentleman from Louisiana may be introduced.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, and by unanimous consent, then reported back Senate bill No. 377, entitled "An act regulating the time for holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States in the eastern district of Louisiana, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER. I now renew the motion to adjourn.

Mr. McDougall. I ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw the motion to adjourn, that I may have taken from the Speaker's table a Senate bill for the purpose of reference.

Mr. WALSH. I object, unless I know what it is about.

The question was taken upon Mr. WHEELER's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House thereupon (at fifteen minutes to four o'clock) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 17, 1854.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock, pursuant to a resolution passed on Friday last.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to the examination and survey of the route for a canal across the peninsula of Florida; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of inhabitants of Buffalo, New York, praying the reduction of the rates of ocean postage; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of citizens of the town of Bradford, and a petition of the men of Weston, Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the act of 1850, known as the fugitive slave law; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of citizens of the city and county of New York, praying the prohibition of the internal slave trade between the slave States of the Union.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the memorial of T. M. Balster, the widow of John Balster, who was killed at Charleston arsenal while in the discharge of his public duties, praying a pension, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. BELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of William Clark, praying relief for losses sustained under contract with the navy agent at Memphis, Tennessee, for the delivery of materials in embarkment in the navy-yard at that place, and damages for violation of contract by the agent of the Government, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, reported it back with amendments.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BENJAMIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Pierre Cazelow, deceased.

BOUNTY LANDS.

The bill introduced by Mr. ADAMS, on the 1st instant, to amend the several acts granting bounty lands, and for other purposes, was read a second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, requesting the Senate to send them a certified copy of the bill of the Senate for the relief of William P. S. Sanger, the original bill having been mislaid since it was received from the Senate.

Also, that they had passed a joint resolution from the Senate providing for the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson.

Also, that they had passed a bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones, in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESERVATION FROM SHIPWRECK.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the bill reported from the Committee on Commerce, "for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coasts of the United States," was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to establish such additional stations, on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, for affording aid to shipwrecked vessels thereon, to change the location of the existing stations, to make such repairs, and to furnish such apparatus and supplies as may, in his judgment, be best adapted to give effect to the objects of the bill, and also to give him authority to appoint a keeper, at a compensation not exceeding $200, at each of the stations to be established under the provisions of the bill, and a superintendent, who is also to have the powers and perform the duty of an inspector of the customs for each of the coasts mentioned.

No boat is to be purchased and located at any point other than on the coasts of Long Island and New Jersey, unless it be placed in the immediate care of an officer of the Government, or unless bond be given by proper individuals, living in the neighborhood, conditioned for its care and preservation, and its application to the uses intended.

The Secretary of the Treasury is also to be authorized to establish stations at such light-houses as, in his judgment, he shall deem best, and the keepers of the lights are to take charge, as a part of their official duties, of such boats and apparatus as may be put in their charge respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA ACT.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the resolution to print certain copies of the Kansas and Nebraska bill will now be taken up for consideration. I offered it on Saturday.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] objected to its consideration on Saturday, and I think he has an amendment to propose to it.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to say simply that the Senator from Ohio came over to me on Saturday, and suggested that he desired to amend it so as to cover, in the same publication, all the votes upon the various proposed amendments to the bill—the yeas and nays upon them—and the final vote, which would make a large book. I do not see any necessity for publishing them at all. There is no dispute as to how all the Senators voted. There is no necessity for publishing them; but there is a necessity for publishing what I propose. If the Senator from Ohio is not in his place it is not any fault of mine. The hour of meeting was fixed. The resolution ought to be, and I hope will be, adopted.

The resolution was read.

Mr. SUMNER. I must still suggest that the resolution lie upon the table until the Senator from Ohio comes in. There is no quorum present now.

Mr. PETTIT. Let it be passed over.

The resolution was accordingly passed over.

OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MASON. I now move that the Senate take up the resolution reported from the select committee, in relation to the organization of the officers of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. Since the report was made, I have, under the instructions of the committee, modified one of the provisions. The Secretary can read it as modified.

The resolutions were read as follows:

Resolved, That the compensation of the officers and persons in the employment of the Senate, from and after the 30th day of June, 1853, be as follows:

To the Secretary of the Senate, $3,000 per annum;
To the officer charged with the disbursements of the Senate, $400 per annum;
To the principal clerk, and the executive clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, each $1,200 per annum;
To eight clerks in same office, each $1,541 67 per annum;
To the keeper of the stationery, &c., $1,400 60 per annum;
One messenger, $900 per annum;
One messenger, $525 per annum;
One page, $416 67 per annum;
To the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper, $1,666 67 per annum;
To the Assistant Doorkeeper, $1,416 67 per annum;
And to persons in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, as follows:
Postmaster to the Senate, $1,458 34 per annum;
Assistant postmaster and mail-carrier, $1,200 per annum;
Two mail boys, each $650 per annum;
Superintendent of document room $1,250 per annum;
Two assistants in document room, each $1,000 per annum;
Superintendent of folding room, $1,250 per annum;
Two messengers acting Assistant Doorkeepers, each $1,250 per annum;
Fifteen messengers, each $900 per annum;
Superintendent in charge of Senate furnaces, $900 per annum;
Assistant in charge of furnaces, $500 per annum;
Laborer in charge of private passage, $500 per annum;
Two laborers, each $400 per annum;
Ten pages, two dollars per day each during the session;
Clerk or Secretary to the President of the Senate, $1,460 per annum;
One page appointed by the President of the Senate at two dollars per day during the session;
Provided, That the compensation of those messengers and laborers who were not employed at the commencement of the last fiscal year shall commence with the first day of the present fiscal year: And provided further, That in cases where a larger sum than is herein proposed has been paid during the last fiscal year to any person embraced in this resolution, the rates herein proposed shall commence with the present fiscal year.
Resolved, That it shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to classify the pages of the Senate so that at the close of the present and each succeeding Congress one half the number shall be removed. And in no case shall a page be appointed younger than thirteen years, or remain in office after the age of seventeen years, or for longer time than two Congresses, or four years.
Resolved, That the several officers and others in the departments of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed from office by those officers respectively as heretofore. But when made during the session of the Senate any such removal to be first approved by the President of the Senate, on reasons to be assigned therefor in writing by the officer making the removal; and when in the recess such reasons in writing to be laid before the President of the Senate on the first day of the succeeding session, and to be approved or disapproved by him.

Mr. MASON. The report, which shows the reasons actuating the committee, has been before the Senate for some time, and I presume has been read by Senators; so that the inducement of the committee to organize the corps of officers of the Senate as these resolutions propose, is before the body. I will only add that the committee were unanimous in their opinion. They had some difficulty, of course, in adjusting the scale of compensation and the tenure; but they were unanimous in every conclusion that was come to; and it is their general belief that the effect will be to give us an efficient corps of officers.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President; there are a good many points in this report to which I object, believing that it does injustice and wrong. I have read and examined the report, but have it not before me; therefore I have to refer to it from memory. The first that I notice is, that it devolves the whole power of appointment and removal upon the Vice President or the President pro tempore of the Senate. This I think is wrong, and burdens him with a duty that ought not to be imposed on him. I believe the Sergeant-at-Arms at all times will be more competent to judge of the fitness of the performance of the service and labor required from the various employees, than the Presiding Officer can be.

This makes the Sergeant-at-Arms the accusing party. He has first to file an indictment or information against one of the employees of the Senate under him, for whose action he is responsible entirely, before the Presiding Officer, and that officer is constituted a court to try the pros and cons, the whys and the wherefores, as to whether an employee should be removed or dismissed, and I presume the same thing will apply to the appointment. So far as it requires that course of action, in my judgment, the report is wrong.

I notice another instance in which I think it is wrong. That is, the requirement that no page shall be employed under thirteen years of age. There is, in my judgment, no propriety in any such requirement. Pages of ten or eleven years of age are just as valuable and serviceable on the floor as those who are thirteen or fourteen. I think it will operate harshly and oppressively on some of the boys in this city whom it may be desirable to encourage. I am opposed to it on that ground.

But, sir, there is a class of employees of the Senate harshly treated by this report. I refer to the clerks of the various committees. They are the only persons employed by the Senate whose pay, under the report, will not be as much this Congress as it was last Congress, for the reason that they are now allowed four dollars per day for their services during the session; and heretofore the Senate have been in the habit of adding $250 at the close of each session; but this report proposes to leave them with the four dollars a day, adding twenty per cent., which will together make a considerably less sum than they have been heretofore allowed. It will make over $200 difference in the two years. These employees are worse paid, in my estimation, than any others in the service of the Senate, and their interest ought to be looked to. I hold in my hand a memorial written in a large fine round hand, addressed by them to the Senate, which I send to the table, and ask to have read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the memorial, but had not proceeded far when he was interrupted by Mr. PETTIT, who said: At the suggestion of Senators around me, I will waive the reading of that memorial, and move to amend the resolutions reported by the committee, by making the compensation of the committee clerks five dollars a day. It is plainly shown in the memorial; that they are cut down, in the course of two sessions, over $200, and I do not think it fair.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, the position of the clerks of committees was considered by the select committee, and it was thought that they were officers necessarily temporary in their character. The committees, of course, are discharged at each session, and their clerks are discharged with them. It was the design of the committee, as will be seen in their report, to make the officers of the Senate a permanent corps, and the reasons for that are assigned in the report. The Senate itself is a permanent body, always in a state of organization, liable to be called together by the Executive separately from the other branch of the Legislature, and it was deemed important, therefore, that the entire organization of the Senate should be preserved through the year.

On the score of expense, the report shows that if, instead of retaining the salaries of all the officers of the Senate at the same amount heretofore paid to them, the resolutions of the committee be adopted, and the extra allowances be cut off, as we propose, there will be an actual saving to the Government of some six or eight thousand dollars per annum; so that the only objection to making them permanent is removed.

Then, as regards the clerks of the committees, it could not, I presume, be designed that those officers should be permanent, because, that they serve bodies which necessarily expire with each session. Their present compensation is four dollars per day, but a joint resolution has passed the House, is now before the Senate, and I have no doubt will be concurred in by the Senate, which, operating upon these salaries, will make them really within twenty cents of five dollars a day. It will make their compensation $4 80 a day.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does that apply to them?

Mr. MASON. I have examined it, and it clearly applies to clerks to committees. The effect of it will be to make their compensation $4 80 a day.

Mr. PETTIT. As far as I can judge from the report, it is not designed to cut down the former pay of the employees of the Senate, but the design is clearly to raise them all from the Secretary down through all the subalterns, and the Sergeant-at-Arms and all his subalterns. Their pay is raised by these resolutions, and the committee clerks are the only class whose pay will not be as much this Congress, by this report, as their pay has been heretofore. They have been paid four dollars a day through the session and two hundred and fifty dollars has been added to that every year as extra allowance, or extra compensation. Under this report, they will be paid four dollars a day, and twenty per cent. on this, which will make their compensation each session a little over $100 less than they have been heretofore paid.

Now, I want to know what reason, what justice, is there in this? Do clerks of committees find living here cheaper, while every other officer and employee finds it dearer; and while, as we ourselves know, our expenses are one third more than they have been heretofore? It cannot be otherwise with these men; and I regard it as an oversight on the part of the committee in not providing for them. The report, the memorial, and statements which I have here, clearly show what their pay for two sessions would be at four dollars per day, and adding $250 at the end of each session, and what it will be at four dollars per day and adding twenty per cent. The difference is over $200. I hope that when we are providing so amply and liberally for all the other employees of the Senate, we shall not cut down this meritorious class, and I therefore propose to insert five dollars instead of four dollars a day, in order to give them something like a fair compensation.

If you take the statements made in the report, you will find that it proposes to pay some of the assistants to the Secretary $2,100 or $2,200 a year, while what I ask for these committee clerks, for both years put together, will not amount to that sum. They are men as competent, as worthy, as faithful—men who have no other business during the recess to go to. Indeed, I might well add, that there would be great propriety in continuing them, or many of them during the recess.

I hope, therefore, the Senate will agree to the amendment which I propose, that the clerks to the committees shall be paid five dollars a day from the commencement of the session. Then, to that sum will be added the twenty per cent. proposed by the House joint resolution. The two together will bring them to something like the condition they formerly occupied, and bring them in the same ratio of advance that is given to the other employees of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. I do not intend to contest this question at all. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to increase the compensation of these clerks, I certainly shall not object. My impression is, that their present compensation is adequate to the service they perform; but if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana to make their compensation under these resolutions five dollars a day prevails, then the twenty per cent. which will be added will make their actual compensation six dollars a day. That will be the effect.

Mr. PETTIT. That will not make them equal by any means to some of the other employees of the Senate.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senator from Virginia will waive any objection to this proposition. It seems to me it is a fair and reasonable one, and it would have an ungenerous appearance, while we are raising the compensation of the other officers, actually to strike down the compensation to clerks of committees. Let us agree to this amendment, and then pass the resolutions.

Mr. TOUCEY. I hope the Senate will concur in the amendment now proposed. The clerks of the committees are about the most important officers of the Senate in reference to the transaction of business; and the compensation proposed appears to me to be very insufficient. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. I move to amend that portion of the resolution which limits the age of pages, by striking out "thirteen" and inserting "eleven" as the youngest age at which they can be employed.

Several Senators. Oh, no; it is too young.

Mr. PETTIT. Older Senators say that it is too young. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. RUSK. I move to amend the clause "fifteen messengers, each $900 per annum," by striking out $900 and inserting $1,000. Those messengers perform laborious services. I know very few of them; but those that I do know, who attend to the distribution of the documents around the city, certainly perform the most laborious services that are performed by the officers of the Senate.

Mr. MASON. In fixing the salaries of the officers of the Senate, like fixing the salaries of the officers of the Government, everybody knows that there must be a proper regard for the duties of the offices, and their grades. Now, you, of necessity, pay more for intellect, skill, and acquirements, than for ordinary labor; and the committee, in fixing the scale of salaries, for they are now salaries, have been governed altogether, first, by the attainments which the officer must have to discharge his duties properly, then by the responsibility, and then by the time occupied; and in doing so, they have preserved what was found in the Senate, a gradation in the pay of the officers, based upon those foundations.

There are twenty-three messengers altogether in the Senate. Eight of them (because they were found in the performance of their duties not proper to messengers, but above the ordinary duties of a mere messenger) have been taken by the committee, and designated by titles which will indicate their respective duties, and have had their compensation apportioned accordingly. Then there are fifteen, who are messengers only, in the discharge of ordinary ministerial services; and the committee have thought that a compensation which would give them annually $1,080, when compared with the scale of compensation outside of the Senate, was a very ample and abundant one.

A SENATOR. The resolution does not give them $1,080.

Mr. MASON. We do give them $1,080. I ask the Secretary to read that part of the resolution which fixes the pay of the fifteen messengers.

The Secretary read, as follows:

"Fifteen messengers, each $900 per annum."

Mr. MASON. Precisely; and then twenty per cent. per annum will make it $1,080. The Senator proposes to make it $1,000; and the twenty per cent. added to that would make it $1,200. That is utterly beyond the character of the services they have to discharge; and it will destroy the whole gradation in the scale of salaries fixed by the committee. The object of the committee has been to pay all the officers of the Senate well, and to have an efficient corps; but I would only say again that, if in this instance, and others of a like character, the scale of compensation is changed, you pay these men more than is paid to officers who discharge far higher grades of duties.

Mr. RUSK. I know but two or three of these messengers, and measured by the scale of intellect, they would be regarded as very meritorious. There is another thing which is just as important in an officer, and that is honesty; and upon that point I think they will compare with anybody. I know three or four of these persons who distribute documents. It is a most laborious business. It is constant, morning, evening, and night; and therefore the proper discharge of their duties is very important. I will do them the justice to say, that not one of them has spoken to me about the rate of compensation, or grumbled about it; but one or two of them are known to me to be men of families, and on $1,080 can they well support their families? The honorable Senator says it is their present pay; but you increase twenty per cent. upon the present pay of some persons who do not perform one tenth of the labor.

Mr. MASON. I desire to correct the Senator. These fifteen messengers are not permanently employed under the present regulations of the Senate. They are employed while the Senate is sitting and twenty days after; but now we propose to employ them permanently, and give them a salary. I have not said a word, and do not mean to say a word, against that class of officers. I know many of them; they are most valuable men in their position. I have no doubt they have abundant intellect; but if they have an intellect above their place they will find it desirable to employ it in some other avocation. That they are honest I do not doubt. If they were not so, they ought not to be here. I say not a word against them. They are valuable men; every one of them that I know is valuable. I am not aware of anybody in the employ of the Senate who ought not to be continued here. I repeat, they are valuable in their position, but if they have an intellect entitling them to pay higher than they get here, they can turn that intellect to a much better account by leaving here.

Mr. RUSK. The increase of compensation which my amendment proposes is only $120 to each of those individuals. More than that has been added to the committee clerks. At that I do not grumble, but if the Senate choose to employ these men, and refuse to give them an addition of $120 for such laborious services, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. BRIGHT. I dislike very much to interfere with this report. It is one that we have needed, and which we have been promised for a long time. I have no doubt that the select committee have reported a proposition which they deem just and equitable. I disagree with them in several particulars; but I believe I am willing to take the report as it is, so far as it regards the salaries, though I think the amount proposed to be paid to many of the officers is extravagant—yes, sir, very extravagant, compared with the amount paid to Senators and many other officers of the Government.

If the honorable Senator from Texas insists upon his amendment, I shall move further to amend by making the compensation $750 to the messengers during the short session, and $1,000 during the long session. I am willing to take the report as it is, in that particular. I am satisfied, on inquiry among Senators, that there is a majority disposed to adopt the present report. I cannot permit it to pass, however, without saying that I regard the amount proposed to be paid to all the officers as very extravagant. I shall, however, move, after the amendment of the honorable Senator from Texas is disposed of, to strike out the concluding resolution, on the ground that it is anti-Democratic, and ought not to pass this body.

The question being taken, on a division no quorum voted.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to have it understood that on the $900 proposed to be given by the resolution of the committee, there is twenty per cent. to be added, which would make $1,080 per annum to each messenger for nine months service during one year, and three months service another year. That is the practical effect of it. That is just the proposition which we are to vote on: whether we shall give $900, with the twenty per cent. on it, for services for three months one year, and eight or nine months another year. The Senator from Texas, not satisfied with giving $900, moves to make it $1,000, which would, with the twenty per cent., give $1,200 per annum to each messenger.

Mr. RUSK. I dislike to trouble the Senate again, but the honorable Senator has not stated the question fairly. As he states, these persons are to receive, according to the resolution of the committee, with the per cent. addition, $1,080 per annum. The amendment increases it only to $1,200. The honorable Senator says it is for services performed during eight or nine months one year, and three months another year. That is a mistake; and if the honorable Senator will look at it, he will see why it is a mistake. At the close of the sessions of Congress, all the documents ordered by us are not sent in. These persons are retained here, and at every session we make appropriations to retain them. They have charge of all the documents; and it is, therefore, very proper and very right that we should make them permanent; because, when they understand their duties properly, those duties will be much better discharged than if the position were assigned to persons coming to the city, serving out during the Congress, and then retiring. These are made permanent by the resolution itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No quorum voted upon the amendment; but there is evidently a quorum present.

Mr. BRIGHT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 23, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Brodhead, Brown, Clay, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Gwin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Sliedell, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, Weller, and Williams—23.

YAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Butler, Cass, Evans, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Stuart, Thombs, and Wade—15.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. As the salaries of the messengers have been increased, I think those of the mail boys ought also to be increased. The resolution proposes to give them $650. I move to strike out $650, and insert $750.

Mr. CASS. I would say that if you increase the salaries of the messengers, those who carry the mail ought to receive just as much as the others. I think they ought to have the same increase. They are appointed to perform the same service, and if you increase the one, you ought to increase the other.

Mr. MASON. That is the very inconvenience that I endeavored to bring to the notice of the Senate, as the result of changing the scale of compensation which has been arranged by the committee. Now, it is very certain that if there was any reason for increasing the compensation of the messengers, it applies as strongly to the increase of the compensation of the mail boys; and if we go on increasing them, we shall give them a compensation far exceeding anything which they could get outside of the employment of the Senate.

Mr. GWIN. The Senator has given the very reason why I have made the motion. If you increase the one, you ought to increase the other.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 23, noes 12.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the Secretary to read the last resolution.

It was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the several officers and others in the department of the Secretary of the Senate and of the Sergeant-at-Arms shall be appointed and removed by those officers respectively as heretofore; but when made during the session of the Senate, any such removal shall be first approved by the President of the Senate, on reasons to be signed therefor in writing by the officer making the removal; and when in the recess, such reasons in writing shall be laid before the President of the Senate on the first day of the succeeding session, to be approved or disapproved by him.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to strike out of the resolution all that which relates to giving the President of the Senate a supervisory power. I propose to leave the power of appointment and removal where it has hitherto been lodged, with the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms, and to make them responsible for selecting proper and faithful agents, without a supervisory power anywhere.

Mr. MASON. The resolution provides that the power of appointment in the Secretary's office shall remain with the Secretary, and the power of appointment in the Sergeant-at-Arms' office with the Sergeant-at-Arms; and that the power of removal shall remain with either officer in his own department; but it provides further, that if he does remove any one, he shall assign his reasons in writing, after he has done so, to the President of the Senate for the time being; and it provides, further, that the removal there shall be made subject to the approval or disapproval of that officer. Now, sir, I do not know how much the Senator proposes to strike out.

Mr. BRIGHT. All after the word "heretofore."

Mr. MASON. Senators who have read the report will find that the object of the committee was, and they thought it was in accordance with the judgment of the Senate, to make the organization of the Senate permanent, to have an efficient body of officers to assist them in the discharge of their public duties, and to remove from the Senate every inducement or desire to keep its organization unsettled by the introduction of new officers from session to session, or from Congress to Congress.

We know, sir, that the practice of the Government, in its various departments, has been, upon a new accession to power, to change all the subordinates, all the ministerial officers, not because they have been inefficient men, but solely and simply to put in others who wanted the places. It is to prevent the introduction of that practice into the Senate, that the committee have recommended the permanent character of the organization.

Sir, no Senator, who has been in the discharge of his duties here long enough to know the practice of the Senate, and what is required of Senators, can fail to be impressed with the exceeding importance to him, in the discharge of his duties, and to the public who are to be benefited by that discharge, of having a competent body of officers in the Senate, men who are trained and educated in the Senate, who know where to find what you want, how to give you information when you want it, and where to direct you to it. It is highly important to all the Senators, and more especially to Senators when they come here for the first time. The fear was, that unless the power of removal was in some way restrained, the officer having the power of appointment might at times feel himself coerced to remove some of the employees in his department to put in others who wanted the places, and who, ninety-nine times in a hundred, would be incompetent in the discharge of their duties.

It was for that reason, to keep the organization of the Senate permanent, that the feature was introduced by the committee; but if the Senator desires to carry out his idea properly, I suggest to him not to strike out the whole of the last clause, but only so much of it as makes the removal dependent upon the approval or disapproval of the Presiding Officer.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 15 noes 19.

Mr. RUSK. I desire to offer an amendment, which I presume will not be objected to. I see that, in the resolution, the clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, is designated by the word "principal clerk," and then we come to "executive clerk." I move to insert the word "principal" before "executive."

Mr. MASON. My impression, though I may be wrong, is that there is but one executive clerk by that name. If I am wrong, he may be called "principal executive clerk." The Secretary can inform the Presiding Officer how it is.

Mr. RUSK. It will do no harm to make the amendment, if there is only one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that there is but one.

Mr. RUSK. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. The object of the report of the committee was undoubtedly reform. I desire to offer another amendment which I deem it my duty to offer, though I cannot say that I have much hope that it will pass; but as it contains a principle, I shall insist on a vote upon it. My proposition is further to amend the resolution by providing that the Secretary, and the Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper shall be elected at the commencement of each Congress.

Mr. GWIN. At the first session of each Congress.

Mr. BRIGHT. At the first session of each Congress. I am against life estate in place. I do not intend to indicate by that that I am dissatisfied with any officer whom we have. I am not, for they are generally good officers. My amendment is to add:

At the commencement of the first session of each Congress, there shall be elected a Secretary, and Sergeant-at-Arms, and Doorkeeper by the Senate.

Mr. MASON. There may be reasons in favor of that proposition, but in my judgment, at least, the reasons against it are insuperable. These offices are valuable offices, not in emolument only, but in dignity. But they are valuable also in emolument in the eyes of office-seekers; and if the Senate determine to go into an election of these officers at each Congress, the effect of it will be, that those outside, who are seeking office, will consider it a proclamation for proposal, and they will come here and besiege the door of the Senate Chamber from all quarters, and their respective friends, to turn out the existing officers. Now, sir, I will not repeat what I said before, as to the great importance to the Senate of preserving an efficient organization. But what will be the efficiency if the principal officers, those who are responsible for the execution of the duties of all, are changed from time to time? I hope it will not be done.

Mr. BRIGHT called for the yeas and nays on his amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if the officers named in his amendment constitute all the officers who are subject to election by the Senate?

Mr. BRIGHT. They are the officers who, until the last four years, I believe, were elected at the opening of each Congress.

The Secretary proceeded to call the yeas and nays on the amendment, and Mr. ADAMS answered "yea."

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to make a statement before the vote is taken. I wish to say that I merely propose to reinstate a rule that has existed in this body from time immemorial until the last four years. It is to give to the Senators who come here the privilege of selecting their own officers.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senate will allow me to say that the Senator from Indiana is mistaken. The original rule of the Senate was otherwise, and was the rule which now obtains. It was altered, according to my impression, some twenty years ago, or more. For thirty years since the organization of the Senate the rule was as it is now, and the rule has been put back to the original condition of things. This is a proposition to depart from the original condition of things that now prevails, and adopt the intermediate regulation.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am responsible for the truth of my statement, so far as my memory runs back.

Mr. BADGER. Of course.

Mr. BRIGHT. As long as my memory runs back, the rule was as I have stated, until it was altered at the time I have indicated.

Mr. PEARCE. The Senator from North Carolina is undoubtedly right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is too late to discuss this subject now, as the call of the roll has commenced.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the amendment, resulted—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Brodhead, Cass, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Hamlin, Houston, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Shidell, Stuart, Sumner, Toucey, Walker, Welton, and Williams—21.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Hunter, Johnson, Mason, Pearce, Rockwell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thompson of New Jersey, Thombs, and Wade—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The resolutions were then adopted.

Mr. MASON. There is one matter which, I suppose, will pass, as a matter of course, after the adoption of these resolutions. I refer to the joint resolution of the House.

Mr. DAWSON. Is there anything in the report of the committee refusing extra pay hereafter?

Mr. MASON. The joint resolution fixes that. I am directed by the select committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution of the House of Representatives, in relation to fixing the compensation of the employees in the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits hereof, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to resolve that the officers, clerks, messengers, and other employees of the legislative department of the Government, shall be paid an increased compensation of twenty per cent. upon the compensation now received by them respectively; and the messengers of the House of Representatives shall not receive less than is allowed to the messengers of the Senate, of the same class; such increased compensation to commence from the 1st of July, 1853; and that a sum sufficient to pay the same to the 30th June, 1855, be hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but that no person whose compensation was increased by the act approved April 22, 1854, shall be benefited by this joint resolution. The usual extra compensation shall not hereafter be allowed to any person receiving the benefit of this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MASON subsequently said: There is a verbal amendment necessary in the resolutions adopted this morning in reference to the organization of the officers of the Senate, in order to conform to the existing appellation of one of the officers. The resolutions speak of "the executive clerk." I discover that it should be "the principal executive clerk." I ask unanimous consent to have the alteration made.

There being no objection, the alteration was ordered to be made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and constituting Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek, ports of delivery; in which they asked the concurrence of the Senate.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the motion which I submitted the other day, to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill to provide for the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or Missouri river to the Pacific ocean.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I trust the Senator from North Carolina will not press his motion; but let us proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill.

Mr. BADGER. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I do not move this with any view of interfering with the special order; but I felt it due to the friends of this measure, as I had moved its reconsideration, that it should be early brought to the attention of the Senate. I do not suppose it will give rise to discussion, but can be disposed of in a short time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I shall vote to give the homestead bill the preference over any measure that may be called up for consideration, and that has been my course since this measure was brought up for consideration. I desire to state, however, that I shall ask an hour of to-morrow morning, for the purpose of considering the bill reported from the Committee on Finance, providing for the distribution of the debt of Texas. I give this notice that Senators may be prepared.

Mr. BADGER. I will say further to the Senator from Iowa, that if this question shall give rise to such discussion as is likely to interfere with the homestead bill, I will consent to its being passed over.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I will not oppose the motion under such circumstances.

Mr. RUSK. The motion will evidently lead to some debate. The subject was considered for a considerable length of time, and the bill was passed; but if the motion to reconsider be agreed to, it will again become a subject-matter of discussion. I desire to say a few words on it myself; but I do not wish to encroach on the time allotted for the special order.

The motion was not agreed to.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA ACT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ADAMS in the chair.) The hour having arrived for the consideration of the special order, the homestead bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. As the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] who objected to the consideration of the resolution which I offered on Saturday, is now in his place, I ask that it may be taken up. I refer to the resolution to print ten thousand copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act, certified by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That can only be done by postponing the special order.

Mr. PETTIT. Then I move to postpone it for that purpose.

Mr. STUART. I shall have no objection to that, if it does not lead to debate.

Mr. PETTIT. It will not lead to debate with me, and I do not think there can be any.

Mr. STUART. If it leads to any debate, I shall ask to have it laid aside.

Mr. CHASE. I am in favor of taking up the resolution, unless the friends of the homestead bill press that. If they do, I shall go, as I have done all along, with the friends of that bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I have waived calling up this resolution two or three times in consequence of the absence of the Senator from Ohio; but now that he has come in, I hope the Senate will take up the resolution.

Mr. CHASE. I have no further objection to make to it, except so far as it may interfere with the homestead bill. I shall vote against anything and everything that interferes with that bill. I have suggested to the Senator from Indiana, that his resolution would probably be adopted without debate, provided he accepted an amendment requiring the publication of the several amendments proposed, and voted upon by yeas and nays, from time to time, which, I am assured by one of the clerks who has investigated the matter, will not make more than ten or eleven pages of the Journal, and is quite as important to the understanding of the whole matter as the bill itself. If the Senator will accept that, I presume the question can be taken without debate.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall not accept it. That will make a large volume, as I am told by the Secretary. It must necessarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. STUART. I understand the Senator from Ohio to signify his disposition to propose an amendment, and to discuss the resolution of the Senator from Indiana. In that event I shall object to taking up the resolution.

The motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. SIDNE WEBSTER, his Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act to confirm the claim of William H. Henderson and Robert Henderson to five hundred acres of land in the Bastrop grant;

An act for the relief of Juan M. and José L. Lucio; and

An act to authorize the issue of a register to the brig Amelia, by the name of Abby Frances.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. CLAY, as modified at the suggestion of Mr. SLIDELL, to insert in the sixth section, after the word "filed," the words "within sixty days from the passage of this act," so as to require unnaturalized foreigners to file, within sixty days, a declaration of intention to become citizens, in order to be entitled to the benefits of the act.

Mr. CLAY. I propose to withdraw that amendment. I understand, upon conference with some of the friends of this bill, that it has been concluded by them to offer an amendment to the entire bill, and if I am not mistaken in the intent and purpose of the friends of the measure, I can myself accept the amendment which they propose to offer in lieu of the bill. I understand that it proposes the principle of the graduation of the public lands, and will thereby obviate the necessity of considering the bill which has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands for that purpose. I understand that it proposes further to reduce the price of the public lands, which I earnestly desire to see accomplished.

I am told too that it proposes to cede the public lands upon certain conditions to the new States within which they lie, which I also heartily desire to see passed by the Senate. Hence, sir, approving the measure which I understand will be offered as a substitute for the bill now under consideration, I will withdraw that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment being withdrawn, the question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] to strike out the sixth section of the bill.

Mr. BADGER. Does the Senator propose to insert anything in lieu of it?

Mr. CLAYTON. Not yet.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Let the section be read as amended.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

"SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That if any free white person now a resident of any one of the States or Territories, and not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such acquisition for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen of the same before the issuance of the patent, as made and provided for in this act, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native-born citizen of the United States: Provided, That the benefits of this act shall not extend to the children, heirs, or devisees of aliens, born out of the United States, who are twenty one years of age, until they shall file their declaration to become citizens of the United States: Provided further, That foreign born persons who fail to become citizens within six years from the date of their declaration of intention to become so shall lose all rights under this act. And if any person of the age of sixteen years and upwards, born in the United States, shall, before arriving at the age of twenty one years, make application for the benefit of this act, he shall be entitled thereto: Provided however, That no patent shall issue in favor of such applicant before he shall have attained the age of twenty-one."

Mr. FOOT. Before the vote is taken, I desire to say that, on this question, I have paired off with the absent Senator from Arkansas, [Mr. SEBASTIAN.]

Mr. STUART. I wish the Secretary to read what is proposed to be inserted in place of the sixth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is now no proposition to insert.

Mr. STUART. Certainly the Chair decided the other day, and very correctly, that a motion to strike out and insert was not divisible; and that the question must be taken on the whole proposition originally submitted by the Senator from Delaware, to strike out the sixth section, and insert a provision in lieu of it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I withdraw the proposition to insert.

Mr. STUART. I believe that could not be withdrawn without unanimous consent, and that was not given.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir, it was given.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] was occupying the chair at the time, and I asked him myself if the amendment was withdrawn, and he said not.

Mr. CLAYTON. The proposition to insert was withdrawn three or four days ago, and the motion now is to strike out. I mean to offer another proposition afterwards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The recollection of the Chair is, that the Senator from Delaware signified his desire to withdraw that portion of his amendment which proposed to insert, at the same time giving notice that he would offer it again if the motion to strike out prevailed.

Mr. STUART. I recollect distinctly what occurred at the time. I was standing at the side of the Chair, when the Senator from Delaware made the suggestion. I inquired of the Chair if it was done. He said, no. I asked him if it could be done upon the motion of the Senator, without the unanimous consent of the Senate; and he said, no, because the yeas and nays had been ordered upon it. That is what occurred at the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not presiding at the time; but he is of the opinion that the question now simply on the motion to strike out.

Mr. BADGER. As to the suggestion, that after the yeas and nays have been ordered, it requires the unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment, it is certainly not so under the rule. That rule was amended to its present form while the late Vice President of the United States was our Presiding Officer. He decided the question when it once arose in the Senate. He held that the words "without leave of the Senate" applied to all the previous matter, and, therefore, if the Senate consented, it could be withdrawn if the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FISH. I desire to say that upon this vote and upon this bill, my colleague, [Mr. SEWARD,] having been compelled to leave the city, paired off with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COOPER,] My colleague would have voted against the amendment.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 19, nays 29:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Goyer, Hamlin, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Thompson of Kentucky, and Williams—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Aichison, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fressenden, Fish, Gillette, Gwin, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rockwell, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Tamm, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—29.

So the motion to strike out the section was not agreed to.

Mr. STUART. With an earnest desire to bring the consideration of this subject to a close at the earliest possible time, and after considerable consultation upon the subject, I propose to offer what I hold in my hand as a substitute for this bill.

Mr. BROWN. I object to the offering of the substitute, until the bill has been perfected by sections.

Mr. STUART. I have the right to offer it.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator has the right to offer it; but if a substitute is in order, I have already a substitute pending. I gave notice three months ago, and before any amendment was offered, of my intention to propose a substitute.

Mr. STUART. I certainly have the right to offer a substitute at any time when I can get the floor for that purpose; and then any Senator has the right to propose amendments to the original bill before the question is taken upon the substitute. There can be no doubt of my construction of the rules upon the subject.

Mr. BROWN. I wish, before the Chair decides that question, to recall to mind that more than two months ago I proposed a substitute to this bill, and sent it to the Secretary's desk, where I suppose it has been lying ever since. It is certainly in advance of the one which the Senator proposes this morning. A few days ago, too, I gave notice of the substitute which I had laid upon the Secretary's desk and had printed, and upon which I had the honor at some length to address the Senate. I think it has precedence of the substitute now proposed, which is not now in order, because it cannot be considered until we shall perfect the bill. I have a very important amendment here to offer to the bill itself.

Mr. STUART. This question of order, which has incidentally come up, may, I think, be disposed of very easily. The Senator from Mississippi, as he suggests, has given notice of his intention to offer a substitute for the bill. He has not offered it at this time. The Journals of the Senate do not show that he has offered it. He has only given notice of his intention to do so. Now, sir, I have the floor and propose to offer a substitute for the bill, and that certainly is in order. After it is offered any Senator can offer amendments to the original bill, and no matter how many they may be they must all be disposed of before the question is taken on the substitute. That is certainly parliamentary law, and according to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. BROWN. I respectfully suggest that all that the Senator can do at this stage of the proceedings, is to give notice of his intention to introduce the substitute. He cannot move it until we have perfected the bill, because if he does, all amendments must come in as amendments to the substitute. We have the right to move an amendment, and then an amendment to an amendment. If then the substitute be the pending amendment, the amendments offered must be to the substitute, and to nothing else. The Senator may file his notice of intention to do this, but he cannot do it until we have gone through with the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I believe it is the invariable practice of the Senate to move a substitute which is in the nature of an amendment. It cannot be moved as long as there is an amendment pending, but when there is no amendment pending, a substitute may be moved. That, however, does not take away the right of other persons to move to perfect the bill before the vote is taken on the substitute.

Mr. BROWN. Very well, go on.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, if the motion of the Senator from Michigan is entertained, I can then offer an amendment to the original bill?

Several SENATORS. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ADAMS in the chair.) The Chair will state what he understands to be the correct rule. The bill may be perfected by every amendment that may be proposed by a Senator. At any time that a Senator obtains the floor, he may offer a substitute, yet the substitute cannot be considered until all the amendments to the original bill are considered. Then, when that is done, the question of priority as to the substitutes will be determined by the Chair.

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand, then, that the substitute is introduced, and is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir; the Senator from Michigan has obtained the floor, and has a right to offer his substitute, but it cannot be considered until all other amendments which may be offered to the original bill are disposed of. When such amendments have been disposed of, the Chair will decide which substitute has priority.

Mr. BROWN. Then I wish to move an amendment to the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That cannot be considered now.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator has not got his substitute before the Senate yet, I withdraw it.

Mr. STUART. If the Senate will allow me a few minutes, I shall say all I desire to say, and yield the floor. I was about saying that, after considerable consultation with as many Senators as I could consult upon the subject, and with the view to accommodate the general sense of the Senate so far as I can, I offer this amendment in the nature of a substitute. It embodies substantially the provisions of the homestead bill of the House, adding to it the price of twenty-five cents an acre for the land, except in cases where the land has been in the market over thirty years, in which case it is twelve and a half cents. It retains the five years possession for the purposes of cultivation before the settler can perfect his title by a patent, unless he chooses in the mean time to pay the whole graduated price of the land. Then he may perfect his title. In respect to the qualifications of the persons who can take under the homestead principle—they are to be those who are entitled to preemption under the laws of the United States, who, as everybody knows, must be citizens of the United States, or those who have declared their intention to become such. That relates to the Territories. In the States, any person who is entitled to hold land under the existing law of the State in which the application is made, may enter and avail himself of the homestead provision. The substitute also covers a graduation principle, such as I stated the other day, in respect to the length of time the lands have been in the market; and for the purpose of the construction of railroads or canals, it authorizes the States to take and receive the lands at the graduated price, and appropriate them for the construction of the particular road or canal. That is to be done by the act of the Legislature at its general session. I now offer the substitute with the hope that it may meet the approbation of a majority of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

Mr. GWIN. It is very long. I hope the reading of it at this time may be dispensed with.

Mr. STUART. I ask that it may be printed, so that, in case we do not get to a vote to-day, we may have it printed for our use to-morrow.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the reading of the first section of the substitute.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

"That the minimum price of the public lands of the United States shall remain unchanged until the commencement of the fiscal year, beginning July 1, 1855, and after that period the price shall be reduced according to the following scales: All lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold five years, shall be reduced to the price of one dollar per acre; all lands which have been offered at public sale, and remaining unsold ten years—

Mr. BROWN. That is enough. I move to amend by striking out all after the word, "that," and inserting what I send to the Chair.

Mr. ATCHISON. I desire to understand whether the order to print the substitute was made by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question was not taken; but if there be no objection, the order will be made. The motion to amend the substitute cannot be considered until the original bill is perfected.

Mr. TOUCEY. I call for the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not under consideration yet.

Mr. HUNTER. Has the substitute not been offered by the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been offered, but it has been indicated that there are amendments still to be proposed to the original bill.

Mr. HUNTER. Still it is pending as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But as a substitute it cannot be considered until all amendments to the original bill have been disposed of.

Mr. HUNTER. It is true that such amendments have precedence, but still this is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the case; but it cannot be considered yet.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "that," in the first line, and inserting what I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not in order at this time.

Mr. BROWN. Certainly, if it is in order to move an amendment, it is in order to move an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that any Senator may offer a substitute to the whole bill, but that substitute cannot be considered in any way until the bill is perfected. After the amendments for the perfection of the original bill have been disposed of, the substitute pending as an amendment, comes up for consideration.

Mr. GWIN. I desire to offer an amendment to the original bill. Is it in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the Presiding Officer to keep some order in the Chamber. It is absolutely impossible for Senators to hear anything which is announced by the Chair, or by any member. I omitted to make some remarks in a proper place, which I should have made, on that account.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The noise and confusion is principally in the galleries and lobbies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request Senators to hold their conversation elsewhere, or the incumbent of the Chair will not proceed with business until order can be preserved.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to make an inquiry with regard to a point of order. I want to know of the Chair whether the substitute of the Senator from Mississippi, which was offered sometime since, is not in order before the substitute of the Senator from Michigan?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that neither is in order. Both may be offered, but neither can be voted upon until the amendments to the original bill shall be disposed of.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I am in favor of the original bill as it came from the House. I have been opposed to any amendments to that bill. When amendments were proposed a few days ago, I did not vote upon them, because I was not here; but if I had been here I should have voted against them, because I am opposed to amending the bill at all. It may not be a perfect bill, such a one as I should prefer if I had the forming of it, but it is a bill sent to us from the House, and I wish to pass it as it is.

But, Mr. President, inasmuch as the bill has been amended, I wish to offer two amendments, which I presume will make it more acceptable to a number of the members of the Senate; and if those amendments be adopted, which are offered by me as a friend of the bill, to perfect it, to make it more acceptable to the Senate, then I intend to contest, and I hope successfully, against the substitute offered by the Senator from Michigan. The proposition which I make is to strike out the words "free of cost" in the first section, and insert in lieu of them "at twenty-five cents an acre, payable when the patent shall have issued." The section will then read:

"That any free white persons who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter at twenty-five cents an acre, payable when the patent shall have issued, one quarter section," &c.

My object in offering this amendment is to relieve the consciences of some gentlemen who think it is not constitutional to give away the public domain. That does not influence me very much; but I am willing to have this amendment made so as to get clear of this objection, which operates upon some members of this body very seriously. The other amendment I propose is in the fourth section. That section now reads:

"That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefore."

I move to strike out the word "contracted," so that it will read:

"That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts prior to the issuing of the patent therefore."

The object is, that, when the patent has issued, the lands shall be subject to debts, whether contracted before or after the issuing of the patent. That is another objection to the bill which I wish to obviate. I hope these amendments will be adopted without opposition, in order that we may be prepared to combat the substitute offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Mr. President, I intended to offer similar amendments to those now submitted by the honorable Senator from California. I intended to offer an amendment to fix the price at fifty cents; and I now move to amend the amendment of the Senator from California, by striking out twenty-five cents and inserting fifty cents. My intention was originally to amend the section by striking out the words "free of cost," and inserting "for the sum of fifty cents an acre upon the terms and conditions hereinafter prescribed." I intended also, instead of moving to amend the fourth section as suggested by the Senator from California, to move to strike it out altogether, because we have no right to pass a bankrupt law for the new States, and not for the old ones. I designed further to move to amend the first section by striking out "five" and inserting "three," so that, if we charge fifty cents an acre, I propose to give a patent at the end of three, instead of five years. It will thus be seen that my honorable friend from California and myself come pretty nearly together, and that the difference between us, is as to price per acre to be paid. He proposes twenty-five cents, and I propose fifty cents. I do not think twenty-five cents will more than half compensate the Government, nor near it; while fifty cents will approximate to the expenses the Government has been at in obtaining these lands.

Now, Mr. President, a word in regard to the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Michigan. He has stated to the Senate that the substitute which he proposes contains the homestead principle. Why, sir, it is a very different thing from that. The substitute which he proposes is the graduation principle. It also makes a grant of land to the States, and contains a provision for railroad companies. But, sir, it makes little difference to me what it is named. If the friends of the homestead bill are about to abandon that, and call the graduation principle something else, I have no objection; but I should like to have things called by their right names. The substitute proposed by the honorable Senator from Michigan does not contain a single feature of the homestead bill. The features of his proposition are very different from those of the homestead bill. His is the graduation principle. It is the proposition of the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] to cede the lands to the States in which they lie, on certain conditions; but as the friends of the homestead bill choose to call the substitute of the honorable Senator from Michigan a homestead bill, I have no objection; but I dissent from the name which has been given to it by the Senator from Michigan. I rose, however, for the purpose of moving an amendment to the amendment of the honorable Senator from California, to strike out twenty-five cents and insert fifty cents; and upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. Though I am not very particular as to this point, I should rather have the price fixed at twenty-five cents. That proposition is offered by me more for the relief of gentlemen of tender conscience on the subject of the constitutional power of the Government, than for any other object. I would rather have the price fixed at ten cents than twenty-five cents, and a great deal prefer twenty-five to fifty cents.

Sir, in regard to the substitute offered by the Senator from Michigan, I do not object to the graduation principle, or to the railroad grants contained in it; but I think the two questions should be kept separate. If we are going to pass a homestead bill, we should pass the one that has been before us for our consideration. We are at too late a period of the session to introduce new and important questions, such as graduating the price of the public lands, and transferring them to the States. These are very grave questions. They tend to remodel the whole land system of the United States, and that is a matter which we should approach with great caution and care, and we should have plenty of time for the consideration of the important points involved.

I know it is a favorite doctrine with representatives from new States to have the whole of the lands granted to the States in which they lie. I think, however, it is very doubtful whether that is good policy. I think it may result in creating a great corruption fund to debauch the public men of those States. My experience has taught me that the best condition of things we can have in the States of this Union is to have a poor Government and a rich people. I infinitely prefer giving the public lands away to actual settlers, to giving them to the States. But if this bill is to be amended so as to do that, I greatly prefer that a restriction shall be put upon the States to require them to dispose of the lands to actual settlers—

Mr. STUART. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to make an appeal to him. The substitute which I have offered is not before the Senate. The appeal which I wish to make to the Senator is, that he shall offer his amendments, make such statements as he thinks necessary in order that the Senate shall understand them, and let us vote. If we discuss every proposition to amend the original bill, this substitute, and every substitute which may be offered, we shall not come to a vote at this session.

Mr. GWIN. I have delayed this bill as little as anybody. I am not in the habit of making long speeches, or rising to points of order, or anything of that sort which is calculated to interrupt business. All I wish to say is, that I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will not offer his amendment to fix the price at fifty cents an acre. I prefer to have it fixed at twenty-five cents; and, inasmuch as he is not recognized as a friend of the homestead bill, I think he had better let those who are in favor of the bill perfect it according to their plans. If he will allow my amendment to be put in, and then move to strike out twenty-five and insert fifty, I shall be content.

Mr. BRODHEAD. If that could be done, I should be satisfied; but if twenty-five shall be inserted, it will not then be in order to strike it out, and insert anything else.

Mr. GWIN. Then let us have the vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. This "perfecting" of the bill, as it is called, is but leading to the defeat of the bill, in my judgment. In the multiplicity of amendments which are being offered, we appear to have lost sight of the original proposition. Nothing has occurred to my mind, since this bill came before us, tending to convince or satisfy me that we cannot pass the bill which came from the House, with some few amendments. At least I am unwilling to entertain any proposition which amounts to a substitute for the bill, until we can have some vote on the original bill, satisfying me that a majority of the Senate is against it.

Now, I should greatly prefer if we were to go forward and make such amendments as Senators may think necessary, in order to preserve and perpetuate the principle contained in the bill as it came from the House. If we fail in that entirely, then I shall be willing to take up the proposition submitted by the honorable Senator from Michigan, which is understood to be the bill introduced originally by the Senator from Virginia. That is the next acceptable proposition to my mind. But I think we should expedite business and bring this question to a close by going forward and perfecting the bill, without offering any proposition that is intended as a substitute. I believe by adopting that course we can pass the bill as it came from the House, with but few slight variations.

Mr. GWIN. That is just what I have done; but the Senator, I understand, accuses me of attempting to defeat the bill. I am trying to perfect the original bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have understood the Senator from California to be in favor of the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. GWIN. So I am, and now offer this amendment to make it more acceptable to gentlemen. I am for the bill as it came from the House. I have voted against any amendment; but inasmuch as it has been amended, I am willing to agree to the amendments I now propose, which will give strength to the bill.

Mr. PEARCE. The proposition of the Senator from California, as I understand it, is to allow all persons described in the first section of the bill, that is, all citizens, native or naturalized, and also foreigners not naturalized, who come within the provisions of the sixth section, to enter public lands by paying twenty-five cents per acre, instead of obtaining them free of cost, as the bill proposes. This modification he introduces for the reason that it is necessary to satisfy the consciences of some gentlemen who think that Congress have not the constitutional power to give away this great public domain. Sir, it is not for me to reflect upon the motives or the opinions of any member of this body; but it is difficult for me to conceive how their consciences can be satisfied by so small a provision as this. The Senator has not assigned a solitary reason—which would satisfy a statesman—for the project which he has just introduced; but, in this respect, he does not differ from any of the advocates of this bill; for, from the beginning to the end, I have not heard a single sentence in the nature of argument, not the semblance even of an excuse, for the introduction of this great principle, as they call it, of the homestead bill, which is to supersede the established policy of the Government under which this country has grown great and has prospered most remarkably from the very beginning. I repeat, I have not heard a solitary reason assigned for the adoption of this new principle, unless I must except the general declaration that the public lands are to be improved by giving them away.

Sir, when the public lands were ceded by those States which had claims to them, they were supposed to be a great national estate, to be administered justly, prudently, and wisely by the Federal Government, with a view to the benefit of all the States of the Union; and in this view it was necessary that we should establish some system under which they should be sold. The resolution of October 10, 1780, adopted by the Congress of the Confederation, declared "that the unappropriated lands that may be ceded or relinquished to the United States, by any particular State, pursuant to the recommendation of Congress, &c., shall be disposed of for the common benefit of the United States," &c. Accordingly, in 1781, New York made her cession, declaring that it "shall be and inure for the use and benefit of such of the United States as shall become members of the Federal Alliance of the said States." In 1784, Virginia, by her delegates, executed her deed of cession for the common benefit of the Union, and declared that the lands so ceded "shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become or shall become members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of the said States, &c., and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." The cessions of the other States were similar in character and intent. The land acquired from foreign Powers being purchased by the common treasure, must also be held for the common use. In either case, the principle is clear that the lands must be disposed of bona fide for the common benefit.

Now, if there is any gentleman here who believes that we cannot constitutionally give away the public lands, but must sell them, why, then, it must be perfectly clear to him, that while it would be a gross violation of that principle to put the lands at so high a price as to prevent their sale, and to shut them up from public use, so it would be equally a violation of that principle to put them down to a price so low as to be far beneath a reasonable, fair, and moderate valuation. If we are to administer these lands as a great national property, in the disposal of which all the States are to be benefited, and the general prosperity of the country advanced, we must sell them neither at exorbitant nor at sham prices. I think twenty-five cents an acre is a sham price. We have no more right to squander the lands under the pretext of selling them, than we have to prohibit their settlement, and prevent the disposal of them for the common good of the Union, by fixing the price at an amount which practically produces this result.

The early policy of the Government in regard to the public lands was twofold in its objects. The first object was to turn them into money for the use of the common Treasury. The second to facilitate settlement, giving easy terms of purchase to persons residing in the West, and to emigrants who desired to reside there.

We began, it is true, by fixing two dollars an acre as the price of the public lands. Afterwards we reduced that price to one dollar and twenty-five cents. We went on as rapidly as our means would permit, and quite as fast as prudence would justify, in extinguishing Indian title, in doing which we have paid immense sums. Then we have provided for the survey of the lands upon a very beautiful and admirable system by which they were arranged into townships, into sections, into quarter sections, and even laid off into parcels as small as forty acres. Then, after they had been offered at public sale, and had not been bought in at the minimum price, we allowed them to be entered at private sale by any individual who thought proper to do so, at the low rate of one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre; and at a later period we adopted a general preemption system, long and much desired by the pioneer settlers on the public lands.

This was thought to be liberal policy. It was supposed to be eminently conducive to the growth and prosperity of the new States. Sir, it has been so. No one can deny it, and no one can say that their progress has been retarded in the smallest degree by our legislation on the subject of the public lands. Every one, on the contrary, must admit that our legislation has been so liberal, and generous, and paternal, that those States have advanced with a rapidity unknown in the history of nations, far surpassing the progress which the older States of this Union have made since the period of our independence, though they then possessed so much more capital, and so many more advantages. Why, sir, how was it in 1810? In that year the State of Ohio had a population of about forty-five thousand. What is she now? Her population is over two millions; it was within a fraction of that in 1850. In forty years her population had multiplied more than forty-fold, and her growth in every other respect was corresponding to her growth in population. She has increased in wealth; she has improved in knowledge; she has increased in everything that goes to make up the power and prosperity of a great people, or to advance individual comfort and improvement; and she stands at this day a proud result of a liberal, wise, and prudent system of administering the public domain such as no other nation on the face of the earth ever exhibited. In fact, nothing is to be compared to it. But this increase, great and magnificent as it has been, is no greater than that of other States of this Union which had no existence at the period to which I have referred. Take the State of Indiana. In 1810 that State had a population of twenty-four thousand. In 1850 she had nine hundred and ninety-eight thousand. The increase of Illinois is equally marked. Her population of twelve thousand in 1810 had swollen, in 1850, to eight hundred and fifty-one thousand. Wisconsin, only organized as a Territory in 1835 or 1836, and with a population of thirty thousand in 1840, is reported at the census of 1850 as having increased to three hundred and five thousand.

Sir, the forest and the wilderness have been subdued with a rapidity unknown before. All those beneficent institutions of which we boast, and all the internal improvements which characterize our country's progress, have grown up there equally, freely, and vastly more rapidly than they have in other parts of the country. What, then, is the ground of complaint? We have done nothing to retard the settlements of these new States. We have been bountiful to them in the way of gifts of lands. They have had ample donations for schools and universities. The sixteen section in every township has been given for the use of schools. They have had five per cent. on the gross sales for the benefit of roads. They have had enormous grants for internal improvements of every description. They have had some eight millions of acres within the last few years for making railroads; and to some of the owners of those railroads, I understand, immense fortunes have been the result of this bounty on the part of Congress. We have given away the swamp lands to the new States in which they lay, to the amount of about thirty-five millions of acres. I believe within the last forty or fifty years our grants of public lands to the new States have amounted to over one hundred millions of acres. The result of all this is the unparalleled progress of which I have spoken.

Now, sir, when this is the case, what is the motive for squandering this public domain of ours? What public necessity demands it? What necessity of any particular new State demands it? What benefit to individuals makes it necessary? And, above all, what principle of public policy has been pointed out to justify it? Are we going to forget so soon the determination which we came to a few days ago that we would not sanction eleemosynary gifts of land by this Government. The Senate determined that they could not. I do not know whether all the majority which sustained the President's veto of the bill giving lands for the benefit of asylums for the insane hold the doctrine that such grants are unconstitutional; but at all events, they determined that this Government cannot properly give away the lands for eleemosynary purposes, even when the grants are so apportioned as to be for the common benefit of all the States in this respect. Are we, then, to give away the public lands to actual settlers, on the ground of their inability to pay for them? Besides, sir, there is not an industrious and honest man in the United States, where labor is more highly rewarded than in any country in the world, who cannot, with his unassisted labor, in the course of one of two years, earn enough to pay for a subdivision of the public lands, on which he and his family may live with comfort and increasing prosperity. Why, then, should we adopt this system? I have not perceived, as yet, the shadow of a reason given for it.

Besides, sir, I do not believe that it is desired by the people of this country. I know it is not only not desired by, but that the bill is odious to the people of my own State. They look upon it as a gross inequality and injustice. They have seen without complaint the large grants of public land made to the new States for education, and for internal improvements, although there have been complaints in regard to the railroad grants, and well founded ones I think; but they have never been dissatisfied with the liberality which has built up the new States so rapidly. There is, however, an abiding conviction with them that this is a seizing upon and squandering of that, in which they have an equal interest with the other States of the Union; and that conviction will not be the less if you put upon the public lands the sham price of twenty-five cents per acre which everybody knows is far beneath their value.

Why, sir, during the war of the Revolution, it is known to Senators, I presume, that my State refused to accede to the Confederation because this matter of the public lands was not properly adjusted, and they only entered into it in February, 1781, after Congress had passed a resolution calling on the States to cede their wild lands for the common benefit. The resolutions of the Legislature of Maryland, adopted in 1779, set forth the grounds of their objections to the retention of these lands by the States which then laid claim to them, and amongst others was the very evil which is now about to be reached and practiced under this bill. They objected that the States retaining these lands might put down the price far too low, might fix it at a nominal sum, and thus endeavor to drain, and, perhaps, succeed in draining the old States of their population. To that immigration which would follow naturally upon the wise and liberal system of administering the public lands to which I have referred, they did not object; but to anything beyond that they did object, and they object now. They feel now as they did then, that this property cannot be squandered, or given away—which is squandering it—except with gross injustice to them.

Well, sir, it is proposed not only to give these donations to our own fellow citizens, but to give them also to foreigners who are unnaturalized. That increases the injustice, and renders it still less a measure of common benefit to all the States; for you will observe, sir, that under whatever pretext of its universal application this bill may be advocated, it is manifest that not one man in a hundred in the old States can avail himself profitably of the opportunity which you here profess to afford him to settle upon the public lands. There are great bodies of hard-working, industrious, honest men in the country, in the new States as well as in the old, skilled in particular arts and trades, who have no capacity for, and no desire to engage in agricultural employment, who cannot avail themselves of this measure, and can derive no benefit from it. They cannot give up the trades which are their sole means of obtaining a livelihood. They do not desire to do so. They wish to know why you adopt a system, which, in practice, however different the hypothesis may be, will result in grants of the public property to one set of individuals, and a denial of it to them. Sir, it is a reasonable objection. If we are to have these largesses among the people, and I consider this to be nothing less, let them be scattered broadcast among all, so that every one may not only have a legal opportunity to get his share of it, but may have an actual and practical opportunity to avail himself of the benefits of it. That they cannot do under the system proposed in the bill or the amendment.

But, sir, you propose to bring in foreigners who are not naturalized. This is another grievance with them. I do not mean to utter any sweeping denunciations against foreign immigrants, whom the beneficence of our institutions may have invited to our shores, nor even against those who, without regard to our political institutions, have supposed that here they could enjoy better opportunities of material progress and prosperity than they would have at home. I do not deny that many of the foreign immigrants are men of noble hearts, of gallant spirits, and cultivated understandings—such as every good man would cherish. I know it, sir. I know that among a large portion of them who are not of that cultivated class, there are honest, worthy people, who make good citizens when they have gone through the process which our laws properly require, who will assimilate with us, and not keep themselves in separate bodies, nor strive to maintain a distinct nationality, and refuse to mingle with the mass of Americans, and partake of, and become imbued with their nationality. I know that; but I know that besides these, there is quite a large number of foreign immigrants who are not desirable, and not acceptable as inhabitants in our country. It is only necessary to look at the statistics which we have in official documents to know that such is the fact.

Why must we invite these people to accept donations of public lands before they are naturalized? Have they any claim of right? Some gentleman, I think, has spoken of it as a measure of justice. Whether he meant justice to ourselves or justice to them, I do not know; but what claim can they have in the nature of right to an equal participation in these benefits? Naturalization itself is a boon to them. They have no right to it except as the laws confer it upon them. It is true, sir, that we open our arms to them, we admit them to come into our country, to receive all the benefits of our general system of equal laws, to acquire property, and to obtain that protection for life, person, reputation, and property, which every native and naturalized citizen enjoys. Is not that enough? Are we so destitute of merit among ourselves that we must seek to invite this infusion among us with a view to the improvement of our national character? It might be thought so, it seems to me, from many things which have fallen from gentlemen on this floor, though I can hardly suppose that such was their meaning.

We boast of this being the freest, the most enlightened, and the greatest nation on the earth. It is often asserted in congressional speeches. Though we are the greatest, freest, and most enlightened of nations, yet it seems we must invite, by extraordinary inducements, such as never were heard of before, these foreign immigrants, of all classes, and conditions, and characters, to come amongst us, as if for the purpose of exalting our national character! I hardly think that our intellectual standard is likely to be more highly elevated by bringing in this class of people. I do not know that our moral character is likely to be greatly improved. I suppose, myself, that no foreign admixture can raise the morals and mend the heart of the American people. If I thought so, I should blush for my country.

Well, sir, have we not got all the practical skill and sagacity among our artisans which any other nation on the earth can boast of? I had supposed that Yankee ingenuity, Yankee perseverance, Yankee untiring energy could not be beaten in the world. Why, then, do we invite foreigners by these extraordinary inducements? I admit that I am willing that they should come on the terms on which they have heretofore come; but I am not willing to offer these superfluous bounties to swell an immigration from what we call the down-trodden nations of oppressed Europe, which is already as large as a prudent liberality would desire.

But, Mr. President, notwithstanding the respectability of a very large portion of these foreign immigrants, there is another very large number who "leave their country for their country's good," and who do not come here for ours. The statistics of crime prove this. In a table furnished by the Census Bureau, I find that of about twenty-seven thousand convictions in our criminal courts during the year ending the 30th of June, 1850, fourteen thousand were foreigners, and but thirteen thousand Americans. And what is the proportion of foreign population to the native? In 1850 there were two million two hundred thousand foreigners, and upwards of twenty-one millions of native population; so that whilst the proportion of native to foreign population was as ten to one, the amount of crime is absolutely greater among foreign immigrants than among native citizens; and it is to be recollected that among these native citizens, as enumerated, are included the negro population, among whom the smaller class of offenses, such as petit larceny, are very numerous. I am not willing to furnish inducements to the vicious and depraved to come among us. I wish to keep this class out. If we could segregate them, if we could discriminate between the worthy and unworthy foreign immigrants, I should gladly receive the former, and treat them with all the liberality which we have hitherto shown them, and more if that were possible; but the other class I should desire to exclude altogether if I could. But no system has yet been devised by which this can be accomplished. We are to look at things as they are, and to consider that if we adopt this system by which new inducements to immigration are held out, we shall be in fact inviting that class, among whom there is the greater proportion of criminals as well as those who merit our kind feelings.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I should like to inquire of my friend from Maryland whether he has turned his attention to the statistics as to paupers or not? How does the number of paupers in our almshouses and other public institutions compare, as between the foreign and native-born population?

Mr. PEARCE. I had looked at that, though I did not intend to mention it, lest I might be misunderstood. I do not mean, when I answer the Senator's question, to throw any reproach upon these people for their poverty, but the same census report states that there were 134,000 paupers who received support in 1850, and of these, 68,000 were foreign, and 66,000 native-born. I will not weary the Senate by repeating or by expanding what I have already said, but content myself with saying that numerous as may be, and are, the respectable people who come to our shores from abroad, there is a very large class of them who are the very reverse of desirable citizens. We make no discrimination between them in this bill, and we cannot make any discrimination. I have said that the foreign immigration to this country is quite large enough already, and needs no additional stimulus. Why, sir, the number of immigrants who came into this country some years ago, even as far back as 1849, I think, was about 300,000 in one year; but I understand that the number is increasing, and that during the last four years about 1,500,000 foreign passengers have arrived in the United States.

Now, I can very well comprehend why a State, feeble, small in population, without military resources, in danger from enemies who are near it, might seek to build up rapidly its population and strength by extraordinary inducements to foreign immigrants, even by giving them lands free of cost; but that is not our case. It never was so. When we were a people of but two and a half or three millions of souls, we maintained ourselves in a vigorous and prosperous independence, and found it unnecessary to throw our country open to all the world by free grants of land. It was not necessary for us even then to have such an infusion of foreign population as would overcome the native and make that portion pars minima sui. Still less is it necessary now. Nobody can doubt that the progress of this country in every element of national greatness is such, that it now stands without the fear of an enemy anywhere. Indeed, sir, we are apt to say, in that boastful spirit which I fear characterizes us a little too much, that we are "confident against the world in arms;" and, extravagant as it may seem, I do not know but that it is true.

This being the case, sir, I ask some one to point out to me the motive for departing from the old established system, under which we have grown so great and been so prosperous, and introducing this new principle, which is new, I think, more especially in this: that it seems to treat this great national domain, as if it were a nuisance to be abated, or a burden; not merely a worthless thing, but a positive burden, which we must cast off our shoulders and throw down for whoever is willing to take it up. Sir, I desire in our legislation here to facilitate the settlement of the new States, but I think they are settled quite as fast as any reasonable desire on their part could demand. Seeing no reason why we should depart from our old and well tried policy, I shall not give my vote for the bill in its present shape, or with any modification which leaves the homestead principle pure, or the homestead principle with a sham or nominal price affixed to the land.

While I would generally adhere to our present system, there are certain portions of the country in which, from peculiar circumstances, it may be politic and proper to grant lands to settlers—as in New Mexico—whose sparse population and remote situation, whose generally barren soil, containing only spots of land cultivable by irrigation; and whose exposure to constant Indian forays makes it most undesirable to the settler. There it may be for the benefit of the common treasury of the people, as well as the particular interest of the inhabitants, to encourage such immigration as may give population and strength enough to secure the peace and protection of all. But, in the greater portion of the public domain, all the perils of the pioneer life have passed away. Men no longer have to plow with their guns slung across their shoulders, as was the case with the early Kentucky settlers. They break the wilderness and subdue the forest in the confidence of perfect safety.

I do not mean to detain the Senate much longer, but there is one point to which I wish to call attention, and I do so because I am unwilling that the authority of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS], should be given to a legal principle, which I consider entirely unsound. In the course of debate the other day, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. CLAY] made an objection to the bill, that under its provisions the land States might in certain cases which he specified, be restrained from exercising the taxing power as in other cases, and that the period within which the parties favored by this bill would be able to hold the land, without being taxed, would be extended by its operation; and he relied upon the compacts made between the United States and the new State, and particularly with his own State, Alabama, which he mentioned as preventing the State from taxing lands while still held by the Government, and for which no patent had issued. The Senator from Michigan contested this principle. He thought there were but two States in the Union which had made perfect compacts with the Government of the United States, in regard to the taxing power over the public lands.

Mr. CASS. I said fair compacts, without any extraneous force.

Mr. PEARCE. Without any extraneous force. Well, sir, I understand that the extraneous force which was used was this: Where the Congress of the United States have passed an act authorizing a Territory to form a State government, with a view of entering into the Union, they have imposed upon them certain conditions. Among others, there was the condition that they should not tax the lands belonging to the United States within the limits of those States. These new State governments have generally or always been required to enter into such a compact, I believe, by resolution of their convention, agreeing to the stipulations on that subject in the act of Congress; and I believe that all the States have so agreed, where it has been proposed to them.

But, sir, what I mean to say is, that the authority of the Government of the United States to reserve its lands within the limits of the new States from taxation, does not depend upon compact. It rests upon constitutional authority, independent of all compact. I mean to say, that it has been so decided by the highest tribunal in the land. I know the Senator from Michigan thinks otherwise. He thinks the opinion is a doubtful authority, and may, perhaps, think it was a mere obiter dictum; but I believe I can show that it is not an obiter dictum, that it was the opinion of the court upon a point necessarily involved in the decision of the case. There is a case reported in Third Howard, which came from Alabama, in which the title to certain land that had been overflowed with water was contested—one party claiming it under the United States, and another denying that title. Mr. Justice McKinley delivered the opinion of the Supreme Court, and I find that opinion contains this language:

"We will now inquire into the nature and extent of the right of the United States to these lands, and whether that right can in any manner affect or control the decision of the case before us." * * * * * "We therefore think the United States hold the public lands within the new States by force of the deeds of cession, and the statutes connected with them, and not by any municipal sovereignty which it may be supposed they possess, or have reserved by compact with the new States, for that particular purpose. The provision of the Constitution above referred to, shows that no such power can be exercised by the United States within a State. Such a power is not only repugnant to the Constitution, but it is inconsistent with the spirit and intention of the deeds of cession."

He says: "The argument so much relied on by the counsel for the plaintiffs"—which argument, based on the right of the Government compact between the State and the United States, is not sound, and adds that it "cannot operate as a contract between the parties, but is binding as a law;" and he gives the reason for it:

"Full power is given to Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States." This authorized the passage of all laws necessary to secure the rights of the United States to the public lands, and to provide for their sale, and to protect them from taxation.

"And all constitutional laws are binding on the people, in the new States and in the old ones, whether they consent to be bound by them or not. Every constitutional act of Congress is passed by the will of the people of the United States, expressed through their representatives, on the subject-matter of the enactment; and when so passed it becomes the supreme law of the land, and operates by its own force on the subject-matter, in whatever State or Territory it may happen to be."

"The propositions submitted to the people of the Alabama Territory, for their acceptance or rejection, by the act of Congress authorizing them to form a constitution and State government for themselves, so far as they related to the public lands within that Territory, amounted to nothing more nor less than rules and regulations respecting the sales and disposition of the public lands."

"The supposed compact relied on by the counsel for the plaintiffs, conferred no authority, therefore, on Congress to pass the act granting to the plaintiffs the land in controversy."—Pollard's Lessee vs. Hagan et al., 3 Howard—212, &c.

Congress have a right, under the Constitution, to dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting, the territory or other property of the United States; and, therefore, according to the justice who delivered the opinion of the court in this case, they have a right to make enactments having the same force as any compact would have. Such an enactment is found in the provisions of the laws authorizing the Territories to form constitutions with a view to admission into the Union as States upon the terms mentioned, and those terms are equally binding and obligatory upon the States as though the agreement were really and truly a compact, and had all the force which a compact can have.

Sir, I only mention this because I understood the authority of the Senator from Michigan to be the other way. He intimated a doubt whether these lands were not taxable by the United States except where a compact had been made between the United States, which was a fair and proper compact. I suppose, indeed, he intended to say that where a State was admitted into the Union by an act of Congress, which imposed upon it certain conditions, those conditions were invalid unless the State assented to them in some very precise form.

Mr. CASS. I stated that was the opinion of the Supreme Court.

Mr. PEARCE. The opinion of the Supreme Court, from which I have read, signifies the contrary, and it is the opinion of the Court though delivered by a single judge, for it was not dissented from except by Judge Catron, (who, as I understand him, held the compact between Alabama and the United States to be valid and conclusive,) and it was essential to the determination of the question, and must be therefore taken to be the law of the land as expounded by that Court. I shall not further trouble the Senate.

Mr. CASS. I have a few words to say on the point which has been raised by the Senator from Maryland, and I will not detain the Senate long, for I have already discussed this matter. The question is, whether the lands of the United States within the States are ipso facto exempted from taxation? There is no such provision in the Constitution.

Mr. PEARCE. That is not what I stated. I say Congress has the power, without the assent of the State, to declare the public lands to be exempt from taxation.

Mr. CASS. I will put it in those terms. Then the Senator's proposition is, that Congress has power to prevent the lands of the United States from being taxed by the Legislatures of the several States. That provision is not in the Constitution; it must, therefore, be deduced from some other provision or some general principle.

Sir, as I said the other day, as early as 1785, the Congress of the United States, under the Confederation, declared that their lands should forever be exempt from taxation. They made that one of the articles of compact "irrepealable," between the United States and the northwestern States, and it is to be observed that this was one of the principal irrepealable articles of the compact. Now let us see what is the effect in relation to them. Why, sir, they have been declared, by the Supreme Court of the United States, to be utterly void and without effect. In December, 1850, Chief Justice Taney delivered the opinion of the court upon the subject, in the following words:

"But it has been settled by judicial decision in this court, that the ordinance is not in force. Among other reasons, because it derogates from the rights of the States, and would place the new States in a position inferior to the old ones."

That is precisely the very point in issue. If the United States have no authority to declare their land exempt from taxation in Pennsylvania, I ask you where is their authority to declare it in Ohio; because, the honorable Senator will observe, it is their "property" everywhere that is subject to these "rules and regulations." It is not only their territory, but all their property, wherever situated. It is precisely because it is in derogation of the rights of the new States that they have no more authority to do this in the new States than in the old ones.

Well, Mr. President, what has been the practical effect? Why, from the commencement of the Government, whenever a new State has been admitted, Congress, in some shape or other, have supposed it necessary to exempt the lands of the United States from taxation, and it has been done generally by compact. In the first four States, as I observed on a previous occasion, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Missouri, the public lands were declared exempt from taxation by virtue of the authority of Congress, without any compact or declaration on the part of these States at all. Doubts seem then to have arisen as to how far the National Legislature had the right to make that declaration. What did they do then? They went on to say to the new States, "You shall declare by an irrepealable compact that you have no right to tax the lands of the United States within your jurisdiction, or you shall not come into the Union." That is the way in which the United States got this exemption. They declared it to be a fundamental article to which the new States must assent before they came into the Union. It was that to which I alluded, when I said there were but two States in this Union—Michigan and Arkansas—with whom a compact was made such as would be made between individuals. Those States were fairly allowed to come into the Union, and were fairly offered certain considerations by virtue of which they yielded the right of taxation.

Have the United States been playing a game from that day to this? If they had a right to exempt their land from taxation by statutory regulation, why did they require compacts from the States surrendering the right? I repeat to the honorable Senator from Maryland, is not this claim for exemption in derogation of the rights of the new States, and does it not place them in an entirely different condition from the old States?

I say, again, it is the "property" of the United States, wherever situated, on which the provisions of the Constitution, to which the Senator has referred, operates. It is not the property of the United States in Ohio, but in Pennsylvania, and wherever they have any "territory or other property," upon which that clause operates. If they have a right, without a compact and without action on the part of the State, to declare the land of the United States exempt from taxation in Ohio, they have the same right to declare it exempt in Pennsylvania.

Now, a few words in respect to the case which the honorable Senator mentions. I do not understand it at all as he does. I understand that to be a case in which title was gained by accretion, and the question arose under it, to whom did the eminent domain belong in the new States: to the United States, who were the owners of land, or to the States who had the jurisdiction? The Supreme Court decided, very correctly, that the eminent domain belonged to the States. This question as to the right of taxation was not touched at all; and the language which the honorable Senator has read was the view of the judge who delivered the opinion, and not at all necessary to the case in hand.

I have the authority of a very high judicial officer of this Union for saying that the point has never been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The point as to the power to tax that portion of the property of the United States necessary to be employed in the operations of the Government has, in one or more of the circuits, been determined. It has been decided that it could not be taxed, because thereby the operations of the Government might be suspended, and for that reason alone. No man pretends to say that the immense western domain, constituting almost a world in itself, is necessary to the operations of the Government of the United States, and should therefore be exempt from taxation. It is not like a mint, or a court-house, or other public building, around which it may be necessary to have a small tract of land, which should be exempt from taxation. I understand that to be the point on which the circuit courts have been divided, and the only point upon which the right of taxation has been decided by any judicial officer. I aver again, that the Supreme Court, as such, has never decided that the States had not the right to tax the lands of the United States within their jurisdiction. Why should they not, in reason, in law, in equity? Why should not the United States pay their full proportion of the expenses necessary to carry on the operations of Government where their lands lie, which give them all their value, and tend to bring a great deal of it into use?

Mr. PEARCE. I have but a few words to say in reply to the Senator. He has referred to the compacts made by the new States. Now I have before me, for example, the statute which authorized Alabama to form a constitution, with a view to admission into the Union, and I find in it this provision:

"And provided always, That the said convention shall provide, by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the people inhabiting the said Territory do agree and declare, that they forever disclaim all right and title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the said Territory; and that the same shall be and remain at the sole and entire disposition of the United States, and that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States," &c.

Mr. CASS. That is one of the terms of admission.

Mr. PEARCE. That State accepted the terms. Mr. CASS. It was one of the terms without agreeing to which it was provided she could not come in.

Mr. PEARCE. Precisely; and she assented to it.

Mr. CASS. She did.

Mr. PEARCE. And why should she not? Unquestionably we had a right to admit or not, as we thought proper.

Mr. CASS. But you had no right to admit on condition. That is the very point which the Supreme Court have decided.

Mr. PEARCE. If the agreement were made two years before admission, or subsequently, it is the same thing, and there is as much compulsion in the one case as in the other. Let me say to the Senator, there is this difference between exempting from taxation lands which the Government of the United States may hold in Pennsylvania, and those which it may hold in the new States. The lands in Pennsylvania were the property of the State, or of her citizens, and were all under the jurisdiction of Pennsylvania before this Government was formed. We acquire them as any individual does—subject to her jurisdiction, unless she assents to the purchase, and thereby releases her jurisdiction. But in regard to the new States it is otherwise. We are proprietor of public lands there, and we had municipal sovereignty, too, until they were admitted as States, and we thus transferred our municipal sovereignty. We give up to the States full jurisdiction over all those subjects which, before their admission as States, belonged to the Federal Government, preserving, however, within their limits, the unappropriated lands we owned, free from any taxation by them; and this, the Supreme Court has said, we have a constitutional right to do. The State comes in with that condition. Even if she does not assent to it, as I understand the decision of the Supreme Court, it is binding on her because it is an enactment by the Government of the United States, at a time when she has a right to enact; for she has the right to enact before the Territory itself had become a State. That is the answer.

Mr. CASS. I have great respect for the honorable Senator from Maryland, and I hardly think I can have fairly understood him in this case. The United States have the right to admit new States; they have a right to reject for proper considerations; but they have no moral right to reject one of the new States formed out of the Territories, after it contains sixty thousand inhabitants, no more than they have a moral right to do any other act which they ought not to do. And they have no right to impose any conditions except the conditions of the Constitution. That is the very point which we have urged again and again in connection with the question of slavery. I do not understand what the honorable Senator means by saying that we choose to give up a portion of our municipal sovereignty. I do not understand that expression. We do not give up anything. We form a State, and then the Constitution of the United States steps in and gives that State its jurisdiction, and we have then, in Ohio, just the same jurisdiction which we have in Pennsylvania. Whether the property we own in Pennsylvania has been owned by us for a thousand years, and that in Ohio not till after the State came into the Union, the principle is just the same. It is the Constitution which steps in and regulates the respective rights of each party.

Mr. PEARCE. I did not say that we could reserve municipal sovereignty. I never meant any such thing; but I do mean that we may secure our public lands from State taxation by so enacting at the time of admission.

Mr. ADAMS. If the side-bar question, which has been raised between the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Michigan is settled, I wish to call the attention of the Senate back to the amendment which is pending. As I understand it, the question now before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania to the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, to insert fifty cents, instead of twenty-five cents an acre, as the price of the land. Before proceeding to the merits of that question, I wish to say that it is very desirable that we should dispose of this bill to-day; that all the amendments be voted upon, and the question finally disposed of during the day.

I understood the Senator from Maryland to say; in regard to the suggestion of the Senator from California, that twenty-five cents an acre was a proposition of his, made with a view of satisfying the consciences of those gentlemen who believed this Government had no right to give away land; that it was a proposition that very easily satisfied the conscience of Senators. Now, Mr. President, I have believed that Congress has no right to give away the public lands. I have believed, however, that if, in selling the land the Government receives what it cost, there is no obligation on the Government to make a speculation. Now, I understand that about twenty-two cents per acre is the average of the cost of the public lands to the Government; and I say that the conscience of a representative that could not be satisfied with the cost, but desires a speculation, is as singular a conscience as one that is satisfied with refunding to the Treasury the entire expense.

I shall vote, however, for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, to fix the price at fifty cents an acre, for the reason that, although the entire expense is only about twenty-two cents an acre, yet, as all of us who are acquainted with the new States know very nearly one half of the public land is valueless, and in some of the States more than half the lands are valueless; and, therefore, actual sales at fifty cents would not, perhaps, more than remunerate the Government for its expenses. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania. But if that should be rejected, I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, placing it at twenty-five cents. Anything before giving away. I shall vote, however, for the substitute of my colleague, [Mr. Brown,] if that should come up. And I shall vote for the substitute of the Senator from Michigan in preference to all others, because it embraces the whole subject of the public lands; and, while the homestead bill would benefit one man, that, if adopted, would benefit a thousand. There is that difference between the homestead bill and the proposition offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and the original amendment of the Senator from California, not because I am opposed to affixing a price to the land, but because I am opposed to fixing an arbitrary price. Any man who knows anything of the public lands of the United States, knows that one uniform price is exceedingly unjust. One acre of land may be worth but twenty-five cents an acre, and it is very likely that another acre, not three miles off, may be worth ten dollars. Whenever you undertake to establish an arbitrary price, and say you will sell at twenty-five cents, or fifty cents, you must do injustice to some.

I want a principle of graduation applied to this bill; and because I hope to get that principle, I mean to vote against all propositions to establish arbitrary prices. If the proposition were, instead of fixing an arbitrary price of twenty-five cents or fifty cents an acre, to insert a graduation principle, even as proposed by the Senator from Virginia, I should vote for it—not that I think it the best, but because it is one to which the minds of Senators have already been drawn, and they would probably accept that scale of graduation sooner than any other. But I never can, and I never will, vote for fixing any arbitrary price on the public lands. We have such a price now—$1 25 per acre—and that is the very thing about which we are complaining. How much shall we better it if we discard one arbitrary price and fix another? We shall sell the lands for less money, it is true; but shall we deal any more justly with those to whom we sell? I understand that one of the great objections to the present price of the public lands is, that while you sell land to one man at $1 25 which is only worth that much, you frequently sell land to other men for that price which is worth a great deal more; and sometimes you force upon the purchaser land at $1 25 which, in point of fact, is not worth twenty-five cents, simply because he is compelled, under all the circumstances that surround him, to have it.

I want it understood, when I vote against the amendment, that I am not opposed to fixing a price upon the public land. I wish to fix a moderate price, and the very lowest at which it can be arranged. I prefer a graduation down as low as twelve and a half cents, because I know a great deal of the public land is not worth more than that. The Senator from Virginia, however, in fixing his scale, has thought proper to stop at twenty-five cents. I am willing to meet him there; not, as I remarked before, that I think that the best scale which can be adopted, but because having been introduced, and the minds of Senators having been brought to rest upon it, if others are ready to accept it, I am; but I cannot vote to fix these arbitrary prices.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I think that five years' occupation, and making four crops on one hundred and sixty acres of land, are full consideration for it. On that principle, I have been in favor of the homestead bill as it came from the House. I am still in favor of it. I prefer it in that form. The amendment which I have proposed is more to accommodate others than myself; but inasmuch as it was agreeable to some members of the body who are in favor of the principles of this bill with the amendment, I have offered it; but I do not wish to fix a higher price.

But, sir, Senators talk about squandering the public lands by giving to each citizen of the United States a hundred and sixty acres for living on it five years, and making four crops. I am astonished that such a term should be used as to this disposition of the public land. Sir, nothing can tend more to squander the public lands of this country than to leave them open all the time for the selection of the best lands in enormous quantities, concentrating them in the hands of capitalists to be disposed of hereafter at exorbitant prices, as the wants of the country require them to be settled. I am in favor of the homestead principle being extended to all the public domain, and providing that it shall be disposed of to actual settlers for a nominal consideration.

Why, sir, it has been stated in the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and I suppose in this debate, though I have not mingled in it, that the whole cost of the public domain to the United States is only thirteen cents an acre, and including the expense of surveying and everything connected with it, the cost is twenty-two cents; and we have already derived more than $50,000,000 from the proceeds of the public lands, which is more than they cost. They have therefore been no tax, but have been a revenue to the country. It is time now that they should cease to be a revenue, and that we should dispose of the public domain for the purpose of benefiting the population of the country; that is to say, when we dispose of it, it should be put into cultivation. When, as is proposed in this bill, you have a section of it settled and cultivated for four or five years, you make the adjoining section twice as valuable as it was before. I do not think there is a want of consideration in giving to actual settlers in this way, because I believe cultivation is a sufficient and ample compensation to the Government of the United States; for the foundation of the wealth of the nation consists in cultivating the soil, and of course the more wild lands you bring into cultivation, the richer the country is. But, sir, I do not wish to extend this debate. I wish to have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BELL addressed the Senate at considerable length. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. SHIELDS. I shall not trespass upon the time of the Senate by making anything like a speech. It would be a kind of imposition upon the body. The honorable gentleman from Tennessee has confined himself to a few remarks, and with great propriety. It being so near the close of the session, we cannot afford to enter upon a lengthy discussion of such a subject as this. I think we must either abandon this measure, or act promptly upon it, confining ourselves to a few words in explanation of its provisions. I am sorry that I have no capacity or leisure to answer some of the suggestions so handsomely, and yet I think I must say, so insidiously, made by the Senator.

Mr. BELL. I made them candidly.

Mr. SHIELDS. Then I withdraw that. He said he regrets that there is anything in the American people which looks as if they were compelled, from necessity or from circumstances, to ask from this Government the land on which they are to reside. He thinks it a kind of degradation. Now, sir, I look upon it as a different matter. I find, very far from that being the case, that in many countries, and in one of the neighboring countries under a monarchical government, they not only give the man the land, but they give him implements of husbandry and a portion of stock to go and cultivate that land. That is done under a monarchical government, and it is, sir, because the man who cultivates a farm, and reclaims it, does it not only for the benefit of himself, but just in proportion as he cultivates that farm, and renders it productive, so does he act for the benefit of the country, and so does he increase the revenue of the country. If a man cultivates his farm, he stimulates production, he also stimulates consumption, and just in proportion as you cultivate and produce, so in proportion will you consume. Sir, I could go on in reply to the Senator. I wish I had time to do it.

But, again, the honorable Senator says that this gratuity ought to be confined to soldiers. In one sense, a man who goes into the wilderness; who builds himself a little log cabin; who fights the wolves and bears, and wild nature herself, is a soldier—a soldier of progress and civilization—and does more for humanity than the man who fights the battles against the enemies of your country; but I will not waste time upon going into this.

Mr. BELL. The honorable Senator will allow me to say that I voted for donations to be given to settlers in Oregon, because that was a remote and exposed country, and the inducements to go to California were so much greater, that it was presumed it would be a long time before enough inhabitants would go to Oregon to defend themselves from the hostile Indians. I did not vote for the grant in Utah and New Mexico; that was a different principle altogether.

In the case of the pioneer who goes and fights the Indians, with no United States soldiers to defend him, such as the early settlers in Ohio and Tennessee, there is a consideration for the donation. The Senator from Illinois must consider now, that it is under very different circumstances in which the pioneer goes to Missouri, to Illinois, to get the benefit of this bill. When the public lands are opened up, the citizens go in under the shield and ægis of the United States Government, which, with an overflowing Treasury, will have troops to defend them. They will have plenty of men to defend themselves from the Indians. I say that the old pioneers who went beyond the protection of the United States troops, were a most noble race of men, and they deserve these gratuities equally with the Army. To these pioneers I am ready to give the land. I do not oppose that. My remarks were intended to show that this great public domain of ours is not so inexhaustible as some Senators seem to suppose. Will the Senator allow me to add, that I do not think there are one hundred millions of acres in the States that can be appropriated at twelve, twenty-five, or fifty cents an acre? I apprehend that the supply for bounties to soldiers or others, will soon be gone.

Mr. SHIELDS. I cannot trespass upon the patience, as well as good sense, of the Senate by entering into this general abstract discussion; for, after all, they are abstract speculations. To some extent, I agree with the honorable Senator, that the same necessity does not exist now in relation to pioneers as did formerly. Such is my feeling on that point, that, when I have read the struggles of the early pioneers with wild savage nature, wild savage animals, and wild savage men, I rated them much higher than I have rated any struggles that I have observed in the Army. Now, sir, such men, and I am happy to say the Senator agrees with me, ought to receive this encouragement; but I have not time to go into that now.

The Senator alluded to another point—that our territory will soon be exhausted. I wish I had time to go into that. There is territory enough unoccupied, uncultivated, in the United States of America, claimed and owned by twenty-five millions of people, sufficient to support four hundred millions of people; and no man can tell when all that territory will be exhausted.

There is another point I wish I had time to go into, and that is the policy of keeping this territory out of cultivation for any considerable period of time. I think policy would lead us to have it cultivated as soon as possible; but I do not wish to waste time by going into that. My honorable friend from Tennessee, with all his fine talents, and I confess he has very fine talents, on questions of this kind especially, forgets one thing—that in the West we have an immense surplus of unproductive, uncultivated waste lands. Not only is that land unprofitable to the Government, but it is expensive to it. Then we have a surplus of unproductive labor. Now, if you can transfer a portion of the unproductive labor from where it is unproductive, and where there is competition, and where it gives rise to all your Know-Nothingism, and all that kind of bickerings which are produced in society; if you can transfer that and make it productive, will it not be beneficial to the whole country? The honorable Senator will agree with me, sir, that there are two constituents necessary for national wealth and prosperity—land and labor. Land is useless without labor. It is perfectly unprofitable, wholly unproductive; but put upon that land, labor, and you render it not only profitable and productive to the laborer, but profitable and productive to the whole country. You convert that which is no capital, into active, living, productive capital; and you not only enrich the whole community, but you also add to the constant accretions to the Treasury; but I have no time to go into that.

I should say that there is one view of this subject above the honorable Senator's, and that is a principle which ought to be very powerful in a republican Government, although it is politic in every Government; it is to equalize the contingents of society; to take them from a place where their labor is in a surplus, where it is unproductive, where it is not needed, and transfer it to where it may add to the wealth, prosperity, power, and influence of the country. This country is peculiar in that respect. I touched upon this subject the other day, and I am only sorry that I may not go into it at length. You have people coming in on all sides, flowing in constantly; and in the West you have an uncultivated, unreclaimed wilderness. Take these men, throw them into the wilderness, let them cultivate and improve it, and you not only improve their moral and social condition, but, I insist upon it, you improve the political condition of the country.

Sir, when I see southern men oppose this as much as they do, I am astonished. They may be right, but I confess that I see a great policy in taking this population and planting it in the wilderness; for I see no class of the community so conservative as planters and husbandmen. The more you increase that class, and diminish the loose, unemployed, unoccupied class of beings, the more you contribute not only to the prosperity, but, I add, to the conservatism of the country.

But what I want to touch upon now is this: I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from California. I am like my friend, the Senator from Tennessee, on one point. I am for the homestead bill, for the principle of the homestead bill. My people are for that principle. I want to see how it will work and operate. I was in hopes that it would have beneficial effects upon the condition of the country; but if we abandon that principle, I am for the principle of the bill of the Senator from Virginia. Clearly the very moment we abandon the principle of the homestead, I then take up that of the honorable Senator's bill, because I regard it as not only a liberal one, but as a final settlement of this complex, and permit me to say, very distracting question. I do not agree with my friend from Michigan when he says that is the homestead principle. I do not find it so; but I find two great principles in that bill: one the graduation, the other the preemption principle, preemption for a very low and moderate sum. Those are the two great principles. There are many others, but I speak of the leading ones contained in that bill. It contains the graduation principle, which, I am proud to have it to say, when at the head of the Land Office, I recommended, when I had an opportunity to investigate the subject, and it was very favorably considered by the Senate then. Sir, I repeat that I am now ready to vote for the homestead bill, and for the homestead principle as understood with us; for my people are all for it; but the moment we abandon that principle, then I take up the graduation principle, and add to that what the honorable Senator has added. I think it is a very liberal bill, and is certainly prepared with great ability. When it comes up, there are a few things which I shall point out to the honorable Senator as needing correction; but at the present time, I confine myself to this: that I shall vote for the homestead bill as long as there is a chance for it. I think that chance is diminishing every moment. It is one of those measures which has been as much beaten by its friends as by its opponents; but the moment I abandon the principle of the homestead bill, then I am for the principle of the bill brought forward by the honorable Senator—the graduation principle which I find has been reported on again and again, and sustained by the first minds of this country: by Mr. Calhoun and by many others who were in the Senate at the time. In addition to that, it has another principle which we are all in favor of, and that is the preemption principle, for a very low and nominal consideration I confess, but still it is a consideration, and one which is sufficient to make it a matter of pride for a man who settles upon the land to know that he pays for that land. It is a proud thing for a man to feel conscious that he has paid for his land, and considering that it is, I am willing, if this bill is abandoned, to take up the other. Upon that point I believe the sooner the friends of the homestead bill come to a conclusion, if it cannot be sustained, the better, and let us try and take up something else. As for the provision of the honorable Senator from California, he will see at once that it is abandoning the principle of the homestead bill without any system in relation to graduation, or preemption. The one of the Senator from Virginia contains a regular system of graduation, and connects with that a permanent system of preemption.

Mr. WADE. I do not rise any further to argue the question of the homestead bill. I have taken occasion to say what I had to say upon that subject; but since my remarks were made, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] has written out a speech which he made upon that occasion. In that speech, as published, there are passages which I certainly did not hear uttered upon this floor at the time, and which I should not have allowed to pass unexplained if I had heard them.

I remember very well what the Senator said. He said, in general terms, that some of those who advocated the homestead bill upon this floor, in arguing upon the propriety of extending its provisions to foreigners, had impeached the American character, or said something in disparagement of native-born citizens. When he struck upon that subject, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DODGE] immediately challenged him to know whether he intended him as one of those who had said anything to the disparagement of the American citizen; and I recollect very well that the Senator from Delaware shrunk from any charge of that kind against the Senator from Iowa. The Senator from Iowa then took occasion to state that he had heard no Senators do so on this floor; and, so far as I understand, the Senator from Delaware dropped that part of his charge. I was somewhat anxious to see upon whom he would attempt to fix it; but my recollection is, that being repelled by the Senator from Iowa, he said no more upon that subject. I know very well that the Senator from Delaware encountered me pretty sharply. He alleged that I had said something to the effect that foreigners had a better right to the land than American citizens. Now, sir, that idea was extravagant. No sane man would pretend to say that they had a better right than American citizens. The fact is that neither of them has a right to the land which belongs to the Government, unless the Government sees fit to grant it to them for some reasons of its own, reasons of policy, which I think are very proper. I shall not attempt now to argue that subject. But in the printed speech of the Senator, I find words published which I did not hear, and which I believe were not spoken at the time. After the explanation of the Senator from Iowa, from which the Senator from Delaware shrunk, he turns round in his printed speech, and says: "the Senators from New York and Ohio will not so soon eat their words, I think." Now, sir, those words were not said on this floor, in that debate. I did not hear them. If such words had been uttered upon this floor, I should have repelled them. No, sir, this was an after-thought. Now, I wish to understand whether the Senator intended to insinuate by anything that he has written out in his speech, that in the course of my remarks I said anything in disparagement of the character of American citizens, which is plainly insinuated on the face of this paper; and if so, I want to know the words from which that inference is drawn? I pause for a reply as to whether such a charge was intended.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will answer you when you have done.

Mr. WADE. The Senator refuses to answer. Then I can only say, hypothetically, that if the honorable Senator intends to insinuate that I had said anything in disparagement of American citizens in my argument at that time—whoever says that I uttered one word or syllable to that effect asserts a sentiment as groundless and as silly as it is false and malicious. I said no such thing; I thought no such thing; and no Senator upon this floor, I presume, unless it be the Senator from Delaware, supposes that I said any such thing. Just as though I, an American citizen, should stand here to say anything in disparagement of the American citizen! I argued upon that subject, on that occasion, as well as I knew how, that it was the policy of the Government to extend the benefits of this bill to foreigners. I admit that I argued and said, on that occasion, that I did not see why the foreigner had not the same right as a native-born citizen, because neither of them had a right to it, unless the Government choose to give it. I stated at the time, that if the intention of this bill was really to grant a favor to A, B, or C, native-born or foreign, on that principle, I thought no discrimination could be made between them, because neither of them had the right to call on the Government for anything; but I placed it upon great principles of public policy, as the Senator from Illinois has just argued, that it was not only for the benefit of the beneficiaries, under the bill, but for the benefit of the Government, in bringing into cultivation an immense territory of wild lands which are lying unproductive and of no possible use to the Government—that it was the policy of the Government, in order that those lands may be reclaimed and improved, to grant them to such as would go there and cultivate them. That was my argument, and I argued also that this Government had never lost anything by its liberality to foreigners. I contended for their fidelity to the Union at all times, from the Revolution to the present.

Another thing is insinuated here that has not a particle of foundation—that somebody, in some manner, asserted that we never should have acquired our independence if it had not been for foreigners. Such a thing was never asserted upon this floor. I did say that they had aided us in the acquisition of our independence. I pointed out some of the eminent men who had lent themselves to fight our battles in the Revolution, who had generously come forward and devoted their blood to the cause of our independence; and I alluded also to great numbers of more obscure but equally meritorious men in the ranks of the Revolutionary war, who aided us; but I never insinuated that the American Army, unaided in the Revolution, could not have worked out our independence. No such statement fell from me; but it is attempted to be insinuated that such sentiments were uttered by somebody.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am a little surprised, sir, at the exceeding feeling with which the honorable Senator has replied to the remarks which I made in reply to him on Friday last. He seems to be quite sore under them. He has taken a long time to rest upon them.

Mr. WADE. This is the first moment that I have seen the Senator's printed speech. He says that I am sore at what he uttered. I am not sore at what he uttered, but at what he printed.

Mr. CLAYTON. But the printed speech contains substantially just the speech that was delivered here; and if he paid any attention to what was going on, he knows it. But, sir, I scorn to enter into any controversy with him upon a question of that description. The point upon which I arraigned him was, that he said here, in the presence of the Senate of the United States, that he had no more right to a share of the public lands than a German, or any foreigner who comes here; and, sir, I reproved him for that sentiment. He attempted explanation again and again. What I meant, when I said that he had spoken disparagingly of the American people, was, that he had said they had no more right to the public lands of their own country than any foreigner whatever, and he cannot explain that away; he cannot retract that, whatever he may say of the printed speech, or of any other speech. He did declare here, on the floor of the Senate, that he was a son of the Old Bay State, and a citizen of Ohio; and yet he himself, "to the manor born," felt that he had no more right to any share of the public lands than any foreigner whatever. This was what he said. He said in fact, and he cannot deny it now, that an American citizen had no more right than a Russian or a Turk, or any other man whatever, to the public property of the United States. If that was not speaking in disparagement of the American people, I do not know what was.

Mr. President, I am not to be drawn away from the main point on which I arraigned the Senator from Ohio. I know the point on which I assailed him, and it is upon this point that he feels his position is indefensible. I care not in what terms he couches that proposition, I attack it. In regard to the declaration which I commented upon, that it had been stated that the people of the United States owed their independence to foreigners who had fought their battles, I did not attribute it to him. But it is a sentiment which has been uttered de die in diem. It has been spread from Maine to Georgia. It has been uttered for many years past, and many of those who have uttered it have believed it—

"Like one,
Who having, unto truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory
To credit his own lie."

Mr. WADE. Will the Senator inform me who said that upon this floor?

Mr. CLAYTON. Sir, I said before it has been said over and over again in other places. Your imagination is a very fertile one. I met the assertion, and intended to meet it; and if anybody asserts it here, I mean to deny it. While I gratefully acknowledged, as I said, the services of those gallant men who participated with the American people in the defense of their country, I intended to deny the assertion, (as every man within the sound of my voice knows it has been asserted again and again, in every part of this country, for certain political purposes,) that we owed our independence merely to the bravery of the foreigners who fought our battles; and while grateful for all the efforts made in our behalf, I say that if foreigners had not fought in a single battle, we should have achieved our independence against Great Britain. Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. WADE. No, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well, then there is no difference between the Senator and me on that point. But the issue between the Senator and myself lies here: I complained that he said the American citizen had no more right to the public lands of the United States than foreigners had. There was the issue. As to the immaterial points started by him in the case, I do not think it worth while to detain the Senate upon them. The position which I took in reference to that matter here on a former occasion, I maintain still in reply to the honorable Senator, in every part.

Mr. WADE. I wish to inquire of the Senator if he ever said these words: "The Senators from New York and Ohio will not so soon eat their words, I think." Did he say that?

Mr. CLAYTON. I said that in substance. I cannot say whether I said those words precisely. It is evident I meant nothing offensive by them. I said that the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from New York had, as I had explained it, disparaged the American people, by insisting that foreigners had the same right to the public lands as they had. It is plain that these words contained nothing offensive to the Senator. Nothing was further from my thoughts. But I did mean to call him to a reckoning for the utterance of such a sentiment upon this floor.

Mr. WADE. Here is what I take exception to:

"I am not one of those who persecute foreigners. I never shall do it. I am no bigot; no sectarian. I seek to persecute no man for his religion or his opinions. But I am resolved that no others shall ever, by my vote or influence, be placed in any position where they can persecute me or my friends, or deny us either civil or religious liberty. I have heard, during the progress of this debate, some things uttered to the disparagement of a portion of the American population, which can have but a very unfortunate effect, in my opinion. I was asked by my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. Dodge] whether, in my judgment, the naturalization laws should be repealed?"

Now, Mr. President, you will observe he says, in the course of the debate, though he does not disclose who said it, that there had been things said exceedingly offensive, because they went directly to the disparagement of the American people. The Senator from Iowa challenged the Senator to know whether he was the man to whom he alluded; and, sir, he shrank back from that. He said no more about it. I did not complain of his taking me to task for what I said. I did say, and I say again, that, as I understand it, neither a foreigner nor an American-born citizen has a right to an acre of the public land in this country. It all belongs to the Government; she may rightfully withhold it from native-born or foreign citizens. It is really a question of policy whether she should grant it to either. I agreed, as well as I could, for the propriety and policy of handing it over in limited quantities to actual settlers, both to native-born and foreigners, and said that I would not discriminate between the one and the other.

While up, on this occasion, I will say that the Government never has discriminated between foreigners and native-born citizens. Even without making a declaration, sir, a foreigner may go into the wilderness and may cultivate the land upon the same conditions as the native-born; and it depends upon himself whether he will make a declaration or not. He will be anxious enough to avail himself of the privileges of an American citizen. The law is so well aware of that fact, that it has never asked him to become an American citizen, while granting him the same privileges on the land as the native-born. I see no reason to depart from that now. If you sell the land at the same price, why should you discriminate between them? There is no reason for it. But I have already said what I had to say on that subject.

But these words, in this connection, were exceedingly well calculated to mislead the public. If the Senator had said no more in his speech than he now claims he says, I would not have called for an explanation of the charge. But the Senator says that I have rested upon this speech. I did not rest upon it as long as he did before he published it. Opportunity I might have had, if I had suspected there had been anything wrong in it, to call attention to it before. It is only just now that I have had the opportunity to see it. My attention has just been called to it, and I am very glad that it has been. I have heard, during the progress of this debate, certain things uttered to the disparagement of a portion of the American population. This is very offensive, and no gentleman would like to have it said that he argued here in disparagement of American citizens. That would sound rather broad when it went out to the public. Now he says he did not accuse us of it; but, in his printed speech, after being interrupted by the Senator from Iowa, he said: "The Senators from New York and Ohio will not so soon eat their words, I think." What words were they? Here is my speech, as it came from the hands of the reporter; and if you find a single word or syllable from which any just inference can be drawn that anything was said in disparagement of American citizens, I will relieve you from the charge of unfairness. The words, in the connection in which they stand, are exceedingly offensive; and, without explanation, would receive no other construction than that the Senator from New York and myself had stood forth here, with some kind of language, utterly in disparagement of American citizens, and discriminating in favor of the foreigner against the American citizen. It is a high charge for a Senator to make, that others had uttered sentiments in disparagement of American citizens, and then turn round and tell us that we will not eat our own words, he thinks. It is a thing that I will not stand here under patiently. I think it is offensive. But the Senator having explained that he does not pretend that he said that upon the floor, but merely said I argued that, as an American citizen, I had no better right to land than a foreigner, I care little about it.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is a matter of very great indifference whether the honorable Senator is satisfied or not satisfied. If he is not satisfied, he is at perfect liberty to take what satisfaction he dares call for outside the Senate. Now, sir, he is sore under what I said to him the other day when he uttered sentiments that he new were indefensible. He thought, sir, that he had no more right to the public domain than a foreigner; he attempted to explain it again, and again, and again; but he never made it any better. When I said that he would not eat his own words, I did not mean to say anything disrespectful. I meant to say that he would stand by what he had said. He made various efforts to dodge his position; yes, sir, to dodge the position he at first took he made efforts to dodge his words, and, as it was, I could not understand precisely at last what it was he did mean. But, he says now that he said nothing in disparagement of the American people. Why, sir, did not he and the Senator from New York dwell here for more than half an hour upon the fact that the railroads and canals and the internal improvements of the country had been built up and made by foreigners? Was not that a disparagement to the American people. Sir, it was not only a disparagement to the American people, but before God, it was untrue. It is an insult to the American people to make such a declaration as that. Not in disparagement to the American people to tell us that we are indebted for all our improvements, our railroads and canals, to foreigners! I do not know what sort of an American feeling the honorable Senator entertains. I do not understand him, sir, but he is a very different American from what I am.

Sir, in regard to this whole subject, I was not aware till a few minutes ago that it would be called up again; but my friend from Iowa [Mr. Dodge] had spoken of a class in this country of whom I know nothing. He had spoken of them in terms which I thought were not justifiable, stigmatizing them as contemptible, and, in their defense, I only alluded to the simple fact that they had carried every American city where they had raised their standard, and I thought that, therefore, they could not be contemptible. I had said, that so far as they were an American organization, the remark of the honorable Senator from Iowa was to the disparagement of them; but he said nothing in disparagement of the whole American people. I did not hear him say that we were indebted for our internal improvements, our railroads and canals, to foreigners. He made no statement of that description. No, sir, it was reserved for the Senators from New York and Ohio; and I care not to which of them I speak now, for they both stand in the same category. They both spoke in such terms, that if anybody chooses to examine their language, they will see that the tendency of their speeches was to exalt foreigners at the expense of our native-born citizens. Sir, I am an American in heart and soul. I belong to no faction; I seek aggrandizement and honor from no party. A few years will terminate my political career. The last spot I shall occupy in public life is here on the floor of the Senate. I have occupied some other places of some distinction in the country, but I have never known any spot which I would not change for a seat on the floor of the American Senate. I hold it as honorable as any position under this Government; and, therefore, sir, I come here for the purpose of asking nothing from parties, or factions, or organizations. I am speaking without any reference to private interest. I am speaking without the slightest regard to any effect it will have upon me now or hereafter; but I do regard, I must say to the honorable Senator from Ohio, the utterance of such a sentiment as he uttered here upon this floor, as deeply injurious to my countrymen, and as eminently calculated to degrade the high character and name of an American citizen.

Mr. WADE. When the gentleman accuses me of these things, I wish he would state in what connection they occurred.

Mr. CLAYTON. Yes, sir, I will give you the benefit of it. It is calculated to degrade the American citizen, and to cheapen this thing called American citizenship. It teaches him whose lot has been cast, and whose ancestors' lot was cast here, that when you come to a distribution of the benefits, or of the property of this Government, he is not to be considered as possessing any peculiar claims in any degree greater than an alien, no matter from what portion of the world he may come, be he a Turk, or belonging to any other country. According to the doctrines of the honorable Senator, they are as much entitled to the lands as a native American citizen. Does not the Senator feel that it degrades the just claims of American citizenship?

Mr. WADE. No, sir.

Mr. CLAYTON. He says he does not feel it at all. No, sir; the Hottentot or Caffre is placed beside an American Senator, and he has claimed for him rights equal to those of his own as an American citizen; and the Senator says he does not feel that the name of an American citizen is degraded by such an association. I envy the feelings of no man who cannot discriminate between the wild Indian, the barbarian of Africa, or, as I have said, the Turk or Hottentot, and the native American who has grown up under our free institutions, who is bound to peril his life for his country, who is liable to be called upon whenever the country makes a requisition upon him to fight her battles, who, if he is guilty of any overt act designated in the Constitution and laws of the country as amounting to treason, is liable to capital punishment for that act. I envy not the man who cannot discriminate between him and a foreigner, who is liable during the whole time that he remains in this country, until the period of actual naturalization, to be indicted for treason in the country from which he emigrates, if he should take sides against it, and who, in case he is really guilty of an overt act, which in an American would be treason, would be answerable not at all to our Government. Those, sir, were the views which I endeavored to present to him. It was in this light that I considered the honorable Senator as having uttered sentiments in disparagement of the American people; and if he differs from me, he is perfectly at liberty to do so as long, and as often as he chooses; but he will never make me regret the expressions which I had the honor to use the other day to reprimand him for his want of patriotic and true American feeling.

Mr. WADE. It requires no argument to answer the speech of the Senator now. I have answered the speech before. It has been made here by the Senator for the third time. He has given us these views upon this subject before. That I care nothing about. I have heard that speech before; but he did not say before that I had said anything which was in disparagement of the American people. He did not say that the Senator from New York and the Senator from Ohio would not eat their own words.

Mr. CLAYTON. If it is offensive, I say it now.

Mr. WADE. He says he cares nothing about my feelings. Be that as it may, I intend to set myself right upon this question, and I am not to be browbeaten by the Senator, however old he may be. If he willfully and maliciously misrepresents me, I will charge it upon him. Talk to me about skulking! Sir, he skulked into a private room, and there wrote what he dared not utter on this floor.

Mr. CLAYTON. That's a lie.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senator from Delaware to a portion of his speech, in this connection. I am not willing that it shall stand before the country in its present shape unnoticed and unexplained. He says:

"I am not one of those who persecute foreigners. I never shall do it. I am no bigot; no sectarian. I seek to persecute no man for his religion or his opinions. But I am resolved that no others shall ever, by my vote or influence, be placed in any position where they can persecute me or my friends, or deny us either civil or religious liberty. I have heard, during the progress of this debate, some things uttered to the disparagement of a portion of the American population, which can have but a very unfortunate effect, in my opinion. I was asked by my honorable friend from Iowa [Mr. Dodge] whether, in my judgment, the naturalization laws should be repealed? Why, sir, I have never been the advocate of the repeal of the naturalization laws; but let me tell him, and others here who have engaged in this debate, that any remarks which can be, by possibility, construed into a disparagement of the native American population of this country, when compared with the foreign population now pouring like a mighty flood into this country, are calculated to create parties that have been unknown before; and remarks of that description made on the floor of the Senate in one day's debate, will create an addition of one hundred thousand to the number of those who have been denominated, by some gentlemen, as 'Know-Nothings.'"

"Mr. Dodge, of Iowa. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?"

"Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly."

"Mr. Dodge, of Iowa. I ask him, then, to name that Senator who instituted an invidious comparison in favor of foreigners and against Americans. If he directly or indirectly alludes to me as having made such an assertion, I deny it in toto; and I must say for the Senate, that I have heard no such imputation made from any portion of it."

"Mr. CLAYTON. The Senators from New York and Ohio will not so soon eat their words, I think."

I now ask if the Senator from Delaware intended to say that I ever "eat my words?"

Mr. CLAYTON. Certainly not; nor had I the slightest idea that the Senator so understood me.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. That comports, then, with the honorable bearing of the Senator towards myself in all the relations in which we have ever stood to each other. During the time when I made my somewhat vehement remarks, I took occasion, knowing that we differed widely as the poles on this question, to avow for him my entire respect, and to allude, as I thought, in a pleasing manner, to a manifestation of that respect which had been given by the State whence I came, and by my colleague.

Then his speech continues:

"I did not charge the Senator from Iowa with having reflected on the American population; but now that he has called my attention to the fact, I will repeat one thing which he said, though I have no unkind feeling to gratify in doing so. He did say of certain American organizations in this country, that they were 'contemptible'—the 'Know-Nothings,' for instance, and the 'Native Americans.' I submit respectfully to my honorable friend, now in his cooler moments, whether they are to be considered as contemptible? I do not know myself what their principles are, though the Senator from New York, without any authority, has spoken of them; but one fact must be apparent to everybody, and that is, that those men who are called 'Know-Nothings' have, within a few months past, actually carried nearly every election in every American city where their standard has been raised. I am perfectly ignorant of what the real ends and objects of an association so formidable may be; but I cannot conceive it possible that an organization as extensive as that, and as successful as it has been in every instance, can, in any sense, be contemptible."

Mr. President, in speaking upon the subject of the homestead bill, and the generous and fair provision towards foreigners that it contained, I said I thought those who were not in favor of a repeal of the naturalization laws, or not disposed to favor that contemptible Native American, or Know-Nothing party, should not support the amendment then pending. I did utter those words. I spoke of the Native Americans thus; and why did I do so? I did it because the proclamation of their principles to the world, and an attempt to enforce them in the "City of Brotherly Love" caused its streets to be raked fore and aft with canister and grape shot, belched forth by cannon. I thus spoke of them, because they had caused American blood to be shed by American hands; because they had consigned to conflagration churches erected to the worship of the ever-living God, and burned them to ashes. I thus spoke of them; and, as long as I have a voice, I will thus speak of them. I do regard their principles, as attempted to be carried out in this country, as a violation of the provisions of our Constitution, and that religious liberty which Thomas Jefferson and his compeers secured to us, and which I shall ever seek to maintain and defend as long as I have a voice, a vote, or where-withal to do it.

Sir, if these almighty Know-Nothings, who have carried every election in every American city, as the Senator says, are the counterpart of the Native American party, I do speak of them thus: and so understanding, I spoke of them. If any gentleman who knows anything of their principles will proclaim them, and say they are American, in the broad acceptance of the term—will say they will not assail or war upon any particular portion of the community because they may choose to worship God under a particular form, according to their conscience—then I will take pride in unsaying everything I have said of them. In what I said of the Native Americans, I judged of them from their acts; and if the Know-Nothings are organized to carry out their doctrines, I will speak of them as I have spoken; and, so understanding, I did speak of them.

Mr. President, we should all bear in mind that if to-day we are called upon to persecute the Catholics for opinion's sake, we may to-morrow be called upon for the same reason to persecute the Baptists or the Presbyterians. It is an atrocious sentiment. It is especially atrocious when we remember that, with patriotic devotion, our Catholic fellow-citizens rallied around our country's standard and helped bear our banner aloft to the Halls of the Montezumas, where it was planted in triumph. Ostracize the Catholic, and no sect will escape, even while we profess universal toleration. Sir, I especially ask the Senate to mark the devotion of the abused Catholic to our banner in every war in which we have been engaged, under circumstances, too, that were strongly calculated to excite their sensibilities. They are an abused sect, but they were true to us when attempts were made to convince them that our army of invasion in Mexico would sack and pillage the churches of the Christian body of which they are members. Sir, they faltered not, but they contributed their blood and treasure in the defense of our common country; and as they are the strongest body of our foreign-born population the sacrifice was important.

Of proscriptive native Americanism I know enough to lead me to oppose it. If, as is represented of the Know-Nothing organization, it requires its members to war upon a man because of his religion, that religion may be my father's; or the place of his birth, which we all know is accidental, it would require me to proscribe my colleague because his father was born in Wales; such a society I denounce as miserable and contemptible.

I know not what my respected friend from Delaware may suffer from foreign immigration; but, referring to actions which speak louder than words, I said here, and I declare now before God and the Senate, that in no county in Wisconsin or Iowa, or any portion of the Northwest, have we ever heard from this population the first intimation of a disposition to resist any one of the laws of the United States, or the process of our courts. We have never heard from them any threatening, or contempt towards the Government, more than among our own citizens. I beg gentlemen to bear in mind that, unless they so legislate as to keep these foreigners in the Atlantic States, we in the West are those who will suffer, if any are to suffer from them; and it should be remembered that there has never been the first complaint from that portion of our country as to the disloyalty of these people who have settled there.

Mr. CLAYTON. I wish to say, in reply to my honorable friend from Iowa, that I do not undertake to stand here as the champion of the Native Americans or the Know-Nothings of the country. Probably no man knows less about them than I do; but there is one historical fact, in reference to which I desire to correct the honorable Senator. He has evidently understood that the first blood which was shed in Philadelphia, where this party organization seems first to have arisen, was drawn by those whom he calls the Native Americans. Sir, that is not the understanding which I had, and I lived within forty miles of the spot where the battle, if I may use that term, occurred. This is the first time that I ever heard any other version given to the story than this: That these men called Native Americans had assembled at a public meeting, and were deliberately shot down by foreigners, and that was the whole cause of the feud between them. If my honorable friend is better acquainted with the facts than I am, he can say so; but that is the version I have always understood; and I thought I was a perfectly impartial observer of what occurred there. Then I put it to my honorable friend, who I believe is as true an American as any one that can be found here or elsewhere, if his own countrymen had been shot down at a public or political meeting, by any set of men, whether he would not have felt exceedingly indignant, and whether he might not, with the aid of others, under the influence of the excitement caused by such an outrage, have attacked them in return? Sir, I only state these things for the purpose of putting my friend right, and to desire him to look into the matter and inquire whether he may not have done his own countrymen injustice in this particular. That he intended to do them injustice I never shall believe; but I think he has done it.

Now, sir, with regard to the Know-Nothings, as I said before, I do not understand what their principles are. The Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] to whom I replied the other day, undertook to read from some obscure newspaper, the name of which I cannot remember, what were their principles. If that paper was authorized to speak for them, it denounces Romanism. The grounds upon which they undertake to denounce it I have not seen nor heard; nor do I know the fact, from anything that I am authorized to say here, that they themselves are against the Catholics, or desire to persecute them.

But, sir, I desire to call the attention of the Senate now, upon this occasion, to a debate—it can scarcely, perhaps, be called a debate—but to a speech which was made on this floor sometime ago by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, who adverted strongly to the intolerance of the Catholic church, in reply to some articles which had been published by Archbishop Hughes.

Mr. CASS. The honorable Senator is under a misapprehension. I did not advert to the intolerance of the Catholic church as a church. I maintained that the construction put by some of its members on a certain effort was not warranted, and that it did not involve the Catholic religion truly. I made no reflections on the Catholic church at all.

Mr. CLAYTON. But on that occasion reference was made to a newspaper called the Shepherd of the Valley, which contained sentiments highly intolerant. Now, I ask the Senator from Michigan whether he did not, after that debate was over, receive an additional and new number of that same paper called the Shepherd of the Valley reiterating sentiments highly intolerant, declaring, in fact, against liberty of conscience, religious toleration, liberty of speech, and even liberty of thought? Did not the honorable Senator receive such a paper as that?

Mr. CASS. I did; and the amount of it was pretty much as the honorable Senator states.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well. I received such an one, and have it now. At the top of that paper was the name of the Archbishop of that diocese, Peter Richard, I believe. The editor of the paper stated that he was authorized to use his imprimatur. That, also, the honorable Senator saw. Now, sir, knowing as little about sects as any man, being as little of a sectarian as any man in the United States, and as little of a bigot, never having had the slightest feeling to persecute my fellow-citizen on account of his religion, yet I will avail myself of this occasion to say, that if these were the sentiments of the Catholic church, then everything that has been urged against them in regard to intolerance is sustained; but I cannot and will not believe it without further evidence.

Some of the most estimable friends I have in the world are Catholics. Some of my ancestors have been Catholics. I have no motive for believing statements against them, and I will not believe them until they are substantiated, not only by credible testimony, but by irresistible testimony; but let me bring my honorable friend from Iowa back to this fact. If those men who are called "Know-Nothings," have seen such papers as that which the honorable Senator from Michigan has received, and which I received, they would probably form the opinion that here was existing in the community a highly intolerant religious sect, dangerous to their own religious liberty; and if they honestly believed that, then my honorable friend surely would be one of the last men in the world to denounce them for their opposition to it; for I am sure he would be one of the very first to stand up always in defense of both civil and religious liberty.

Mr. WELLER. I suppose it will be impossible to obtain a vote to-day. I desire to submit a few observations on this subject, but I will postpone those remarks until the substitute which has been submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. STUART] shall be printed. I shall, therefore, be compelled to move an adjournment, simply expressing the hope that there may be no serious difficulties between our two young friends upon the other side of the Chamber, who have been so belligerent this afternoon. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, July 18, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is upon the motion to recommit the bill, reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled an act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States," passed August 30, 1852.

THOMAS K. GLENN.

Mr. KERR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 448, being "An act for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn," that it may be put upon its passage. The bill makes no appropriation of money. It merely empowers the Postmaster General to correct an obvious mistake which he says ought to be corrected in a contract which one of my constituents made with the Post Office Department for carrying the mail in 1851.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

TERRITORY ACQUIRED FROM MEXICO.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following bill: "An act declaring the southern boundary of New Mexico."

The bill was read in extenso, for information, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That until otherwise provided by law, the territory acquired under the late treaty with Mexico, commonly known as the Gadsden treaty, be, and the same is hereby, incorporated with the Territory of New Mexico, subject to all the laws of said named Territory.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I merely desire to state to the House, in a few words, the object of the bill. Gentlemen who have listened to the reading of the bill will see at once the propriety of its immediate passage. The territory which we have lately acquired under the Gadsden treaty is now without law. There are no courts organized in the territory for the execution and enforcement of the laws. It is necessary, therefore, inasmuch as the territory is open to settlement, that there should be some laws for the protection and government of the people who settle there. I hope, therefore, as it seems absolutely necessary to extend the benefit of laws over that territory, that there will be no objection to the introduction and passage of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Certainly.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does this bill come from any committee?

Mr. PHILLIPS. It does not. I am on the Committee on Territories, but I do not propose the bill from that committee. It is so self-evident a proposition, that I did not think it necessary for it to receive the approbation of the committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. How can we tell, before the boundary is run, what people are to come under our jurisdiction?

Mr. PHILLIPS. The bill states it as all the country acquired by the treaty with Mexico, and which is annexed. That is the boundary. The treaty settles the land that is acquired, and we annex just that land which we acquired under the treaty.

Mr. CHANDLER. But we have appointed a commission to ascertain what the boundaries are, and to ascertain who are included within the lands thus acquired.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania, that that makes no difficulty. We annexed Texas, and the boundary was subsequently settled. It will constitute no difficulty, as the exact line shall be hereafter run.

Mr. PECKHAM. Are there any people residing on that acquired territory?

Mr. PHILLIPS. There are.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I object to the introduction of the bill.

NATIONAL HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back Senate bill (No. 178), "to incorporate the National Hotel Company of Washington City, with an amendment, and to have it put upon its passage. I appeal to the courtesy of the House to permit me to say one word in relation to it.

Mr. OLDS. Has the morning hour commenced?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. OLDS. This is a bill which must necessarily give rise to debate.

Mr. DAVIS. No, sir, it will not.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I think it will, and therefore I object.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to appeal to my friend from New York to withdraw his objection. I wish to make one statement. My colleague, the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia, is now absent from his seat, and confined to his room; and I therefore desire for him to introduce this bill.

Mr. JONES. Under these circumstances I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. WALSH. I renew it.

Mr. DAVIS. Then let it go.

NEWSPAPER POSTAGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is entitled to the floor on the proposition to recommit the following bill:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage in the United States,'" passed August 30, 1852.

Mr. OLDS. I do not see the gentleman from Virginia in his place; and believing, as I do, that this bill is thoroughly understood by the House, after having been discussed when the proposition was up some weeks ago, I move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw, for a moment, his call for the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. Certainly. I withdraw it.

Mr. WASHBURN. Mr. Speaker, is there a motion pending to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then, if it is in order, I will move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to recommit it.

Mr. WASHBURN. But is it not also in order to make the motion which I have indicated?

The SPEAKER. Yes; it is also in order to move to send it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN. I hope that this bill will not pass. I do not see any occasion for its passage. I do not believe that it is demanded by the wants of the country. On the showing of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] I believe it is not demanded, and that it ought not to pass. I believe that now, at the present time, the Post Office Department is rightly considered a self-sustaining Department.

The Government uses this Department to a very large extent. All the Departments of the Government use it. It is used by the Post Office Department as well as others; and the Government has also considered it to be a matter of public interest, and for the public good, that the members of Congress should have a right to use it without paying postage to the Department; use it to frank letters, documents published by order of Congress, speeches, proceedings of the two Houses, &c.; for the information and advantage of the whole country, and not of the writers of letters and subscribers to newspapers merely. For all the purposes for which that Department is used, and which are for the interest of the country and the people generally, all the people, the postage payers, and non-postage payers, ought to pay; and, to effect this, the Government should pay its own proportion, its own equitable and just share of the expenses of the Department.

By the Government paying postage upon letters and newspapers, in the same manner and at the same rates that individuals do, I believe the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads [Mr. OLDS] will not deny that the Department would be a self-sustaining one. I believe he admits that fact. We have found it necessary to have post roads, and post offices, upon our frontiers, for the purpose of forming connection between this city, and the Atlantic sea-board generally, with the exterior portions of the country—for the purpose of connecting the center with the circumference. We have found it necessary to have post roads and post offices for the benefit of the Army and the Navy, for the opening and facilitating settlements in the Territories, and increasing the sales of our lands for the advantage of the general Treasury. Those routes and offices are not self-sustaining, but they are necessary for the interests of the Government, and the people generally, and for sustaining those distant frontier routes, for transmitting intelligence from the departments of the Government, the Government, and not the postage payers alone, ought to contribute.

It is unreasonable to make the newspaper readers and the letter-writers pay for transporting letters of the Government officers, and the mails of the departments, and for the establishment of post roads for carrying the mails into the far-off territories, in the outside portions of the Republic. Make the Government pay what it should pay, what its fair proportion is, and the Department would be self-sustaining. But it is unreasonable to make the newspaper readers and the letter-writers pay for those who do neither. It is unequal and unjust. The service of the Post Office establishment, to the extent of $2,000,000 at least, is for the uses and advantage of the Government. That amount, as it is incurred for the benefit of all, should be paid by all from the Treasury, into which all pay, and not by increasing the rates of postage which are paid by part only of the people.

I see by a schedule which was read the other day by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] that in the State of Maine the Department is self-sustaining, and considerably more. The post office receipts in that State for 1853, according to a statement in the speech of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] were $125,194 94, and the entire cost of transporting the mail, and the commissions of the postmasters, and all expenses of the Department, in and for that State, amount to $112,654 24, leaving a surplus of $12,540 70. The postage payers of Maine, then, sustain the Department so far as they are concerned, and contribute some $12,000 for carrying the mails in other States.

But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] is not satisfied with that, and he proposes to put upon the newspaper readers of the State of Maine an additional tax for the advantage of other States, instead of requiring the Government to make up the balance by paying for services which it has ordered and used, and which, if of any advantage, are of advantage to the people generally. It is unjust and unequal. It is oppressive upon the people of that State—upon the newspaper readers of that State. Maine now pays to the Department a surplus of $12,000, not for her own use, but another's; you propose to increase this surplus by raising, in effect, the tax on newspapers, so that she will pay an excess over expenses of $20,000 or $30,000, instead of $12,000. I protest against her being made to contribute more largely to the mail service than she now does; and maintain that the deficit should be paid by the General Government.

Therefore it is that I object to the passage of this bill, and I hope it will either be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where it can be discussed fully and at length, or be laid upon the table. I have already made the motion to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and in accordance with my promise to the gentleman from Ohio, I renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I have risen to reply to the question put by the honorable gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] when this bill was under discussion, a few days ago; and when I had no opportunity to reply to it. That question was put to the opponents of the bill; and its words were: "Are you not willing to have the Post Office Department sustained?" For one, I answer, that I am not.

Government establishes a Post Office Department; and arrogates the exclusive right to carry our letters. It establishes its prices for the work; and, then, if we hesitate to pay, it scolds us with the inquiry: "But are you not willing to have the Post Office Department sustained?" We think it wrong to be compelled to pay these prices—first, because Government cannot do the work economically, and for reasonable prices—second, because Government has no right to undertake the work; and is guilty of usurpation in undertaking it. I hold that Government is a usurper, whenever it assumes a work which the people can do.

Suppose Government should establish a "Clothes Department;" and should undertake to clothe all the people, young and old, male and female; and should claim the exclusive right to do so? Along with the dresses it sends the bills. The people grumble at both the bills and the usurpation;—at the bills, because they are twice as great as would be the cost, were the work done by themselves; and at the usurpation, because it is so flagrant. But Government insultingly replies: "Are you not willing to have the 'Clothes Department' sustained?" Would this be borne with? It would not;—nor should the Post Office usurpation and extravagance.

I ask the gentleman from Virginia, if he believes that Government can carry our letters and newspapers at as small expense as the work can be done for by private enterprise? If he does, why then, in the name of consistency, is he not in favor of our making Government the carrier of our merchandise and provisions and persons?—of passengers and property? But that gentleman is a practical man. He is not, as in the public esteem I am—a mere theorist. He knows, better than I can tell him, that it would not cost private associations one half as much to carry the mail as it costs Government.

But, he may say, that private associations would, nevertheless, charge higher rates of postage than would Government. Again, I would say, that the gentleman from Virginia is a practical man; a man, too, of many ideas; and not laboring under the reproach, as does my own unhappy reputation, of being a man of one idea. The gentleman must, therefore, know that when a work is thrown open to unlimited competition, the charge for it will be brought down to the neighborhood of the cost of it. But, the gentleman will perhaps say, that if Government gives up the Post Office Department, individuals who live in remote and inaccessible portions of the country will not be able to get their letters and newspapers, save at great cost. But pray, what has Government to do with such a fact? Suppose a man should perch himself on the top of the Rocky Mountains, and should complain to the Government, that it costs him ten dollars to get a letter to his mountain home; and should call on Government to deliver his letters at ten cents a piece. Would Government be bound to listen to his call? Certainly not. If he will receive his letters under a ten cents rate of postage, let him come down from his eyrie, and live among the comforts and accommodations of civilized life. Government is no more bound to indemnify him for the disadvantages of his home, in respect to postage, than in respect to other things. Nay, I insist that Government is no more bound to carry letters cheap for its citizens, than it is to make a poor man rich, a sick man well, or an old man young. If people are tempted, by the advantages of it, to take up their home in the wilderness, let them bear its disadvantages patiently, as well as enjoy its advantages gratefully.

The gentleman from Virginia professed his willingness to encourage private enterprise to come into competition with the Post Office Department. He told us that the bill provides for a virtual increase of newspaper postage: and that, hence, private enterprise could sustain an easier competition with the Post Office Department. But the competition, which he would encourage, is in carrying newspapers only. Newspapers, the price for carrying which is but a few pennies a pound, private associations may carry. But letters, the price for carrying which is a dollar a pound, Government alone shall have the right to carry. Surely the gentleman was not in earnest. He was but joking. He was making experiments upon our stupidity for the amusement of himself and of others, who love to see what easy dupes we are. Were two gentlemen to sit down to a turkey; and were one of them to tell the other that he might have part of the bone—nay, that he might run his chance for even all the bone—but that all the meat he must reserve to himself—the air of affected liberality, with which he would make this proposition, would be very like that, which characterized the gentleman's similar proposition.

Had the gentleman from Virginia been candid at this point, and really in earnest to let individual enterprise into competition with the Post Office Department, he would have permitted the competition to extend to the carrying of letters, as well as newspapers. Make the competition thus comprehensive, and it would not endure long. In less than six months the Government would fly from it forever. So far as the carrying of letters and papers is concerned, the occupation of the Government would soon be gone.

"How long halt ye between two opinions?" But this is not a pertinent quotation. We are not divided in opinions. We are agreed, that this work can be cheaper done, and, every way, better done, by private enterprise than by Government. But most of us shrink from openly favoring so radical and important an innovation, as the breaking up of the Post Office Department. Unless it be a person of a one-man party like myself, or a person like the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] who is also of a one-man party, I scarcely know any on this floor, who have so little to win or lose, as to venture to identify themselves with this innovation.

But, Mr. Speaker, the people will ere long, demand this innovation—this breaking up of the Post Office Department—in tones that cannot be resisted.

The Post Office Department is doomed, from its own inherent falsity and folly. It must sink from its own weight, if not sooner overthrown and displaced by a rational and economical postal system. It is a system, too, directly and glaringly in the face of reason, common sense, justice, economy, to live much longer. But I will not consume more of the time of the House.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am desirous, before this measure is decided, to submit one or two considerations, which seem to me to be of some importance, in view of the interests to be prejudiced. I have no desire to enter at large into the discussion. In the first place, I am free to say that I believe the bill is one of the most mischievous that has been introduced here this session. Although I have listened with much interest to the arguments which have been addressed to the House in support of the bill, still, in view of the facts now existing in the Department and country, I am unable to see the ground upon which gentlemen can stand to ask us to increase the price of newspapers by augmenting the postage on them for transportation through the mails. If I understand correctly, the object of the bill is, to derive revenue by imposing a tax on the readers of printed matter. It repeals the discount now allowed for prepayment, and thereby doubles the postage, or tax, on printed matter. I contend that the bill is wrong in principle. Indeed, it seems to me that the case must be urgent which would call for the throwing of obstacles in the way of the onward progress of the intellect of the country; and unless the chairman of the committee shall show to the House that the strong necessities of the Government require it, the House will hesitate long before they pass such a law.

It is contended that the Post Office Department should sustain itself, and it is contended that those who use the Post Office Department should pay for its privileges; and, as I understand it, upon these two grounds the argument in favor of the bill rests. So far as the first proposition is concerned, I think the time has come when we should examine with great care the proposition itself, to see if it is well founded. I know very well that by reference to early reports in connection with the Post Office, it will be found to have been assumed as a principle that the Department should pay for itself. But I undertake to say, that the facts now existing, and the experience of the past few years, have shown to us that in this country, whatever may be the result elsewhere, it is not the principle upon which the Department should rest. If it is, I am still prepared, as I think, to show that in proper time the Department would be able to sustain itself. The experiment has not been tried long enough, and there have been obstacles thrown in the way which have prevented its successful working; and I think that in time the Department, under the present rates of postage, will abundantly support itself.

But, waiving this, I ask what ground is there for contending that the Department should support itself in the United States? While we are organizing Territories, and while we are establishing post routes in parts of the country sparsely settled, and while we are putting upon the Department the burden of sending from post to post the immense amount of matter franked by Congress and by every branch of the governmental departments, how can it be contended here, under these circumstances, that the theory of the Post Office Department would require that it should support itself. No gentleman has given a good reason why it should, any more than that any other department of the Government should sustain itself. I suppose the honorable chairman of the committee will agree that, up to 1852, the Department did more than sustain itself. I have here a statement of the aggregate amount of the receipts and expenditures of the Department from 1790 to 1851 inclusive, and I find that the expenses of the Department were $65,157,000, while the receipts of the Department during the same period were $65,819,000, leaving a balance to the credit of the Department of $668,000, more or less. That estimate terminates with the year 1851.

In the year 1852 the deficit was about $200,000. That is to say, up to the year 1853, there was to the credit of the Department something over $400,000. I suppose it is true that in the year 1853 the deficit in the Department from the receipts over the expenditures was very large. I am not aware that the amount has been stated precisely in the course of this discussion. To what is this deficit attributable? I would like the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to say to what he thinks that deficit in the Department is fairly attributable; and to say whether it be not attributable to three causes; not to the diminished postage alone, by any means, but to the great increase in the number of post routes, in the expensive character of those routes, and in the immense amount of privileged correspondence and franked documents? Will the honorable chairman tell us how many new post routes—expensive post routes—have been established in parts of the country where self-support would be impossible, since the latter part of 1852? Will the chairman also say to us how much matter has been franked from the Departments, and by members of Congress? I undertake to say, and I desire to be corrected if my statement is not true, that it has been found, by examination at the Post Office Department, that if the amount of matter mailed from the Departments by the different branches of Government, and by members of Congress were estimated, it will come to a larger sum than the deficit in the accounts of the Post Office Department. I understand that on that point there has been an estimate made at the Post Office in the city of Washington. I desire to know whether I am or am not correct in that respect. And I understand that it was ascertained by one month's careful investigation—so far as an approximate estimate could be made—that the deficit would be more than made up, if the amount of matter sent by the Government, and franked by members of Congress, were paid for.

Mr. OLDS. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow me to reply to his inquiry?

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly.

Mr. OLDS. The estimate of the deficit of the Post Office Department for the present fiscal year is $1,800,000. The actual deficit will be over $2,000,000. The estimated deficit for the next fiscal year is $2,440,000 additional. I cannot now say what the actual deficit will be. Let it be remembered that this sum does not embrace the amount for ocean mail steamers, $1,500,000. Add that to the deficit for the present year, and it will make it $3,500,000, and it will make the deficit of the next fiscal year $4,000,000. The free matter sent by the Post Office Department estimated from that for the month of January, would be $1,440,000.

Mr. ELIOT. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, that the honorable gentleman has replied distinctly to one of my inquiries, whether, if the whole amount of matter mailed from all the Departments, and from the legislative halls, were paid for, the deficit in the Post Office Department would not be made up?

Mr. OLDS. I said that the whole of it would amount, according to the account for the month of January—in which the account was kept at the Post Office Department for the legislative department of the Government, and all the Executive Departments—to some $1,440,000. That is for the whole. While the deficit, leaving out the ocean steamer service, is $2,440,000.

Mr. ELIOT. I understand the honorable gentleman to speak of the actual deficit of 1853, estimating the amount of mail matter according to the account kept during the month of January, 1854, which would reduce, according to that statement, the deficit about one half, excluding the expenses of the ocean mail steamer service. I do not find, from the statistical tables of the Departments which have been furnished to this House, the means of ascertaining how far the gentleman is or is not correct. To this deficit it is said much would be added by the ocean steamer service.

Mr. OLDS. It is an easy matter to ascertain what that is. Those services are matter of contract. We pay $870,000 to the Collins mail line, and $730,000 to the San Francisco line per annum, making more than $1,500,000. The estimated deficit of the Post Office for the last year was $1,800,000, but the actual deficit was upwards of $2,000,000. The estimated deficit for the next fiscal year is $2,400,000.

Mr. ELIOT. In 1852 the change was effected in the legislation.

Mr. OLDS. Upon newspapers only.

Mr. ELIOT. And when upon other mail matter?

Mr. OLDS. In 1851.

Mr. ELIOT. The amount of deficit in that year was about $200,000. That was the year in which the postage was changed upon the newspapers.

Mr. OLDS. For the first fiscal year after the act of 1851 went into operation, the deficit was over $200,000. Under the law of 1852, the postage on newspapers had fallen off over $600,000. That was embraced in the receipts of the Department for the first fiscal year after the act of 1851 went into effect.

Mr. ELIOT. To what does the gentleman attribute the fact, that, during the first year after the law was changed, the deficit was so small as the amount named, $200,000; which is about the amount of deficit shown by the official returns?

Mr. OLDS. The gentlemen himself states one of the reasons. We have established new mail routes and new offices.

But there is another reason, and it is the increased expenditure of the Department upon the railroads of this country. This is adding hundreds of thousands to the expenses of the Department every year.

Mr. ELIOT. And I pray to ask, if, because of this expenditure, thus increased, the reading public, that portion of the people who read papers and pamphlets, should be taxed to pay it?

Mr. OLDS. Do not they get all the advantages of the mail service?

Mr. ELIOT. It is very well known, if we regard the public in these United States, if we take into account the fact that everybody is busy all the time, busy at the desk, the counting-room, at the wharf, in the workshops and in the legislative halls; busy everywhere, it is perfectly obvious that the fact must be, and we know the fact is, that the great amount of information derived by the people of the United States, is derived from the periodical press of the country. Why, Mr. Speaker, we cannot, as a people, read books. There is, to be sure, a vast amount of that species of reading done; more of it, perhaps, than in any other country. But as a people we cannot read books requiring time and thought, and our reading is mostly of newspapers and periodical publications. The larger part of the acquired knowledge of our people is from the periodical literature of the country, and of this the daily issues of the press constitute a large portion.

I had the honor of a conversation the other day with a gentleman who occupies an enviable place in this House, who said to me—and his statement would be that of many others upon this floor—that he was brought up on a farm, that his muscle was developed behind the plow, and that his reading of books was done at night and on rainy days. But he said that for the last ten years his incessant occupation had almost disabled him from reading books; and that is the experience of thousands in the country. They cannot read books; but their reading is principally confined to newspapers and periodicals. But now the attempt is made to compel this portion of the public to pay twice the present amount of postage charged on that species of reading where it passes through the post office.

Mr. OLDS, (interrupting.) No, sir; that is not the object or effect of the bill. It is to make the men who read the newspapers pay for them, and not the public. Under the present arrangement, the public have to pay for the newspapers, and not the men who read them.

Mr. ELIOT. Very well. But you make the readers pay twice as much.

Mr. OLDS. Yes, sir; that is just it.

Mr. ELIOT. But it does not appear that the readers of newspapers do not now pay their proper share. Let the Government cease to interfere at all. Let the Government lift its hand altogether. Let private enterprise do the work, or let the rates of postage, so far as the press and our periodical literature are concerned, remain as they are. Do not let us, as the honorable gentleman from Ohio asks us to do, take a step backward.

It has been contended that if this bill should pass, newspapers will, to a great extent, be carried from place to place for less than is now charged through the mails. If that is so, the bill to that extent might work no hardship; but it would do no good to the Department. So far as the bill would be effective, it will be injurious.

But it was argued by one gentleman who addressed the House upon the subject the other day—I refer to the honorable gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. BARRY]—that those who use the post office should pay the expenses of the post office.

Mr. OLDS. And a good proposition it was.

Mr. ELIOT. "A good proposition" says the honorable chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Then let the Government pay for its use of the post office as well as the people.

Mr. OLDS. Certainly; that is precisely what

I wish. I introduced a bill into this House the other day containing a provision for making the Government pay for all the matter now franked through the mails. But, if I mistake not, the gentleman voted for the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman states correctly. I did so vote. If the honorable gentleman from Ohio introduces a bill into the House containing features which I believe to be objectionable, he must not expect me to vote for it because there may be one feature which I might be otherwise disposed to favor.

Mr. OLDS. I am happy to hear the gentleman say he favors that proposition, for I propose to introduce a separate bill which shall contain that proposition by itself.

Mr. ELIOT. Well, sir, I must say I commend the perseverance of the honorable gentleman from Ohio in continuing to introduce bill after bill, although the House knocks them in the head as soon as they make their appearance. And now we are told that we are to have still another one. Well, sir, I can assure the honorable gentleman that whenever he shall present a bill here that shall commend itself to my reason, it shall receive my support.

Mr. OLDS. Thank you.

Mr. ELIOT. I objected to the provision in the bill the other day, because I believed that the practical effect of it would not be to abolish the franking privilege. The honorable gentleman, it seemed to me, sought to accomplish that object by legislation, the practical effect of which would not lighten the work of the Departments, or of members of Congress; or accomplish any real benefit to the Post Office; or change substantially the right now used of franking documents and letters through the office.

But the argument in favor of the passage of this bill is, that those who use the post office should pay for the post office. Well, sir, without going into any argument at length upon this point, I say in reply that it is impossible to carry such a proposition into effect justly, without fixing different rates of postage in the different sections of the United States. Unless that is done, I am unable to see how the honorable gentleman will succeed in making those who use the post office pay for it. Sir, has the honorable gentleman examined the statistics which throw light on this proposition?

The gentleman from Maine has referred to his own State. From the statistical tables furnished by the Department, I find that during the year 1853 the total receipts were $125,194, and the expenses were $52,767. In New Hampshire the collections were $81,000, against $31,000 expenditures. Vermont has $78,000, against $62,000. Massachusetts $453,000 receipts, against $130,117 expenditures.

Mr. OLDS. There is an error in the statement just there. By a statement from the auditor's office, which I have in my hand, I learn that the expenditures in Massachusetts for the year 1853 were $298,366 56.

Mr. ELIOT. I should like to know in what the error consists. I presume that the postmasters' commissions are included in the amount given by the gentleman, and not in that which I have read.

Mr. OLDS. They are included in the amount I have given, because they fall under the expenditures of the Department.

Mr. ELIOT. I thought that was not exactly so, and believed, from the statistics furnished, that the net postage collected was $453,966. But the same fact stated by the gentleman must apply, I presume, to the other States, as well as to Massachusetts. The statement for Rhode Island is $47,000 receipts, against $12,000 expenditures. Is not the same fact true there?

Mr. OLDS. The statement of the auditor, in regard to Rhode Island, is $47,377 79 receipts, against $30,817 35 expenditures.

Mr. ELIOT. Then the same relative difference would prevail throughout, and the argument I was making is not, therefore, in the least affected. I think that the honorable gentleman will find, so far as the returns from Massachusetts are concerned, that they are true in proportion to those given in the tabular statement from her sister States.

Now, I desire here to make a reply to the assertion that this statement does not furnish an accurate idea of the amount of the transportation through the States. It is said, that although the expenses here given are chargeable to each State, that yet there are expenditures which ought not to be so charged, because they are for routes running through the State, the benefits of which are elsewhere. I presume that is eminently true in regard to the State of Maryland. And so it is true that there are many cross mail routes in Massachusetts over which letters and packages are carried, the expenses of which are chargeable, and are charged, to that State, while no revenue is derived by her on account of such routes. This is true with regard to Massachusetts, and I presume that it is true, to a greater or less extent, in some other States. You will find, upon an examination of this table, which I will furnish for publication, that the expenses of the State of Maryland are $152,000, while the expenses of transportation are $191,000. Gentlemen will find that the difference in some States is very great indeed. In New Jersey the postages collected were $89,000, while the expenses were $74,000.

Mr. OLDS. The statements of the gentleman are inaccurate, inasmuch as they do not contain the commissions of the postmasters. In New Jersey the total amount of expenditure was $109,913 91, while the postages collected were $89,074 17.

Mr. ELIOT. I am surprised that we have not had the means of obtaining information from the Department of the kind which has been produced by the gentleman from Ohio, and which appears to correct the tabular statement upon which we are to base our action. In the State of Mississippi, the postages collected were $73,000, while the expenses of the transportation were $115,900. I name that State because it is the State which the honorable gentleman represents [Mr. BARRY] who contended the other day that those who use the post office should pay for it. I do it for the purpose of saying that it would be altogether out of the question to make that rule apply unless a different rate of postage should be established in one part of the country from that which prevails in another. Why should the citizen of Rhode Island pay more than he pays now for post office accommodation, when the amount chargeable to his State for post office expenses is not more than one third of the amount which the State itself accounts for and pays over to the General Government. Because the State of Mississippi is so situated that the receipts from the Post Office Department do not pay the expenses, would it be equitable, would it be right, that the citizens of Rhode Island should be made to pay more than they already do, when now they pay so large a proportionate amount?

Mr. BARRY, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? If, as a matter of justice, the postage collected in one part of the country should be expended there, why should not the tariff collected in a State be spent there? We will pay you the surplus of postage if you will make up the necessary deficit which we pay upon the tariff.

Mr. ELIOT. I am afraid it would be a bad bargain for the State which the gentleman represents. The gentleman from Mississippi says that the amount collected within a State should be expended within the State. Is the difference between the amount which Massachusetts expends for post offices and mail routes, and the sum which she receives from postages collected, expended within the Commonwealth? Certainly not. It is paid over to the General Government, and the sum so paid more than makes up the deficit in the account of the State which the honorable gentleman represents. Massachusetts does something more than pay for the deficit in Mississippi. In view of these facts I ask whether it is right to impose a heavier tax upon one part of the common country for the benefit of the other, and to sustain and justify such imposition by the argument that those who use the post office should pay its expenses.

I have a statement prepared for the purpose of showing the interest affected by this bill. In this discussion there has been no statement made by which it would appear to what extent the people of the country will be affected. We legislate to give our friends from foreign countries a home-stand; and now the gentleman from Ohio wants to offset that kind of legislation by imposing upon his constituents, I cannot help saying, a double charge on all the newspapers they receive. Let us take care of our friends at home as well as of those who choose to make homes among us here from foreign lands. The honorable member [Mr. OLDS] will find, by consulting the statistics, that his own State, the State of Ohio, will be injured to as great an extent as almost any State in the Commonwealth except that from which I come, and perhaps the State of New York, by the passage of the bill on the table. Why, there are in the State of Ohio two hundred and sixty-one papers and periodicals printed. There is a circulation of four hundred and fifteen thousand one hundred and nine copies, and there is an annual issue of thirty million four hundred and seventy-three thousand four hundred and seven. The effect of the passage of this bill would be that every one of these publications that goes through the Post Office Department, would have to pay double the amount now charged.

Mr. OLDS. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him again?

Mr. ELIOT. Certainly.

Mr. OLDS. I venture to say that not one in twenty of these publications will be affected by the passage of this bill, from the fact that a paper circulates through the mails in the county where it is published without expense. It goes free. It would be the same thing in respect to the country press in Massachusetts. But when we come to the commercial cities, we find that it is the large-circulation papers of these cities that will be affected by the passage of this bill, as it is only these papers that circulate largely outside of the county where they are published, and even outside of the State. But it will not at all affect the county papers which circulate in the counties, and in the counties alone, pretty generally.

Mr. ELIOT. I am rather inclined to think that the truth lies between the two propositions. That the country press will not be affected so much as the city press, I have no doubt. But that the country press will not be affected at all, is a proposition which I am by no means inclined to admit. The honorable gentleman may speak of its effect in Ohio, but I think I may say, so far as Massachusetts is concerned, that the fact would not be found as he states it. Undoubtedly the city press would be most affected, and that has given rise to the argument that this is a bill to affect the city press, as between the city and country. Now, the answer to this is twofold. So far as the city press is concerned, the probability is, that if the bill passes, these papers would not go through the mails. Then the bill would do no good to the Department. If the bill should pass, and if the papers did go through the mails, then both city and country would be affected. Do not the honorable gentleman's constituents receive papers from New York? And are they not, so far, as much affected by the rates of postage on papers issued at that end of the country as they would be on papers issued near them?

Mr. OLDS. Yes; and I am willing that the people in my State who take the papers from New York shall pay the postage for them which they cost the Government to transport them.

Mr. ELIOT. The gentleman will find, by examination, (I will publish the tabular statement which I have prepared,) that throughout the country there are two thousand five hundred and twenty-six papers and periodicals printed. This I take from the statistical tables furnished by the census of 1850. I ought to say that it goes back to that time which is the last period at which I could find reliable information. But, taking the information there furnished, it appears there are two thousand five hundred and twenty-six papers and periodicals. There were issues amounting to five million one hundred and eighty-three thousand three hundred and seventy-seven. And the annual and total issue, at that time, amounted to four hundred and twenty seven million four hundred and eight thousand nine hundred and fifty-eight.

Here is the table from which I have been reading:

Now, sir, this was four years ago. The increase since that time I cannot estimate. I have set out these facts for the purpose of showing the extent of the interest which this bill prejudicially affects, if it operates substantially, and according to the expectation of the honorable chairman.*

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, (interrupting.) I would ask the Chair if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not, by one minute.

Mr. ELIOT. As the hour is so nearly out, I will yield the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I move that the House proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table. There is an immense amount of business there which we might as well dispose of.

The motion was agreed to RECESS OF CONGRESS.

The first business in order was the consideration of the concurrent resolution of the Senate, "providing for a recess from the first Monday of July until the third Monday of October."

Mr. HOUSTON. We have disposed of this matter, and I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

IRON MOUNTAIN RAILROAD.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table was the bill of the House "granting the right of way to the St. Louis and Iron Mountain railroad, through the arsenal, magazine, and Jefferson barracks tracts," returned from the Senate with an amendment.

Mr. BENTON. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ORR. I am opposed to concurring in the amendment; and before I present my views to the House, I ask that it may be read:

The amendment was read, as follows:

ble iron gates and crossing places, at such points as may be designated by the commanding officer at Jefferson barracks, the number of gates not to exceed four at the Jefferson barracks, one at the magazine, and one at the arsenal," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That a strong, substantial, plank fence be erected by said company between the road and the public grounds, at such place, and of such character, as the commanding officer of Jefferson barracks shall direct, with suitable iron gates, not exceeding four, at such points as shall be selected by such commanding officer; and the said company shall also cause to be constructed two covered ways at suitable places in front of said public grounds, and in such a manner as shall be approved by said commanding officer; and if, after the fence herein provided for shall have been erected, and the said road put in operation, it shall be found, in the opinion of the President, to be insufficient for the protection of lives and property, or for any other sufficient reason, he may require a fence of brick, stone, or iron, to be constructed, and the said company shall cause the same to be erected accordingly, at their proper cost and charges."

Mr. ORR. I ask the attention of the House to this Senate amendment, and also to the original bill which passed the House. At the last session of Congress, Mr. Speaker, upon the application of the stockholders of this St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad, the Committee on Public Lands, of which I was then a member, reported a bill granting the right of way through the arsenal and magazine grounds at Jefferson barracks, in the vicinity of St. Louis.

The bill passed Congress containing a restriction. It provided that the right of way should be granted upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of War might prescribe, so that the public interest in these grounds should not be injured or affected. I say, in that way the bill was reported to this House from this Committee on Public Lands, and in that way it passed both branches of Congress. The Government granted to the railroad company what they desired only, reserving to the Secretary of War the right to make such reservations as in his opinion were necessary to preserve the public works in the vicinity.

Well, sir, after the bill had passed, and become a law, application was made to the Secretary of War, who was familiar with the site, who was familiar with the locality, who had been stationed there in times gone by, and who was therefore capable of deciding correctly, to know what restrictions would be imposed. He did impose certain restrictions, five in number. But, sir, this company, finding these restrictions likely to be onerous to them, came back here to this House, indirectly appealing from the decision which had been made by the Secretary of War. They come back here, and ask that Congress shall give them permission to disregard the restrictions which the Secretary of War had imposed upon them as necessary for the protection of the public interests, and that they may have the right of way without any restriction being imposed upon them.

Now, sir, this was a bounty in the first place. It was a gratuity upon the part of the Government to allow a private corporation to go through the public grounds without compensation—without consideration. Sir, if these lands belonging to the Government had been the private property of a private individual, this Iron Mountain railroad company would have been compelled to pay perhaps thousands of dollars for the right of way. But because it was likely to promote the trade and commerce of St. Louis, and to accommodate the people of Missouri, the Government said: We will allow this right of way without charge, provided that you will comply with such conditions as the Secretary of War may impose. We leave the matter with him, and you must comply with such conditions as he says are necessary to protect our property there. Sir, this company pay nothing for this privilege—not a dollar. We have given them this bounty, and still they are dissatisfied, and appeal from that decision, and come here to obtain a removal of those restrictions.

Mr. Speaker, how many members of this House can tell the amount of injury that will be done to the public grounds by the passage of this bill in its present shape? How many members here can tell the extent of the injury that will result to the Government from the passage of this bill? It is assumed that these restrictions are not needed for the protection of the public interest. Well, sir, the Secretary of War, who was charged with the protection of those interests, says they are necessary. I ask gentlemen to consider this matter before they vote for the passage of this bill. I am determined, before I shall close these remarks, to spread before the House such evidence as that, if this bill passes, no gentleman can say that he did not know it was going to injure the public property.

Mr. EASTMAN. What were the limitations and regulations imposed by the Secretary of War?

Mr. ORR. Before reading a communication from the Secretary of War, which will furnish the gentleman from Wisconsin with all the information he desires, I shall beg leave to state how it came into my possession. It will be remembered that this bill was introduced at an early day of this session, and that, at the time, I made objection to it. Referred for consideration to the Committee on Military Affairs, it was reported back to the House, and passed during my absence. Had I been present, I should have opposed its passage. Seeing that it had passed the Senate as well as this body, I addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, requesting that he would put me in possession of all the facts and conditions in the matter. In reply, he wrote me, in these words:

WAR DEPARTMENT. }
WASHINGTON, January 28, 1854. }

SIR: I have considered the memorial of the president and directors of the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company, in regard to the action of this Department, under the act which grants them the right of way through the public grounds at the St. Louis arsenal, the St. Louis marine hospital, and Jefferson barracks, but by one proviso makes the location subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, and by another imposes the condition that the location of the road can, in his opinion, be made without injury to the public interest.

Soon after the passage of the act, the engineer of the company submitted a map of the proposed location, for the approval of this Department; and, after carefully considering the views expressed by the heads of the appropriate bureaus, and other officers who had reported on the subject, the following propositions were made to the company:

1. The road through the arsenal grounds to be located one hundred feet further east than the line on the map submitted.

2. The railroad company to be required to place a stone wall, of such height as the commanding officer shall designate, between the road and the ground occupied for military purposes, with suitable iron gates and ways, and a strong wire fence between the road and the water, with suitable iron gates and crossing places; the number of gates not to exceed four at Jefferson barracks, one at the magazine, and one at the arsenal—the points to be selected by the commanding officer thereof, but the Government to have the right to open as many ways across the railroad to the water, as the circumstances of the service may require, but without expense to the company: the road from the arsenal to the water to be passed over by a bridge, in such manner as to cause no obstruction.

3a. The commanding officer's house, and any other houses it may be necessary to remove in consequence of the road passing through the public grounds, to be taken down and removed to sites designated by the commanding officer, and put up at the expense of the company.

4th. The company to keep the gates, fences, and crossing places in repair as long as they retain the right of way for the road; and to keep at all times watchmen or other suitable persons to give timely notice of the approach of trains.

5th. That the company shall be responsible for all losses which may be sustained by the public, either by the destruction of public property, or by collision with the trains in passing over the several crossing places.

6th. Horse power only to be used in passing through the public grounds.

In making these propositions the Department had no disposition whatever to impose unnecessary burdens upon the company, or to magnify mere inconveniences into an injury to the public interest, and no condition is proposed which is not regarded as essential to guard against such direct and immediate injury as the proviso was intended to prevent.

The propositions were accepted by the company on the 26th of October. The memorialists say that the 1st has been complied with, and the 4th and 5th are not objectionable, and seek to be released from the 2d, 3d, and 6th.

The second condition they desire to be so changed as to allow them to construct a wire fence instead of stone walls. The Department was satisfied with a wire fence between the road and the water; but a stone wall between the road and the rest of the grounds is deemed indispensable, the post being a cavalry station; there are, and will continue to be, a great number of horses there, and the troops, moreover, will often be engaged in cavalry exercises and in training horses recently purchased for military evolutions. It would, in my opinion, be unsafe to do so, separated from passing trains by nothing but a wire fence, which would not prevent unruly animals from rushing upon the track.

The third condition is objected to, because the commanding officer's quarters are in a temporary wooden building, erected twenty years since, and scarcely worth the cost of taking down. Whatever be the value of the building, there can be no propriety in subjecting the Government to the cost of its removal, or erecting a new one. The company, for whose sole benefit it is to be removed, certainly should bear the cost, whether small or great.

That is what the Secretary of War says upon that branch of the subject. These are the conditions which the Secretary of War thought it necessary to impose upon the company in order to protect the public property. The Secretary requires of the company that they shall remove these houses at their cost, and he says further:

"The sixth condition is that which weighs heaviest upon the company, and, no doubt, will subject them to great inconvenience in making the road. To dispense with it, however, would, in my opinion, involve the abandonment of the magazine, and the construction of another, as well as the purchase of a site in some other locality."

Pass the bill in the shape in which it now lies upon your table, and you have here the opinion of the Secretary of War, who is specially charged with looking to your interests upon this subject, that it will devolve upon the Government the expense of abandoning the present site as a magazine, selling it and purchasing a new one, to accommodate this private corporation. Is it not a great sacrifice demanded of the public for the benefit of this corporation, who do not propose to pay anything for it.

The Secretary of War goes on further to say:

"The magazine in question was recently built at a cost of more than $20,000, and it is intended for a depot whence powder will be shipped, from time to time, to all parts of the coast accessible by water transportation. It appears to me that no argument is needed to show the danger of storing large quantities of powder within two hundred and twenty yards of a road on which engines are continually passing, and to haul powder to and from this store across their fiery track."

This letter is dated in January of this year. The expression of opinion made here by the Secretary, is fully confirmed by the recent disastrous explosion in the city of Wilmington, where powder was being hauled along the streets in common wagons, and where it ignited, nobody knows how, but, perhaps, by the tire of one of the wheels of the wagons striking fire from the stones over which it passed. The Secretary says further:

"Whatever may be urged to the contrary, the danger of sparks from such engines reaching the magazine, or of fire being communicated thereto by powder spilled from casks hauled across the track, is such, that I do not believe the magazine should ever be used after the engines once commenced running. Moreover, as an explosion would inevitably involve the destruction of the passing train, the danger to the passengers would be such that, even if the Department should be disposed to use the magazine, public sentiment would require its removal.

"The location of the road between the post and the river whence all the supplies of water are obtained, will, if locomotive engines are to be used, be destructive of the object to which the post is now applied, as the frequent crossing of large numbers of men with horses to water, cannot, under such circumstances, fail to be attended with serious inconveniences and danger."

The Secretary again says:

"In conclusion, I have to express the opinion that, if the petition of the memorialists be granted, the Government will be deprived of the use of the post as a school for cavalry practice, and the removal of the magazine will become necessary."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the information which I spread out before the House; and I would ask if gentlemen, out of mere kindness to the distinguished Representative from Missouri here, who advocated this bill on its former passage, are willing, by the passage of this bill, to devolve on the Government an expense of $50,000 or $100,000 without consideration? Now, sir, the public depots at St. Louis are at the point of all others best suited for such depots in the entire West. They are above the points where the large class steamboats may reach from below, and where the small steamboats may start going above. It is the proper point, therefore, for the transshipment of all public stores and provisions that are needed for consumption above and below. And yet, for the purpose of accommodating this company—while you do not know what is to be the result of your own knowledge, though you have the declaration of the Secretary of War, after a full examination, with a full knowledge of the subject—you are asked to pass this bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is but one way in which the bill can be defeated. It has reached that point from an indisposition, I have no doubt, on the part of gentlemen here not to interfere in a mere local question of this sort—it has reached, I say, that point where there is but one way in which the bill can be defeated. That way is by laying the amendment on the table. That will carry the bill with it. Before the question is finally taken, I shall seek the floor again, for the purpose of making that motion that the amendment do lie upon the table. And if this company are not willing to take the grant, the bounty which we give them on conditions which our officer who has to guard our interest annexes, let them build the road in some other direction. It is gratuity enough to give to them without allowing this company to prescribe to Congress and to the Government what conditions will be acceptable to them. We are the parties who are injured—we, the Representatives of the people who own this public property, and it is our duty to take care of it and to provide for it. Now, would it not be a monstrous proposition if this company were to apply to a private citizen for the right of way through his land, and if that citizen were to impose conditions of such grant for this company to come back when they had received this gratuity, and to insist that the conditions imposed would be modified for their interests, although, such grant were causing the interests of the citizen to be imminently jeopardized. I doubt if the former grant in a case of this sort, would not be recalled. Certainly it ought to be.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, I have finished what I desired to say on this subject. If there be any of the friends of this bill who desire to be heard, I shall yield the floor without making the motion of which I gave notice to the House. However, as soon as they shall have been heard, as I do not wish to cut them off from reply, I shall move to lay the amendment on the table; and I hope the House will make that disposition of it.

Mr. CARUTHERS. It may be within the memory of the House, that at an early period of this session I introduced a bill for the purpose of explaining and modifying the bill to which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] has alluded. Upon that occasion, I endeavored to explain to the House the objects we desired to accomplish; the reasons why we desired a modification, and our objections to the construction given by the Secretary to the act passed at a previous session of Congress.

At a previous session, the Iron Mountain Railroad Company were given a right of way through the public lands, to which the gentleman who has just taken his seat has alluded. The discretion in reference thereto was confided entirely to the Secretary of War, and he exercised that discretion in a manner which was thought by that company, by myself, and by this House, when they had this subject before them at a former time, as not necessary to carry out the intention of the act in reference to the protection of the public property there. In the requirements which the Secretary made at the time when the matter was entirely in his discretion, there was one point, and one main point, from which the company wished to be relieved, and which has induced them to come to this House, and ask a larger latitude than was allowed them by the Secretary. One requirement of the Secretary was, that the company should run only horse power through the public grounds. It was thought by the company, thought by us heretofore, and I think it will be thought by us now, that it is not necessary to carry out this restriction.

It will be seen by the map which I hold in my hand, that this road runs immediately along the banks of the river, the Jefferson barracks track, the magazine track, and the arsenal grounds all fronting upon the river. The line of the road is actually located, and by this bill it is to be constructed upon the track now located, which is at high water mark. It is objected—and it is the main objection—that the road will prove dangerous to the magazine. This magazine is situated—and I believe it was so stated by the gentleman from South Carolina—two hundred and twenty yards or six hundred and sixty feet from this road. Now, can it be possible that the Secretary of War—can it be possible that a single member of the House does not know that no danger can arise to the magazine by running the road with engines, at a distance of two hundred and twenty rods from it? Do we not all know that no sparks from a railroad locomotive can reach that building at that distance? Furthermore, this magazine is some fifty or sixty feet above the line of the road. Sparks fly up, but do not fly up sixty feet, and then fly off to a distance of two hundred and twenty yards, so as to place even powder in danger!

But beside that consideration, there is another fact which shows the worthlessness of that objection, and that is, that this magazine is required to be fire-proof; and if it is not so, the Government is vastly wanting in proper care and solicitude for the safety of the lives of those who are there employed. And if it is fire-proof, there can be no earthly danger from the sparks from cars running two hundred and twenty rods from it. The House is now called upon to sanction this bill; and the bill provides that when powder is being either shipped or received at the magazine landing, that the company shall only use horse power. But another fact which the Secretary ought to have known, is, that powder is seldom received at the magazine landing, and that it is only in cases of high water that you can land it in front of the magazine at all.

Now, sir, with regard to the other objection—and I believe it is the one which has the most weight in reference to this road—it is feared that it will interfere with the training ground there. Jefferson barracks have come to be an extensive training place. Horses are brought there from abroad, and trained preparatory to being sent into service; and it is feared that this road may destroy the training ground. Well, sir, mark you, this training ground lies two thousand five hundred feet distant from the line of the road. Now, it does occur to me, notwithstanding the opinion of the Secretary of War, that if this training of horses for actual service is to be carried on there, horses that may, in the chances of war, have to stand the fire of artillery, the rattle of musketry, and the booming of cannon, a railroad two thousand five hundred feet off, cannot do any serious injury. It occurs to me that if these soldiers cannot train their horses to stand the whistle of a locomotive two thousand five hundred feet off, the same soldiers, upon the same horses, will not be prepared to do very good service upon the field of battle. It is for this reason that the company are to be refused the right of way.

Now, one word as to the necessity of having this right of way through the public grounds. The Iron Mountain is some eighty miles distant, and this is the only practicable outlet. When, on a former occasion, these difficulties were raised, the company, rather than come to Congress, as they have done now, sent out their engineer, a very able and accomplished engineer, known by reputation to most of the members of this House, to ascertain if some other route could not be found by which they could reach the Iron Mountain without going through these grounds. After a careful reconnaissance, however, he ascertained that they would be compelled to go twenty miles further by any other route than by the one through these grounds.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman inform me what is the extent of these grounds?

Mr. CARUTHERS. The Jefferson barracks contain seventeen hundred acres.

Mr. SMITH. Do I understand the gentleman as saying that a route outside those grounds would be twenty miles further than through them?

Mr. CARUTHERS. I presume the gentleman from Virginia did not understand what I said in reference to the twenty miles. I said that when the engineer endeavored to find some other route by which he could avoid passing through these grounds, he could not find any other outlet without going twenty miles further than by taking this route. That I understand to be a fact, and that fact is shown by the official report which I produced when this matter was up before. Well, now, sir, these being the facts, this company only ask that they may be allowed the right of way to build their road, not through the center of these grounds, but along the banks of the river, at high water mark. If you grant them their request, the effect will be to open up one of the richest regions of country in the Union, and to bring in the products of that region. In order to save twenty miles travel through all time, and the expense of building twenty miles more road at a heavier grade, which may endanger its very construction, they only ask that the road may pass through these public grounds.

And what more? In the bill which this House is now called on to sanction, it is expressly provided that this company shall be liable for all damage done to the public property. The company is also required to build a strong and substantial fence between the railroad and the public grounds. It is only required to use horse-power when powder is being loaded or unloaded at the magazine landing. Now, I would appeal to gentlemen whether there can be any reasonable ground for objection to a bill so carefully guarded? The line of the road is along high water mark, and there is, therefore, but little of the public ground used. Horse-power is to be employed when there is danger, or the least necessity for so doing; and the company is liable for all damage done to the public property; and such being the case, why should not the bill be now put on its passage? Has the Secretary of War, in his communication read here this morning, or the honorable gentleman from South Carolina, in his remarks, stated any real grounds for a demand on the part of the government of the company to use horse-power alone going through the tract? The House will bear in mind that the honorable Secretary of War makes no objection to the ground being used under this right of way? His only objection is in reference to the requirement for the use of horse-power. We have shown the House, I trust, from the topography of the ground, and from many other considerations, that there is not the least necessity for the imposition of guards so scrupulous as those referred to. I hope the bill, as it now stands, may be allowed to pass. With these suggestions I resume my seat.

Mr. BENTON. This question comes up this morning inopportune. There is a movement now pending which may be decided in the Army bill. It comes up for the sale of one of these pieces of land—the arsenal piece—to the city of St. Louis for a public park. If that be done, one leg of this difficulty is knocked off. It is so much gained, and that question may be decided in an hour or two in the Army bill.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the gentleman will stand back a little, so we may hear his proposition.

Mr. BENTON. What I shall say at present will be brief, and introductory to a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. If we go into committee and dispose of the other movement on the Army bill to-morrow, or next day, when we go to the business on the Speaker's table this bill will come up first in order. When the arsenal grounds are sold to the city of St. Louis for a public park, we shall know better how to act on this matter. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to ask if this bill will be the first business in order to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be upon the Speaker's table, and will come up when the House shall again determine to go to business upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. MILLER. I would suggest to my colleague that unless there is a motion made to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, this bill will not come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The mode of reaching it is by going to the business upon the Speaker's table, and there is no other motion that will bring it up.

CLOSE OF DEBATE ON THE ARMY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON. Before the question is put on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, I offer the usual resolution to close the debate upon the Army bill in one hour after its consideration shall be resumed in the committee; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama whether, in the motion submitted by him, his object is to close debate upon the particular proposition now pending before the committee, or to close it upon the Army bill generally?

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot make the motion to close it upon any particular proposition; but I must make it upon the bill generally.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have some very important amendments to offer to the Army bill, which will require discussion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is not this whole debate out of order?

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I think that it would be better to extend the time for closing the debate to three hours, instead of one. I move that amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am willing to make the time for closing the debate two hours instead of one.

Mr. BAYLY. I am satisfied with two hours. The previous question was seconded.

On ordering the main question, tellers were demanded and ordered; and Messrs. VAIL and McMULLIN were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 30.

So the main question was ordered to be put.

The question then being upon the adoption of the resolution to close debate,

Mr. ROBBINS called for tellers.

Mr. FLORENCE asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CHURCHWELL and VAIL were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 88, noes 37.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desired the floor before the question was taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, for the purpose of addressing some remarks to the House.

The SPEAKER. There was no question pending upon which debate could arise.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wished to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama made the motion to reconsider, but that motion was also accompanied with a motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. FAULKNER. I wished to make a remark before the motion to lay the motion upon the table was made. I now desire the consent of the House to make a single explanatory remark.

There was no objection, and

Mr. F. proceeded: My object is simply this: The House yesterday refused to accede to my proposition to take up and consider the bills for increasing the efficiency of the Army. These Army bills are, in my judgment, of vital interest, even to the existence of the Army itself. My object, as I stated, was to have them considered as independent bills. But as I failed in my attempt, it is now my purpose to annex them to the Army general appropriation bill. I therefore hoped that the debate upon this bill might not be closed, and that members might have an opportunity, if they desired it, to discuss fully these propositions upon this bill. But, sir, the House having closed debate upon the Army bill, in two hours after its consideration is again resumed, I shall still, under a sense of public duty, be compelled to offer them as amendments to this bill; and if there be no discussion upon them, if the House is called to vote upon those important propositions without discussion, the responsibility and the fault will not be mine.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. GREEN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as correctly enrolled a bill and resolution of the following titles; which thereupon received the signature of the Speaker:

A joint resolution, fixing the compensation of the employees of the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the allowance of the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefit thereof; and

An act for the relief of Charles Staples.

[A message was here received from the President of the United States, by Sidney Webster, Esq., his Private Secretary, informing the House that the President had signed sundry bills of the House.]

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question then recurred upon the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of House bill (No. 95) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1855."

The pending question being on an amendment offered by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, to insert after the words "for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $250,000," the following:

Provided, That so much of all laws heretofore passed, which authorize the appointment of military officers to superintend operations at the national armories, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and from and after the passage of this act, it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent and well qualified civilian as superintendent at each of said armories."

Mr. BARRY, who was entitled to the floor, addressed the committee on the subject of the superintendence of armories, and in opposition to any change of the present system. His speech, withheld for revision, will be published in the Appendix.

Mr. FAULKNER argued in support of the amendment, remarking that the House would bear him witness that he was not actuated to this movement by any hostility to the officers of the Army. He trusted that his conduct here would show that no one was more ready than himself to sustain the Army in all that appertained to its true line of duty. He was disposed to give to the Army that which properly belonged to it, and would render to the civil pursuits of life that which appertained thereto.

These national workshops, he contended, were originally created by Washington for the purpose of stimulating mechanical skill. The idea that they were to be a part of the military establishment of the country, an appendage to the Army, to be governed by military men, he would undertake to say was one which never entered into the contemplation of Washington. The best fruits of the system had been produced under civil superintendence, and the inventive genius of the mechanic more largely developed.

In proof of this, he referred to the inventions which had been made by men employed at the armories, when under the supervision of civilians, and argued to show that the best arms had been produced when the armories were under civil superintendence.

[Mr. F.'s speech is withheld for revision, and will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. WALSH. Is there any time left?

The CHAIRMAN. About four minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Four minutes is quite as long as I desire at the present time. My friend from Mississippi, [Mr. HARRIS,] who has just spoken to me, says that the history of this Congress is the history of a few men who jump up and occupy all its time. No question can come up, no matter how trivial, no matter how important, but three or four gentlemen occupy the whole time, and consume a whole hour each, so that if they should drink upon the same principle upon which they talk, every time they took a glass of brandy they would drink it with a whole bucket of water, it is so diluted. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time fixed by the House for the closing of the general debate has now arrived. The chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. HOUSTON,] who reported the bill, is, under the rules, entitled to address the committee an hour on the subject.

Mr. HOUSTON. I had intended, Mr. Chairman to occupy my hour in closing the debate on this bill. There were some matters which I desired to say; but as so much time has been already consumed, and only a few days more are left of the session, I shall waive my right.

[Cries of "Good!"]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky the following words:

"And their management and control shall be, and hereby is, transferred from the Ordnance Department to the President of the United States."

Mr. Chairman, since 1815 the armories have been under the care and management of the Ordnance department. Persons selected from the Ordnance Board have been, by law, the superintendents of those institutions since 1841. The gentleman from Kentucky now proposes, in his amendment, to take from the President of the United States, who has exercised the power from the first, the power of appointment of superintendents of the national armories from the Ordnance department. My amendment is to add to that prohibition, directed against the Ordnance Board, a transferral of the whole management of the armories to the President of the United States.

My reason is simply this: the Ordnance Board are now responsible for the manner in which the armories are conducted. If they are to be responsible, they ought to have a voice in the matter, or superintendents be selected from their number to superintend them. If the superintendents are not to be taken from that board; if none are to be selected over whom they may have some control and influence, my doctrine—and I hope the committee will sustain it—is, that the President of the United States should have the authority to appoint from all classes of the people, and relieve the Ordnance department of all responsibility in the matter. The proposition is so plain that I think the committee will adopt it.

I should be glad, Mr. Chairman, if I could be allowed, under the rules, to reply to one or two suggestions which have fallen from gentlemen during the discussion on this matter. I desire to make some corrections. Gentlemen have stated what they believed to be facts, but which are not facts, and there is danger of the committee acting under misapprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the explanation of his amendment.

Mr. DICKINSON. The rules now established for the regulation of the armories were made by the Ordnance Board. There is no provision in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] unless the amendment I have offered to it be adopted, by which any regulations can be established or enforced. Making provision only for the appointment of the officers, the armories will be left without regulations to govern them.

When gentlemen stand up in their places, and assure us from their own knowledge that there are no regulations accessible to the men, or that there has been a change of regulations since the military superintendency was established, I desire to inform the House what the facts of the case really are. We have had the evidence before the committee, and it is undisputed, of Colonel Robb, who was superintendent of the armory at Springfield for eight or nine years previous to the military superintendency being established. He testifies that a written code of laws or rather regulations was prepared, that they were sent to the Ordnance Board and approved, and that he caused them to be written out and read to the men because they were new, and then gave a copy to each inspector and foreman, with instructions to show them to the men whenever they were called upon to do so.

Colonel Huger, superintendent at Harper's Ferry, testified that Major Symington, his predecessor, had the regulations written, and that he had them printed. Colonel Ripley says, in his communication to the commissioners, that when he came to Springfield, he found regulations there which he called good, and has kept and enforced them, without material change, to the present time. The charge is, that those rules are not accessible to the workmen—the answer is, it is contrary to the evidence in the case.

It is charged, also, that men who work by the piece, according to an established tariff of prices, have had the amount of their earnings at the end of a month reduced, when they called for their pay, on the ground that the tariff had been reduced, although no notice had been given of such reduction before the work was done. This is testified by Colonel B. Moore to have taken place while he was acting as master armorer at Harper's Ferry, under Major Symington's superintendency.

Major Symington states in an affidavit that no such case ever occurred within his knowledge; that no reduction was ever made, unless notice was given before the work was done, unless it occurred by the negligence of Colonel Moore himself to carry out the orders of the superintendent, to give such notice of any intended reduction.

It is stated, also—and much stress laid upon the fact—that all the inspectors and other officers who examined the armories, and the work manufactured there previous to 1841, when the civil government was changed to military, reported favorably as to the condition of the establishment, and the quality of work, and the character of the officers and workmen, and the constant improvements and advances made.

This is undoubtedly true, and it is also true that since the appointment of military superintendents, the same officers have from year to year spoken in the highest terms of commendation of the improvements in buildings, machinery, and the quality of the arms manufactured. The Ordnance Board, the Inspector General Churchill, the Secretary of War, the leading mechanics in the armories, and the two military members of the commission which met at Springfield, all concur in the opinion that the arms now made are of a better quality than before 1841, and that there had been a constant improvement up to the present time.

Some of the leading owners and agents of private armories in the vicinity of Springfield also testify that, in their opinion, it is better for the Government and the men employed at the armory there, that the present superintendent should remain, than to have any change. It is due to the House that these facts should be stated and reported.

It is said, too, that the military system discourages enterprise, paralyzes inventive genius, is an insult to the mechanics of the country, and weakens their attachment to our republican institutions. Sir, the mechanics of this country are above the need of any eulogium from me—their reputation for skill is world-wide; and if I believed the charge to be true, I should be found among the foremost in my efforts to put an end to a system which produces such results. Not believing the charge to be true, the obvious answer to it is, that while our mechanics, as a body, are superior to those of any other country in intelligence, skill, and mental power, and while the instances are numerous of those who have made the most brilliant discoveries, and signalized themselves by the highest scientific and literary attainments, and been conscious that no circumstances could control or diminish the power of the "Divinity that stirs within them"—while we are proud, as American citizens, of the honor they have earned for us as a nation, and while they are acquiring wealth and power by the force of their own talents, they need not the feeble aid which we can render them in placing them in responsible positions—they need not our praise to make them conscious of their own deserts. They are entitled to receive, and will ever receive from every intelligent man, the respect due to them for their mental and moral qualities, and for their manly virtues; and will ever look above all distinctions of class or caste, and render to every man according to his desert, and cordially adopt the noble sentiment of the poet:

"Honor and shame from no condition rise;
Act well your part, there all the honor lies."

Mr. PECKHAM. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Dickinson,] also to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton.] The President already has authority over this whole subject. I do not know that I should feel called upon to defend the Administration under ordinary circumstances, but here are attacks by some of its assumed friends, and I do not see how I can avoid coming in to its defense. [Laughter.] My honorable friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. Banks,] and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Faulkner,] indirectly assail the President by assailing his policy. They charge that men are removed from these armories, while under military superintendence, without any reasons being assigned for the removal.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call the gentleman to order, because I cannot reply to the remarks he makes.

Mr. PECKHAM. The gentleman has had his hour, and he can have the opportunity of replying in a five-minute speech; and that is all the time I have, interruptions included.

Mr. FAULKNER. Very well; I will withdraw my question of order.

Mr. PECKHAM. Gentlemen complain, I observed, that men are dismissed from these armories, and no reason assigned. This is an insidious attack on the Administration—covert, but still unmistakable—an attack upon its private cherished policy.

Ever since the Bronson and Guthrie correspondence, the policy of the Administration has totally changed. [Laughter.] I believe no reasons have ever been offered to the public for any removal of any civil officer in this civil Government since that correspondence; and I submit to the gentleman whether it is becoming to make this assault upon the Administration by condemning its policy of making removals, not only without, but against reasons, under a seeming opposition to such removals by military superintendents? [Laughter.]

Mr. McMULLIN. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is in order.

Mr. PECKHAM. I must further defend the Administration. I do not like to be interrupted, because I lose too much of the little time I have left. I will be as delicate in my defense of the Administration as possible, and I shall not touch Virginia.

But, sir, when this Administration has been diligently engaged since the Bronson and Guthrie correspondence in making removals of officers without giving any reason; when it removed from the custom-house in New York a clerk who had been to the late "Hard" State convention from Rockland county, within two days after his return from that convention, where he had been engaged, as is said, in indorsing the Nebraska bill—but gave no reasons for the removal—was it mainly in these gentlemen thus adroitly to attack this Administration, its declared and habitual policy, by assailing what they alleged was the same policy in these military superintendents? I am sorry to see it.

I shall pursue the subject no further, because I see it excites some sensitive feelings among those who occupy a doubtful position as to the Administration. [Laughter.] Sir, the amendment proposed here by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Dickinson] is unnecessary—entirely unnecessary—because, by the act of 1853, authority is vested in the President of the United States, "if, in his opinion, the public interests demand it, to place over any of the armories a superintendent, who does not belong to the Army;" and he is authorized to have evidence taken on that subject, to appoint a commission, and to have them report to him "which of the two systems is the most economical, efficient, and safe for the management of the public armories."

Now I put it to these gentlemen here claiming to be friends of the Administration, whether the President of the United States, having this full power vested in him to change the system if this public interests require it, and having this opportunity of getting all the facts in the matter, whether he ought, by an amendment attached to the foot of this bill, thus summarily to be deprived of a power which a prior Congress deemed him competent to exercise? The last Congress had faith in him to this extent. Have these gentlemen lost all confidence in our President? Sir, is it proper for us here, without an opportunity of examination, without an opportunity of going over this evidence, without an opportunity of knowing the facts, which he may know well and fully consider, to assume to say that he is not competent, not able, or not honest enough, to decide this question entrusted to his decision by the last Congress? I submit in good faith to those gentlemen who are here sitting around me, to the gentlemen from Maryland, Massachusetts, and Virginia, is it becoming in us, who are the supporters of the amendment; [laughter,] is it becoming in us thus indirectly to attack it, and attack it, too, in perhaps its most assailable point? I put it to my friend from Virginia, [Mr. Faulkner,] the gentleman occupying, I believe, the position of chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs; but if not chairman, I am sure he would adorn the place. I put it to him, knowing, as he does, that this authority is vested in the hands of the President of the United States, and properly vested there by law, whether it is proper for us, under these circumstances, to express our direct want of confidence in him, by taking this power from his hands? whether it is right for us to assume to act on a subject which by law belongs properly and exclusively to him? Is it respectful? The President is a man of "good intentions," it has been said, and I cannot find it in my heart to rebuke him by taking from him an authority which the last Congress believed him competent to exercise. And now I give these gentlemen notice distinctly, that if, in this effort to defend the Administration, I should fail, I shall deem it but poor encouragement hereafter to make any like attempt. [Laughter.]

There are many things on this subject which I strongly desire to say, but I am so fearful of getting out of order—the traces of order are so gallingly close upon me—that I am extremely trammelled in my efforts to repel these most unkind assaults upon the President.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken on Mr. Dickinson's amendment to the amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "a" before the words "competent and well qualified," and to add the letter "s" to the word "civilian" and the word "superintendent," so that the amendment will read, "competent and well qualified civilians as superintendents at each of said armories."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment to the amendment, and the purport and object of it will be evident at a glance to the committee. I am desirous of proceeding in order, so as to have, without interruption, the full advantage of the limited time left for this debate. And I declare here, that I am in favor of the amendment, either as I have offered to amend it, or as it has been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Stanton.] So I care very little whether my amendment prevail, or whether that of the gentleman from Kentucky be adopted as it stands. And I suppose I am not out of order by referring to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky. I repeat, I desire to proceed in order as I feel a deep interest in the subject under consideration, and ardently desire the amendment abolishing military superintendence of the national armories may prevail.

I am exceedingly sorry to see so much sensitiveness in this committee upon points of order. I have struggled hard to obtain the floor to say a word or two, because I conceived it to be my duty to do so, in defense of the skill and genius of American mechanics. It is a glorious theme. Personally, I care little whether mere military men are selected to superintend the national armories, or any other public work; but in the performance of a public duty, I prefer that, so far as I can influence it by my vote, that those who are infinitely better capacitated by habit and association for such positions, should be selected. I am in favor of civil superintendence, and the employment of mechanics in the supervision of the national armories, and all other public works; therefore I am opposed to a military superintendence. I am especially opposed to a military superintendence over the national armories, because evidence has been adduced, satisfactory to my mind, that they ought not to be under such control; and I tell this committee and the country, that, whatever the decision of this House may be at this time, if it does not change this system now, that decision will be reversed at some future time. The spirit of the American masses once aroused upon this subject, all opposition to it will be speedily overwhelmed. I know intimately the spirit of independence which animates the heart of the working men, the real wealth of our country, and the true sovereigns of our Confederacy.

Mr. WALSH. Fourth of July!

Mr. FLORENCE. I hope the gentleman will permit me to go on in my own natural way, without interruption, whether it is "Fourth of July" or not. [A laugh.] One thing is certain, I think. It is, that this committee is quite prepared to declare its independence, and abolish military supervision of the national armories, and, indeed, over all other public works, I trust, ere long. It will, let me say in all candor, be an act worthy of this Congress, and of the day and age in which we live. It is a libel upon the world-wide character for skill, genius, and perfection in the mechanic arts of American mechanics throughout our wide national domain, to say, that, after having attained honor and distinction in the race with other nations of the world, that we have not confidence enough in our own artisans to entrust them with positions of responsibility and public trust. For one, I disclaim any such unjust conclusion, and I believe this committee agree with me.

I trust I am right in this opinion, and I earnestly solicit the attention of every gentleman here while I occupy the floor. I feel what I speak. The Bible says, "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh;" and I intend to occupy just as many five minutes as I can get, in order to express my sentiments fully and freely upon this question. I say, then, that the existence of military superintendence in these armories has produced oppression and outrage. ["Hear!" "Hear!"] It has reduced the wages of men after they have earned them, and justly earned them, too. It has caused the dismissal of mechanics and workmen because they dared to exercise the rights and the independence of freemen. These things I can prove, from the evidence which was taken before the committee of investigation; and I say, sir, I would be false to my duty, false to my mission here, and false to myself, if I did not rise upon this floor and declaim as loudly and strongly as I can against this system.

Before elaborating the points I have indicated, as susceptible of proof, I desire the committee to listen to the testimony of Colonel Benjamin Moore. I understand that he is a very reputable citizen of unimpeachable veracity; and his testimony, which is uncontradicted, reveals the whole matter of the inconsistency, the impropriety of, and the gross wrong and outrage committed under military superintendence of the national armories. Colonel Benjamin Moore says:

"Colonel Benjamin Moore, being duly sworn, testified as follows:

"Question. How long have you been engaged in the Government service in connection with the national armories, and in what capacity?

"Answer. I was master armorer at Harper's Ferry for about nineteen years.

"Question. During that time, how long were the armories under civil, and how long under military superintendence, and who were the officers in charge?

"Answer. For ten years and nine months I was under civil superintendence; for the balance of the time under military. The civil superintendents were General George Rust and Colonel Edward Lucas. The military superintendents were Major H. K. Craig and Major John Symington.

"Question. During the civil superintendency, was there as much order and regularity in the armory, and as much work executed, and executed as well, as under the military system?

"Answer. There was very little difference, so far as the day-workmen were concerned, between the two systems, but there was a great difference in the piece-workers. Under the civil, when a piece workman finished his day's work, which he would commence, sometimes, at four o'clock in the morning, he was allowed to go. Under the military system, if a piece-worker gets through with particular pieces of work until after the expiration of the regular fraction of the day, he is only allowed up to the expiration of the next fraction of the day. For instance, if he would finish his day's work five minutes after the half of a day expired, he would have to wait until the end of the next quarter before he could leave the shop.

"The civil had not the same facilities in point of machinery as the military.

"The preparations for beginning a new model began under the civil, but the manufacture did not commence until the beginning of the military system.

"I consider that the piece-work, as carried out under the civil, operated greatly to the advantage of the Government, whilst under the military superintendency it did not, because men had not the same inducement to work when they knew they would be kept in the shop after they got through, and were fatigued with their day's labor.

"Question. Were the workmen as cheerful and contented under one system as under the other? and state the effect of the two systems upon the workmen as citizens.

"Answer. Under the civil system they were cheerful and contented, because they were permitted to exercise all their rights as citizens. Under the military they are not, because they dare not exercise all those rights, for fear of dismissal. As an evidence of this, Colonel Craig dismissed men because they went to Washington to complain of the piece-workmen being placed upon the same level as day-workers, relative to time. He took some back, but not until they signed a solemn obligation not to hold any consultations or meetings relative to anything that might occur in the armory, or to sign any petitions to Congress relative thereto. This rule, I presume, can still be found at Harper's Ferry, though the enforcement of it gradually stopped. I saw men sign it myself.

"Men's heads were cut off so suddenly, without any reason being given, that they became suspicious of each other, and were actually afraid to talk to men who had been discharged from the shop. Some of them were afraid to talk to me. Men were watched closely.

"The military system decreased the value of real estate in Harper's Ferry. The tenure of employment was so uncertain in the armories, that men were afraid to invest. One woman has two stores: she used to get $300 each for them. Now she rents one for $200, and can't rent the other.

"(The Government gave the privilege of purchasing their lots to the workmen, so much payable out of each month's wages. Some men who purchased these lots were dismissed by Colonel Huger.) Major S. dismissed one man, a crippled soldier of the war of 1812, who was a good filer on springs. Many men were dropped, and promised that they would be taken back, but were never taken back.

"Question. By whom were you removed, and was any cause assigned for your removal?

"Answer. I was removed by General Taylor; but as I had, on several occasions previous, expressed a desire to the Ordnance Department to resign my position, and was urged by General Cass, Colonel Craig, and Colonel Bonford not to resign. I became indignant at my removal, and would not ask for the cause of it.

"Question. In the construction of houses and shops, and other structures for the use of the establishment, is there under the military system as much regard paid to economy as under the civil system?

"Answer. No, there is not. The military superintendents spent money lavishly on their quarters. The comparison between their quarters and those occupied by the civil superintendents, is like the comparison between a palace and a cottage. Workshops were built, under the military system, beautiful in external appearance, but uncomfortable inside. They were constructed with too many windows, which made it uncomfortable to be working in them in summer time. They were more like green houses than workshops. One shop was built, and after it was done it was discovered to be too small for the machinery that was to go in it. I informed Major Symington that it would be too small, but he disregarded my suggestion.

MONDAY, March 26, 1854.

Colonel Benjamin Moore's examination resumed.

"Question. If the superintendent were a practical mechanic, with good executive qualities, would he have any advantage over a military officer of scientific requirements and experience in his profession, with like executive abilities in the management of labor, and the proper execution of the work?

"Question objected to by Mr. Dickinson.

"Mr. Faulkner asked for the yeas and nays on the motion, 'Shall the question be put?' and resulted as follows:

"Yeas—Messrs. R. H. Stanton, C. J. Faulkner, W. R. Sapp—3.

"Nays—Messrs. E. Dickinson, L. M. Keitt, J. L. Dawson—3.

"So it was decided not to put the question.

"Colonel Moore here begged leave to make an explanation in connection with his testimony given on Monday, the 20th instant, heretofore not placed upon the record, but today ordered to be recorded. Leave being granted, he said:

"I have worked under practical mechanics since 1816, at divers places, and under all circumstances; I have inspected arms made by private contractors, (practical mechanics,) and I can testify of the advantage they possess over men who are not mechanics, in the superintendency of armories. They are acquainted with matters in the preliminary manufacture of a musket, of which a man not a mechanic would know nothing: for instance, when a barrel was forged properly, when springs were bent correctly, when a ramrod was tempered sufficiently to straighten it. He would also know the value of things. For instance, he would not have sold a hundred dozen of files, which cost $4.50 per dozen, at $1.25 per dozen, as was done at Harper's Ferry.

Examination resumed.

"Question. Have any improvements been made in the machinery under military, and any under civil superintendency? if so, state them.

"Answer. There have been a great many improvements made under civil superintendency, most of which were, in anticipation of their usefulness, carried out after the military system obtained.

"The inventive genius was more displayed under the civil than under the military superintendency, because there was more certainty in the tenure of their employment, and of their being benefited by the exercise of their genius under the civil than under the military superintendency. Men, in some instances, were compensated for their inventions under the civil; under the military superintendency they were not. The inventor of a patent bit, a workman at the Springfield armory, under the military system, never got paid for the use of his invention, which was of the greatest benefit to the armory.

"Hall, the inventor of the rifle to be loaded at the breech, and Green, made their inventions whilst they were workmen under the civil system. I am not certain as to King, the inventor. Hall died whilst he was on a furlough. He was a sub-superintendent.

"Question. Have the improvements in the manufacture of arms at the armories kept pace with the improvements in private factories?

"Answer. I can't answer as to private factories.

"Question. Is the bearing of a military officer towards the workmen under his control such as, according to your experience and knowledge, the mechanics and workmen of the country are accustomed to in other employments?

"Answer. It is not. It is quite different from the manner I have seen them treated at various places in private establishments. There they are recognized respectfully. The military treat them impolitely and unkind. They are disrespectful, and sometimes repulse the men, especially when they state grievances. I have been repulsed by one military man more than I have ever been by all the civilians I ever worked under in my life put together. Major Symington has repulsed me in the most uncivil manner. He was in the habit of making a big fuss about things being done wrong, before he knew whether they were wrong or not. Sometimes there would be a necessity for a good blacksmith, but Major Symington would not employ one. He would declare that he could get good workmen at $1.50, who were then getting $1.80 per day. I was dismissed by General Taylor. The repulsion of myself by Major Symington occurred in 1847 or 1848.

"The examination of Colonel Moore was here concluded, and he was discharged.

"It was ordered by the committee that the evidence of Colonel Moore, adduced on last Monday, be placed on record.

"This is to certify that I have examined the evidence heretofore contained, and I find it to be the same testimony of which it purports to be a true record, said testimony having been given by me.

"BENJAMIN MOORE."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and I hope we shall take a vote upon it immediately, and I trust we shall proceed and finish this bill at once.

The question was then taken on Mr. FLORENCE's amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. STANTON's amendment.

Mr. STRATTON. I demand tellers upon that amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FAULKNER and PARKER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BALL. I move that the committee do now rise. The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the Army appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by the hands of Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a joint resolution of the House, and acts of the following titles:

H. R. No. 30. Joint resolution to fix the compensation of the employees of the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the allowance of the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits hereof.

S. No. 60. An act authorizing the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or Missouri rivers to the Pacific ocean.

S. No. 393. An act for the better preservation of life and property from vessels shipwrecked on the coasts of the United States.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon the House (at twenty minutes to four o'clock, p. m.) adjourned till to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

When the river and harbor bill was under consideration in the House of Representatives, on the 11th of July, the following letter from the Attorney General was read. We could not procure a copy at that time:

ATTORNEY GENERAL'S OFFICE, June 12, 1854.

SIR: I have your letter of this morning on the subject of the Louisville and Portland canal.

I concur entirely with the Secretary of the Treasury in opinion of the desirableness of some legislation at the present session of Congress in relation to the canal. It would undoubtedly be the duty of the President, in the absence of any such legislation, to endeavor to take measures to preclude a forfeiture of such rights as the United States may have in the canal. At the same time, it seems to me very undesirable and inconvenient to have the matter so left by Congress, as to give rise to the allegation of abandonment, on the part of the United States, so as to embarrass the Executive by the occurrence, perhaps, of a controversy with the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

I think, therefore, if nothing else be practicable at present, that it might be well to make provisional arrangement for the superintendence of the canal, in anticipation of more complete provisions at the next session of Congress.

I am, very respectfully, CALEB CUSHING.
Hon. WILLIAM PRESTON, House of Representatives

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 18, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed, without amendment, the bill from the Senate regulating the time of holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States, in the eastern district of Louisiana; and also Senate bill for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn.

FUGITIVE SLAVE LAW.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a memorial from the Pennsylvania Society for Promoting the Abolition of Slavery, the same society which enjoyed the friendship of Washington, and of which Benjamin Franklin, Benjamin Rusk, and Dr. Wistar, were early presidents. This memorial is an elaborate document, engrossed on parchment, and signed by the distinguished president of this day, Dr. Parrish, of Philadelphia, with the other officers, and authenticated by the broad seal of the society. It protests at length against the fugitive slave bill, and "earnestly but respectfully solicits the Federal Legislature to adopt, with the least practicable delay, the proper measures for expunging from our statute-book an enactment which as long as it remains there must contribute a dark blot upon our national character in the view of the civilized world."

Among the reasons assigned by the memorialists, is one to which I feel it my duty to call particular attention, and to crave the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, [Mr. BUTLER.] They show that, by the operation of the tenth section of the fugitive bill—which gives conclusive force to a record made behind the back of the alleged fugitive—a free colored person, with evidence of his freedom, may be surrendered to slavery. And they add:

"This is not an imaginary case, but is substantially descriptive of one which has recently occurred. A colored man, who had resided in Philadelphia from childhood, and proved by competent witnesses to be a free man, has been reluctantly consigned to a claimant in Georgia by a United States commissioner in Delaware, under the authority of the section alluded to."

Reference is here made to the interesting case of Edward Davis, who escaped from Georgia by concealing himself under the wheel-house of a steamer in a most exposed situation; and who was afterwards surrendered to slavery in opposition to positive testimony to his freedom. Among the papers accompanying the memorial, is one which states that the commissioner declared that "he would give fifty dollars, cheerfully, to be released from making the decision;" and that on account of it "he lost two nights sleep, and had no comfort while in church on Sunday." No wonder at this.

Mr. President, it was an early maxim of the common law, that it were better that one hundred guilty persons should escape than one innocent person suffer.

Mr. ADAMS. I rise to a point of order. Is it in order to discuss this question at length on the presentation of a petition?

Mr. SUMNER. I have no such purpose. I am merely explaining the memorial, and pressing it upon the attention of the Senate. I proceed: A wise man of antiquity remarked, in words often admired, that, in his opinion, the best Government was that under which a wrong to a single citizen was resented as an injury to the whole Commonwealth. And, sir, only at this session, Congress has offered its homage to an American officer, who, in a distant sea, interposed the power of the Government to shield the liberty of an obscure person who claimed his protection. If the spirit of this act, and of these sentiments, prevailed here, an outrage like that described by the memorialists could not occur, without arousing at once the indignant judgment of Congress.

I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator quotes one old saying from the common law. There is another, sir, to be derived from higher authority, from the sayings of the wise man of Israel, "the dog will return to his vomit." I do not expect, sir, that we shall be able to correct vicious and depraved instincts or corrupt taste; but I do protest against tolerating an abuse of the rules of the Senate, in order to reiterate these hackneyed set phrases which we have heard repeated so often.

Mr. SUMNER. I am accustomed to answer, on this floor, anything in the shape of argument, and I hold myself ready at all times to meet it. I hold myself, also, at all times ready to meet any Senator here who keeps within the rules and orders of debate, for that man is my peer; but a Senator who does not keep within the rules and the orders of debate is not my peer.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. President, of course I should say nothing on this subject if the State which I have the honor in part to represent had not been alluded to, and alluded to in a manner in which it would not have been, I think, if the Senator from Massachusetts had considered well what he was saying. I suppose he justifies himself upon the representation of facts made in that petition. I only beg to say to the Senate, and through them to the country, that the allegations contained in the petition are not correct, and I feel that this is not the proper place to set afloat as facts statements which have no actual foundation.

Now, sir, it so happens that I am acquainted with Colonel Dean, the Senator from the city of Macon, and county of Bibb, in the Legislature of the State of Georgia, and I know the case to which the Senator referred. I received a communication from a personal friend, Mr. Wales, of Wilmington, Delaware, who was one of the attorneys, and I think the leading attorney engaged in the trial. I recommended to him that if there was the least belief whatever that the boy Davis was a free person of color, Judge Nesbitt late of the supreme court of Georgia, should be employed to investigate the case. Colonel Dean knowing the facts asked that the laws of the country should be invoked to try whether he was a free person of color or not. He is now in Georgia, and the question can be tried there. A correspondence has taken place on the subject between Mr. Dean and some individuals at Wilmington.

Mr. Dean stated to them that the boy was there, and that, if any of them believed he was a free person, and could convince him such was the fact, he would be the last man in the world to retain in slavery any one who was not a slave. The matter passed off in that way; but the honorable Senator from Massachusetts to-day has set it afloat throughout the whole country that, by the laws of the United States, and by the decision of a commissioner in the State of Delaware, a free man has been sent into slavery. If I were to ask the Senator if he made this statement from any knowledge of his own, he would say he did not, but that he spoke from the representations contained in this petition.

Now, sir, I submit to him and to the country whether it is proper thus to attempt to excite sectional jealousies upon a presumed state of facts; and whether it is justifiable to allow those persons who are governed by prejudice or fanaticism, or any other feeling whatever, to make this body an instrument by which they may circulate their statements, when it is known, or ought to be known, that they are not true?

Mr. President, if we go on in this course, and gentlemen who take pleasure and feel a gratification in exciting one section of this country against the other, continue in this way, conservative men will ask why is it done; for what purpose can it be? Can it be the result of a patriotic feeling, or is it the result of a determination so to excite one section against the other so as to lead to disunion?

Why, sir, no longer ago than two days since, I happened to come across an Abolition paper called the Emancipator, and there I read a speech of Wendell Phillips, who is himself the great leader of the party or faction to which the Senator belongs, in which he said the Constitution of the country established slavery; that by it the South was justified; that the Constitution required the rendition of persons escaping from service, and the principle to which he appealed was the destruction of the Constitution. As an evidence of what he and his followers intend, they burnt up that sacred instrument and also this law, and proclaimed that the disunion of these States was the only course that could rescue them from the oppression, as they call it, of slavery.

Now, am I to believe that the Senator from Massachusetts, under the influence of this feeling, is making an effort to bring about that state of affairs, which is so much desired by the leaders of the party? Does he desire to see accomplished the results contemplated by the individual to whom I have reference, and others connected with him? I surely think not.

Then, after the Congress of the United States have passed a law which has been approved by the President, and acknowledged to be constitutional, why does he not, like a law-abiding man and a patriot, submit to the Government of his country, and not attempt to excite prejudices and jealousies? He does not desire to see the Union dissolved. It can only be then for some personal consideration. What can that personal consideration be, but to throw around him a party—a party which he knows is forming against the Constitution of his country and the Union of these States. That can be the only feeling. It is not for the purpose of advancing the prosperity or the happiness of the Union, but it is for the purpose of advancing the prospects of the individual.

Now, sir, I submit to the country and to the members of this body, whether we should make ourselves a mere instrument in the hands of these fanatics? I will be pardoned for calling them so. For those who are sincere, and honest, and governed by feelings of the heart, and have no hypocrisy, I have a respect, but in regard to those who are governed by personal feelings and considerations, and who desire to make themselves the leaders of this party, or to acquire notoriety at the expense of the country, I cannot call them patriotic.

Here, sir, I am the representative of a State having as much prosperity, and, I trust, as much patriotism as any State in this Union. That State tolerates slavery—a slavery that has descended to us from our ancestors—a slavery that came from the ancestors of the Senator from Massachusetts himself, and from the State of Massachusetts. With this destiny implanted upon us, and with all the efforts of benevolence and philanthropy to render the condition of all mankind, black or white, in that section of the world happy and prosperous, are we to be daily irritated and perplexed by the solemn declarations we have all heard uttered by the Senator from Massachusetts—calculated to do what? Calculated to make the impression abroad that cruelty is existing in the South; that we of the South would take a free-man and convert him into a slave.

These are the allegations which have been made. Surely they are such as the feelings of no section of the country ought to approve. They ought to recollect well, and I say to the Senator to-day, he ought to know, and he ought to feel, and he does know, and he does feel, that he is making an instrument of himself here, merely to irritate the judgment and the feeling of gentlemen who represent the southern country, and whose destiny has been planted there. Though he may consider it a duty incumbent on him to present these petitions, he ought to avoid presenting them in an offensive manner; he ought to avoid the use of language calculated to irritate gentlemen. But the Senator, I regret to say, repeats those things as if the section of country to which I belong, was a section which was dishonoring the Union of these States, and dishonoring the character of human nature. Then, not he, but the leaders of his party, go further and say that we are governed by a Constitution which is a degradation to our nation, and that we are preserving a union which is calculated to damn us in futurity. Why do this? Ought not the country, and ought not the Senator, to know that these things are not calculated to harmonize, that they are not calculated to arrest what he considers to be an evil, and never can have such an effect? If the enlightenment of the age, if the improved state of the nation, if the character of the South cannot manage this institution, which he calls an evil, I ask him if he has any instrumentality, or any capacity by which he can eradicate it or ameliorate it? I take this occasion to say to him, and to his friends, that instead of benefiting the condition of the people whom they desire so much to alleviate, they are planting more firmly the roots of that which they wish to destroy. They are attempting to make that section of the country rebellious; they are, by the acts which are being perpetrated—I do not say by him, but by the persons whom he represents, and whose medium he is—endeavoring to induce a certain class of population in our country to escape to the northern States, and then to raise all these exciting questions. What reason is there for it, except a mere desire to excite the public mind by creating a great uproar in relation to these questions?

But, sir, I did not intend to say much. I rose merely to speak of the facts, because I am one of those who consider this question as having passed by, and who had hoped it would not be agitated here again. My object in rising was merely to correct the Senator's statement as to Colonel Dean, the owner of the boy Davis, to whom he has referred. The boy, as I understand the facts, as they have been already proved in the trial in Delaware, and as they will be proved again, is a perfect slave. I now assure the Senator, if he wishes to look into the matter, he can go to the town of Macon, in the State of Georgia. I will accompany him there. He will receive no affront. He shall be protected in every form and shape. He shall be protected like any other gentleman who passes through our country. The boy shall be there. The Senator may institute a habeas corpus. He may select a jury in the State of Georgia to try the case, and if he, as well as the jury, be not satisfied that the boy is a slave, I pledge myself that he shall be given up.

Upon this statement and these facts, which can be substantiated, is it not unjust to misinform the country, and to attempt to excite the feelings of that portion of the North who are excited about this matter, to attempt to inflame them, and to talk about these men who are petitioning Congress being the friends of Washington and of Franklin? Why is this? It is done for the purpose of proclaiming to the country that the friends of those glorious men who gave us the Constitution which we now enjoy, entertain particular opinions, and that the present Congress is doing something extraordinary, and that the South are cruel oppressors! Those great men sustained no such opinions as those set forth in the petition presented by that Senator this morning.

This is all wrong. I have no excitement about it. But as a citizen of this Union, as a Union man, desiring the preservation of the Constitution, it does disturb me. I should feel more satisfied, as a member of this body, if the Senator himself would use that propriety which he recommended to another, whose decorum is known to us all. If he, as a patriot should do, would rely upon principle, and not upon prejudice; if he would recognize the Constitution of his country and abide by it, and not be the instrumentality of disturbing it, I should be glad. If it were not that it would be getting into a debate on this question, I should propound several questions to the Senator in relation to his constitutional views; but I will not do it, because it might lead to a prolonged discussion.

Mr. GWIN. I move to lay this paper upon the table, as it is leading to debate.

Mr. RUSK. There is a paper connected with that petition, to the reception of which I object. It is a letter, a very prejudiced one, which seems to have been drawn from a Quaker of Delaware by a letter addressed to him by a Senator in this body, the Senator from Massachusetts. That letter reflects grossly and falsely upon the South, and it reflects upon the officer—

Mr. MASON. The Senator from Massachusetts has brought the paper before us. He is responsible to the Senate for it, and I ask that it may be read.

Mr. SUMNER. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

WILMINGTON, 6th month 17, 1854.

TO ALL WHOM IT MAY CONCERN: I called on Samuel Guthrie, commissioner, residing at New Castle, this day, to request of him a copy of his decision in the case of Ned Davis, the salt water fugitive, which he declined to furnish; first, because it would take some two or three hours to write out his decision; and second, he did not wish to write out an opinion just to satisfy the public, that would be published in the papers, and then torn to pieces by those who might see fit to comment upon it; he had given his decision for the delivery of Davis, and did not feel bound to furnish the public with his reasons for so doing. He further stated that John Wales, esq., was present, and had taken down the heads of his reasons for deciding as he did, or he should have furnished them. He seems to have forgotten that, at the time, he promised to write it out at his leisure, and give it to us. He also told me the day of the decision, before he gave it publicly, that he had commenced to write it out, but, not being well, had not completed it. At the time alluded to, the morning before he gave up Davis, he stated to me that he was not prepared to say but what Ned Davis was entitled to his freedom, by the laws of Maryland; but that must be proved in Georgia, from whence he escaped, if anywhere. He had positive proof that he was held as a slave by Dean, of Georgia, and he could not not go into the case to determine whether or no he was held there according to law. The proof of his being held there as a slave was the ground of his decision. If he had been so kind as to have furnished the friends of Ned Davis with those facts—that he could not go into the justice of Dean's claim to Davis, but must return him at all hazards—it would have been worse than folly to employ counsel to attend to his case at all.

Very respectfully,

THOS. GARRETT.

WILMINGTON, DELAWARE, 6th month 17, 1854.

ESTEEMED FRIEND, CHARLES SUMNER: Two or three days since Dylwin Parrish, of Philadelphia, sent me a letter he had received from thee, requesting all the important facts relative to the trial and return of Ned Davis, claimed by Dean, of Georgia, as a slave. I at once put thy letter and his into the hands of ex Senator Wales, who was employed to defend Davis, and requested him to write out all the facts, and forward to thee. At the same time I gave him a copy of a letter from E. A. Nesbit, an attorney of Macon, Georgia, who had been written to to test the validity of Dean's claim to Davis, in answer to which he wrote us he was dead, but were he in life, he would not hesitate to undertake his case. Wales will forward the copy of that letter, also one from his brother, cut from the Pennsylvania, published in Philadelphia, by which it will be found his professions were all gammon. Yesterday, at Wales's suggestion, I went to see Guthrie, at New Castle, to get his own statement, which thee will see he declines to give, for reasons set forth, and afterwards contradicts himself by saying he would have furnished the heads of it, if Wales had not been present, and taken it down. I showed the within statement to Wales, and he directed me to say he would send thee all the documents he can furnish in the case in a day or two. We are boasting to thee that the South is not only just, but honorable, and that a colored person can always have a fair trial for his freedom there; nay, more, I have frequently been boasting to thee they are so tenacious of the rights there, that there are always attorneys of good standing enough to be found there to volunteer to see that they have a fair trial. What has wrought such a sudden change there? The Nebraska-Kansas bill, or the Burns tragedy at Boston? I was in Boston at the time Burns was taken, and I agree with the Richmond Enquirer—a few more such victories, and the return of slaves from the North will be of the past, not the present. I rejoice that our Pennsylvania friends have petitioned for the repeal of the fugitive slave law. It is odious to all decent men of feeling. Guthrie, who got ten dollars for returning poor Davis, declared to me he would have given fifty dollars cheerfully to be released from making the decision. It showed one of two things: it was repugnant to his feelings to do it, or ashamed to own he done it willingly. He declared to me he lost two night's sleep, and had no comfort while in church on Sunday, reflecting on it. Well, he swallowed the pill, and I presume he will soon be able to conquer his prejudice.

Thine truly,

THOS. GARRETT.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President—

Mr. BAYARD. Will the Senator allow me to make a few remarks?

Mr. RUSK. I was not through with what I intended to say. I shall be in a minute. With regard to the billingsgate and falsehoods towards the South in that letter I have nothing to say. I care nothing about them. They are the capital of certain parties. It is what they have to say in reply to all arguments. Destitute of principle, they must, as a matter of course, have resort to the calling of names and to the utterance of falsehoods to sustain them in the seeming plausibility of what they say; but here is the principle to which I object.

A member of this body writes a letter to an individual about a transaction, evoking from that individual an answer which is slanderous towards the officer who executed the law, and then presents it to this body. It is a paper slanderous to that officer, and a libel upon him. It talks about the power of his conscience; that he could not have comfort in church; that he got ten dollars for sending this man back. Such poor, pitiful, trifling expressions as these, which form the capital of certain persons are indulged in. This is the principle which I object to. No Senator here has a right to draw from anybody an ex parte slanderous statement towards a private individual, much less towards an officer of the Government, and then spread it on the records of the Senate. I object to the reception of the paper.

Mr. GWIN. I want to ask a question of the Chair. Does a motion that the subject lie on the table stop debate?

The PRESIDENT. Certainly it does.

Mr. GWIN. Then I move that it lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order on this motion.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the honorable Senator will withdraw it for a few minutes.

Mr. GWIN. I will give way to the honorable Senator from Delaware for a minute, if he will renew the motion.

Mr. BAYARD. I should not take part in this discussion, or any notice of the communication which is now before the Senate, though not addressed to the body, were it not that I am personally acquainted with the character of the individual who wrote that letter. I may say of him that, upon the subject of slavery—the abolition of slavery—he is a maniac. Sir, it has been my fortune, within the last ten years, since 1846, to be employed to bring action against that very man, not under the present fugitive slave law, but under the law which had stood since 1793, for, as I call it, stealing or aiding to steal slaves who had escaped from the State of Maryland into the State of Delaware. I brought several actions against him, and I recovered penalties under that law. I obtained verdicts from the juries, without leaving the box, to the amount of nearly $8,000; but he smuggled away his property in some mode, and covered it up, so that only $2,000 of the amount of the verdicts could be got out of him. So strong was the sentiment of the jury in my county, (in which I admit there are a vast number of Abolitionists, and persons who are infected with the peculiar notions of the Society of Friends,) that when, after the verdicts of the juries in those cases had been given, and the penalties awarded under the act of Congress, I sued him for trespass, de bonis asportatis, the jury gave me, without leaving the box, the full amount of the value of the slaves, in addition to the penalty of the act of Congress. He had been accessory to the removal of slaves by one of the modes in which these gentlemen, who are so exceedingly philanthropic, remove the property of others, and take it from its owners. He paid the penalty in that case. I mention this as the character of the man, in order that you may see that in any question connected with slavery, I would not take his word for any statement of fact under oath, or not under oath; because I consider him a maniac on the subject. I believe such is the general estimation of him in the neighborhood in which I live.

As regards the commissioner in that case, Mr. Guthrie, he is a gentleman of high standing at the bar, a modest, retiring, firm man. I presume he based his opinion upon the ground which I maintain, under the act of Congress for the delivery of fugitives; and it is this: The object of the act is not to try the question of freedom or slavery—to determine it finally—because the effect of the decision of the commissioner cannot be such as regards the rights of masters. If the slave is returned into his own State, under the laws of that State he has the right to apply for his freedom if he is entitled to it. The principle of the fugitive slave law, as I understand it, is, that slavery being acknowledged by the Federal Constitution, for the purpose of the return of fugitive slaves, if slavery is the condition of the black man in the State from which he escapes, and you prove the fact that he was held in slavery at the time he escaped, and that he did escape, then it follows of necessity that being in a state of slavery he cannot, by his escape, change the jurisdiction which is to determine his right to freedom one way or the other.

That I suppose to be the principle of the law. It is a mere ex parte proceeding. It does not bind the slave when he is returned into the State from which he has escaped, and where he has been held in slavery; but the question of freedom or slavery may still be determined there. This is the only fair interpretation of that law. You are to proceed upon it precisely as you do in reference to the escape of criminals, fugitives from justice. You do not mean to try the question whether the man is guilty or not of the crime before you return him, but you return him that he may be tried in the State from whence he escaped. So, by parallel and analogous reasoning in reference to the slave, the Constitution recognizes the right to hold slaves in the States in which slavery is recognized, and it provides for their return; and I say, on no principle, if slavery exists in a State, can the party held to slavery, shift the jurisdiction into another State by his escape. All you have to do is to show the fact that he was held to slavery. If he was held wrongfully, he can apply to the State in which he was held; but he cannot, by his escape, change the jurisdiction which is to determine whether he is a slave or not. I may be wrong in this opinion. I am not going to dilate on it now. I am not going into all the principles which I think necessarily and properly result from it. No doubt I differ in opinion from the Senator from Massachusetts.

It is on that ground, I gather from this letter, that the commissioner in Delaware decided on this case, and I think rightfully. Were I a commissioner, and were a party brought before me as a fugitive slave, and his escape from another State was proved to me, or admitted by himself, I should not enter into the question of whether, under any technical construction of the laws of the State he was, or was not, legally a slave there. It would be enough for me to know that he was held in slavery, and instead of resorting to the laws of the State in which he was held, and which would have removed the evil if he was unjustly held, I say, on a mere summary proceeding, which is not intended to determine finally the question of slavery at all, which does not bind the rights of the negro, which would not be evidence for the purpose of holding him in slavery, and which goes no further than into the prima facie case, if the facts were established that he was held in slavery, and that he had escaped while so held, I should return him.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President—

Mr. RUSK. Will the Senator allow me to state my point of order? I object to the reception of that paper, first, because it is not addressed to the Senate, and secondly, because it contains statements which are disrespectful to the South.

The PRESIDENT. The question then will be upon the reception of the paper, and that question is not debatable, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. SUMNER. I throw myself upon the magnanimity of the Senate to make a brief statement.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am willing to yield it.

Mr. SUMNER. I do not desire—

Mr. TOOMBS. Does it require unanimous consent to permit the Senator to proceed?

The PRESIDENT. In the opinion of the Chair, it does.

Mr. TOOMBS. Then if it does, I object.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator from Louisiana was recognized, and has the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state how the matter stands?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas objected to the reception of the paper, which has been read. That is the question before the Senate.

A motion was also made by the Senator from California, that the motion to refer the petition lie on the table. The other question is first before the Senate.

Mr. SUMNER. The Senator from California moved to lay the motion to refer upon the table.

Mr. CHASE. That was withdrawn.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The motion of the Senator from California was withdrawn, and after the Senator from Delaware addressed the Chair, I was recognized as having the floor.

The PRESIDENT. That is true. The motion was withdrawn, and the Senator from Louisiana was entitled to the floor. The question now is upon the reception of the paper objected to.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And that is not debatable.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the Chair whether the first question is not on the motion to refer the memorial?

The PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas objects to the reception of one of the papers presented by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WELLER. That is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. Do I understand that that paper cannot be received?

The PRESIDENT. It is for the Senate to decide whether it shall be received or not.

Mr. SUMNER. I have no desire to press its reception. I do desire to press the memorial.

The PRESIDENT. The question, then, is on the reference of the memorial.

Mr. SUMNER. I withdraw the paper.

Mr. RUSK. Do I understand that the paper to which I object is withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts withdraw it?

Mr. SUMNER. I do.

The PRESIDENT. The question now is on the reference of the memorial.

Mr. SUMNER. And now—

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have the right to the floor.

Mr. SUMNER. I believe I have possession of the floor. I desire to say but a few words.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. SUMNER. In the impatience of the Senate, I do not desire to follow the discursive address to which we have listened from the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON,] or the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] touching the various points of law and of fact in this matter, which has been so suddenly brought before us. My object is simply to set myself right. That I can do. I know, sir, that I can set myself right always.

In presenting this memorial, I performed a simple duty. I had also a pleasure in its performance. It was a memorial from an eminent society which has enjoyed much honor in this country, and from which memorials have always been welcomed in Congress, from that early memorial signed by Benjamin Franklin, down to the present time. And it urged a prayer which I am always glad of an opportunity to urge.

When I had the honor to receive the memorial some time ago from the eminent president of the society, I wrote to him, acknowledging its reception, and suggested to him that it would be important, in carrying out the desires of the society, to accompany the memorial with such evidence as they could present in relation to the specific grievance set forth in the memorial. In response to that letter, I received from Dr. Parrish, the president, to whom I have referred several papers which accompany the memorial; and also, subsequently, a letter from a gentleman of Delaware, personally unknown to me, and with whom I am not aware that I had had any previous communication. As the letter from Delaware related to this matter and contained what purported to be a certificate of facts, regarded as important, I placed it among other papers accompanying the memorial; and, under these circumstances, I presented them all to the Senate. If the letter contained any expressions justly obnoxious to Congress, or disrespectful to this body, I did not take note of them at the time.

Such, sir, is my simple explanation of these facts; and now with regard to one suggestion that has fallen from the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. DAWSON,] that there are persons here who seek to arouse odium against the South, or to create excitement and ulceration of feeling there. I say distinctly that I am not one of those persons; nor do I believe that any such exist. Sir, I desire no such thing. I desire justice simply; that is all. I wish to see this Union, which binds us all together, a Union of peace and harmony, in fact and in name; but, above all, let it be a Union, where freedom is maintained by constitutional laws. And permit me to say, that just so long as an enactment continues on the statute-book, which defies every sound principle of constitutional law, and every axiom of free institutions, Senators must expect that it will be met by the strongest language of reprobation which can come from honest hearts.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not desire to enter into any general question of the constitutionality of the fugitive slave law, or to excite any further discussion on a topic which, in my estimation, ought to be banished from the Halls of Congress; but on several occasions, on this floor, when the question has arisen in the Senate in relation to the precise construction which the Senator from Massachusetts places upon those articles of the Constitution which are intended to secure to the South the return of its property when it has escaped into free States, the Senator has declared that his statements, or his opinions, upon the subject have been misrepresented. I have listened to him, upon each occasion, with great interest, and I can assure him, with a sincere desire to ascertain his precise views of the constitutional obligation on that point; and I did determine, as no one else had done it, that on the very first occasion on which this question should be raised in the Senate I would endeavor to obtain some distinct knowledge of his opinion.

Now, Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States is composed of a very few articles. There are but seven of them in all. The first provides for the organization of the legislative department of the Government; the second for the executive; and the third for the judiciary. The fourth treats of the relation of the States between themselves, and between themselves and the General Government. The fifth is confined to the subject of amendments to the Constitution; the sixth to a declaration of the general principle that the laws of the United States are paramount to those of the States; and the seventh to the ratification of the Constitution itself. The fourth article, which treats of the relations of the States between themselves and of their relations to the General Government, contains but four short sections. The first provides that "full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State." The second is divided into three paragraphs, the first of which says, that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States." The second paragraph says, that a "person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the Executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime."

The third paragraph says:

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Now, sir, the Senator from Massachusetts on several occasions upon this floor has denied the obligation, as I understand him, under the Constitution of the United States, to deliver up fugitive slaves from the free States to the owners in the slave States. I understand that to be the extent of his denial. I will respectfully ask the Senator from Massachusetts to inform me if that is what he asserts?

Mr. SUMNER. The manner of the Senator from Louisiana is always so kind and so much in conformity with the proprieties of debate, that I shall have great pleasure in answering his questions; but I should prefer to wait until he gets through.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I simply wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether he acknowledges any obligation imposed by the Constitution of the United States, for the return of fugitive slaves from the free States to those by whom they are held to service or labor in the slave States. That is the only question which I desire to propound to him before I proceed with what I have to say.

Mr. SUMNER. And before I answer that question, I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana, whether, under the clause of the Constitution of the United States, which secures to the citizens of every State the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, a colored citizen of Massachusetts can, without any crime, in South Carolina or Louisiana, be seized and thrown into prison, and then afterwards, on failure to pay certain alleged jail fees, be sold absolutely into slavery?

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will answer that I think that is entirely unconstitutional.

Mr. SUMNER. I am very glad that the Senator says it is entirely unconstitutional. I will then ask the Senator if he is ready in his place to introduce an act of Congress to carry out that provision of the Constitution, to secure to the colored citizens of the North their rights in South Carolina and Louisiana?

Mr. BENJAMIN. This is a very extraordinary method of answering a question. I have heard of the Yankee method of answering one question by asking another; but this is answering one by asking two. [Laughter.] It was not my desire to enter into any polemical controversy upon this subject with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts; but, as I stated before, I put the question with a sincere and earnest desire to ascertain whether he and the gentleman with whom he acts, or whose organ he is upon this floor, really recognized any constitutional obligation on the part of the free States, or on the part of Congress, to provide for the return of a fugitive slave from the free to the slave States? Whether that obligation exists anywhere under the Constitution? Or, in other words, whether this article of the Constitution was intended to apply to slaves?

Mr. SUMNER. Before answering the question of the Senator, [laughter,] I should like to have him deal by me as he desires me to deal by him. I should like to have him tell me whether it is in the power of Congress, under the clause of the Constitution to which I have referred, and which is side by side with the other clause on "fugitives from labor," to pass an act to secure to colored citizens of the North, their rights in South Carolina and Louisiana? The Senator must answer that question before he can confront this discussion.

Mr. BENJAMIN. My object is answered, sir.

Mr. CLAY. Exactly; do not say another word.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I imagine, sir, that there is not a man in the country who will not now thoroughly understand the object for which I put the question. That object is entirely answered. To a plain, respectful inquiry put to the Senator from Massachusetts, in relation to his understanding of the provision of the Constitution, about which he declared his sentiments upon this floor, and in relation to which he has always said that his sentiments have been misconstrued, he has answered by submitting to me a series of inquiries. I answered the first, supposing that upon my answering that, he would then be willing to answer my question. Instead of that I find myself put upon the stand. I shall, therefore, decline further discussion.

Mr. GWIN. I move that this subject lie on the table.

Mr. SUMNER. I desire to say one word. I have the floor, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the question lie upon the table.

Mr. SLIDELL. If the Senator from Massachusetts has no right to proceed but by unanimous consent, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California moves that the petition lie on the table.

Mr. CLAY. The subject.

Mr. SUMNER. Have I not the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. SUMNER. I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, when his name was called, said: I answer "no." I want everything to come. Let the crisis come as soon as it can.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 37, nays 14: as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toucey, and Weller—37.

NAYS—Messrs. Butler, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Hamlin, James, Rockwell, Sumner, Toombs, Wade, and Walker—14.

So the motion was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. BADGER. I ask the Senate now to take up for consideration the motion submitted by me some time since, to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill authorizing the construction of a subterranean line of telegraph from the Mississippi or the Missouri river to the Pacific ocean. I will make an explanation, and then hope the Senate will indulge me in my request. I made the motion to reconsider, not because I had changed my mind in regard to the bill, but because I thought it highly important that it should be acted upon by a full Senate; and it passed before without a full Senate, and by a majority of but one vote. I made the motion at the instance of gentlemen for whose opinions I entertain the highest respect. I wish now to have that motion taken up, and for the purpose of doing justice all round, and to ascertain the sense of the Senate without any further consumption of time, if my request is agreed to, I shall ask leave of the Senate to withdraw the motion to reconsider, and then that can be voted upon as a test question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question is upon the motion made by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. WELLER. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BADGER. I imagine that the Senator from California does not understand the question.

Mr. EVANS. Will the Chair state precisely the proposition which is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the question of granting leave to the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. BADGER. I made the motion that the Senate take up the bill for consideration, and I stated that if the Senate agreed to take it up, I should ask leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. WELLER. That is the question before the Senate—shall he have leave to withdraw the motion?

Mr. BADGER. I do not so understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the motion to be to withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BAYARD. The pending motion now is to take it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, it will be taken up.

There was no objection.

Mr. BADGER. Now, Mr. President, I will state a little more distinctly the reasons why, as I have said, I shall submit the motion. I find, sir, in consequence of the state of the business before the Senate, that by pressing the motion to reconsider, I may unduly, and against my intention, do serious injury to it. Now, therefore, with the understanding that it is to enable the Senate to determine whether they will adhere to the bill which they passed or not, I move for leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. STUART. As a test question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on granting leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider. Upon that motion the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. DAWSON. The question is whether leave shall be granted to withdraw the motion to reconsider. Is it within the power of the Senate to grant that leave?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Clearly it is.

Mr. DAWSON. Is not the question directly upon the motion itself an equivalent proposition, and why then change the rule?

Mr. BADGER. I should have no objection to taking the question on that.

Mr. BROWN. We should have a long debate upon it.

Mr. BADGER. I desire simply to say to my friend from Georgia, that under the rules of the Senate, a gentleman who makes a motion can at any time withdraw it, except in case it is a motion to reconsider, which shall not be withdrawn without leave of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina has clearly a right to make the motion. It is in the power of any Senator to object to granting leave, and in that event the sense of the Senate will be taken.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 30, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, and Weller—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Atchison, Bayard, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Hunter, Johnson, Mason, Pearce, Pratt, Sidel, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Walker—19.

So leave was granted to withdraw the motion to reconsider; and it was withdrawn.

Mr. BRIGHT stated that he had paired off with Mr. SEWARD, who was in favor of the bill.

WILLIAM P. S. SANGER.

The Senate proceeded to consider the request of the House of Representatives to furnish them with a certified copy of the bill for the relief of William P. S. Sanger; and it was ordered that the request be complied with.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers."

Mr. GWIN had moved to amend the first section by striking out "free of cost" and inserting "at twenty-five cents an acre payable when the patent shall have issued." Mr. BRODHEAD had moved to amend this amendment by striking out "twenty five," and inserting "fifty." The pending question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from California [Mr. WELLER] is entitled to the floor; but I have suggested to him that I desire to make a motion this morning, and I have his assent to it. After prefacing it with a few remarks, I shall withdraw the substitute which I offered yesterday.

I took occasion yesterday, and, as I thought, with perfect respect to the Senator from California, to ask him, while discussing the amendment to the original bill, to confine himself to that amendment. It will be recollected that the only thing which was done yesterday was the making of a motion, by the Senator from California, to strike out the words "free of cost," and insert "twenty-five cents;" and of another motion by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD], to amend that amendment of the Senator from California, by inserting "fifty" instead of "twenty-five," and I think that from that time down to the hour at which we adjourned, which was past four o'clock, the question before the Senate was not discussed at all.

I do not rise to complain, but only to submit that very much time might be saved, (and I submit it with great respect to Senators,) if we would confine ourselves to the question before the Senate, in our discussions. The most of our debate yesterday was in respect to the proposition which I submitted, and which was not before the Senate for discussion. The original bill and the amendments to it alone were in order.

I find this morning that there is a difference of opinion among those whom I know to be friends of the bill, in respect to the amendment which I have offered; and, sir, willing at all times to consult the wishes and the opinions of others, and against my own judgment, (I am bound to say, decidedly against my own judgment,) I shall withdraw that proposition for the present. I only now wish to submit that I was somewhat surprised to hear the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD], the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN], and the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS], say, with so much emphasis and so much confidence, that the proposition which I submitted contained nothing like a homestead principle.

Mr. GWIN. If the Senator will permit me, I never said that. I stated that it contained many other matters of great importance, and that I thought if it did contain the same principle we had better take the homestead bill on its own basis. The Senators from Illinois and Pennsylvania may have stated what the Senator says.

Mr. STUART. What is a homestead? It is simply a place where a man lives. It is his residence; and there is no other known signification of the term. What is the object, therefore, of a bill granting to a man a homestead? It is to give him a place to live on. Upon what terms? Why, sir, it is no less a homestead because you charge him twenty-five cents an acre for it, than it is if you give it to him; and when a Senator rises here, and undertakes to tell me, especially with as much emphasis as the Senator from Pennsylvania did, that it is not a homestead, he has not consulted the dictionary, he has not at all considered the elements of a homestead. It is, I repeat, merely a place where a man resides, and the question of the terms upon which you will grant to a man, woman, or child, a homestead, is a question which belongs, with great propriety, to the Congress of the United States.

It may be that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to make some reputation in his own State, by being considered the most prominent enemy of the homestead bill. If he does, I do not wish to deprive him of a single iota of it. If there is any other Senator who wishes to be considered the champion par excellence of the homestead principles, neither would I take from him a single plume. I am content, Mr. President, (and I beg to be excused by the Senate for uttering it, for I dislike to speak of myself,) to procure at the hands of the Congress of the United States the best law for the actual settlers upon the public land, the best law for the land holding States, and the best method, in my judgment, of disposing of the whole land question in Congress, which Congress in its wisdom is willing to pass.

I have some peculiar notions of my own; but I am only one among a large number of gentlemen here, most of them older, all of them more experienced, and doubtless all abler; and, sir, I only hope, so far as my feeble powers may enable me, to do something towards adjusting this land question, upon a principle which would be satisfactory generally.

Now, it was said by the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS], and I confess to my surprise, that he regarded the introduction of this substitute as an abandonment of the homestead principle.

Mr. WELLER. I understood this morning from the Senator from Michigan, that his desire was to withdraw his substitute, but not to go into a discussion. If he is desirous of entering into the discussion, I should prefer hearing him after I have spoken.

Mr. STUART. The Senator was not in his seat when I stated that I had his consent to withdraw the substitute, and I at the same time stated my desire to preface it with a very few remarks.

Mr. WELLER. The Senator told me nothing about going into a debate upon the question.

Mr. STUART. The very last thing that I wish to do, is to extend the debate on this question, or on any other question. I have refrained, on every question which has been before the Senate, of a prominent character, at this session, from discussing it, in order to save time. I have done it for that purpose alone; but, sir, I have seen it to be a total failure. I shall, however, pursue that course yet, and, at the suggestion of the Senator from California, I shall say no more, but ask to withdraw the substitute which I offered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. With the consent of the Senator from California, I beg leave to say a word on this subject, as the Senator from Michigan has frequently alluded to me. He has stated that I said his substitute did not contain the homestead principle. That is very certain; and I repeat it.

The homestead bill, as I understand it, meant a free-gift farm, as contradistinguished from the graduation principle, or from the doctrine of ceding the lands to the States; and I repeat, (but not with a view of making myself particularly prominent as the opponent of the homestead bill,) I am in favor of giving cheap homes to poor settlers; and if the Senator from Michigan considers that a homestead bill, I am in favor of it; but, sir, I do not wish to violate a principle for the purpose of doing it. I wish to have some amount paid for these lands, which will approximate to their cost to the Government—which will in some way reimburse it.

Mr. WELLER being entitled to the floor, addressed the Senate at length in support of a modified bill.

Mr. BENJAMIN followed in a speech of considerable length, on the general policy of the land system.

Mr. CASS replied, contending that the true policy for the Government to pursue was to grant the lands to actual settlers without price.

[See Appendix for these speeches.]

Mr. CLAY. I do not rise for the purpose of trespassing on the time of the Senate at this late hour, by making a speech, but I cannot permit the remark of the honorable Senator from Michigan, in regard to what fell from me some days since, to pass unnoticed. I know that he did not design to do me injustice, yet the extent and import which he gave to the word "demagogue," as used by me, was far beyond the sense in which it was intended or used, of which I am well satisfied he would be persuaded upon perusing the speech which I delivered on that day. I did not, by any means, intend to impeach the motives or impugn the conduct of the supporters of the homestead bill on this floor; but I stated that, by pursuing the course of opposition to the measure which I did, I should incur the assaults of demagogues at home; and so I repeat. Now, sir, I say in all candor and frankness, if I could persuade myself that this was a constitutional measure, standing here, as I do, as the representative of one of the new States—a State in which nearly half of all the lands are still public and unappropriated—and if I could reconcile to my conscience a measure fraught with such injustice, as I regard this is, to the old States, as was so eloquently and forcibly portrayed by my friend from Louisiana, then my regard for the interests of my own State would prompt me to support it; and it is because other gentlemen, occupying the position of representatives of States upon this floor, do not regard it as unconstitutional, and I presume do not regard it as unjust to the States, that they support it in good faith, and I believe, without rendering themselves obnoxious to the charge of demagogism. But, sir, what I understand by a demagogue is one who endeavors to lead the people, not for their good, but for his own aggrandizement. I used the word in that sense, and I do not wish to withdraw it. And indeed, as my honorable friend has alluded to the policy of other countries in respect to the disposition of the public lands, I must be permitted to say that I do not think history records the names of greater demagogues than those who have been prodigal of the public funds in order to insure their own elevation. I think Pericles, who ruled the Athenian people less by reason than by the profusion of the public treasures, and the Gracchi who led the Roman people by the distribution of grain from the public granaries, and by the division of the lands were as great demagogues as any who support similar measures in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRIGHT.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD,] to strike "twenty-five" out of the amendment of the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] and insert "fifty."

Mr. PETTIT called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. I shall vote for that amendment, but I desire to say, at the same time, that I concur in every sentiment and word which was uttered upon it by my friend from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS.] I have, and intend at the proper time, to offer another amendment, which will graduate the price of the homestead in a proper proportion to the graduated price of the public lands, for I do not abandon the hope that we shall, ere the close of this session, adopt a graduation bill.

Mr. GWIN. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I think twenty-five cents will be a sufficient price, taking into consideration the five years' residence, and I wish, Mr. President, to make this statement to the Senate, and to the friends of the homestead bill. That proposition comes from an opponent of the bill; and his supporters, among whom is the Senator from Alabama, are also its enemies. Their amendments are intended to destroy the bill. I hope, therefore, its friends will stand by the proposition which I have offered, and vote down the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Evans, Fish, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Toucey—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fish, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—27.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. I understand the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania was to insert "fifty" instead of "twenty-five." I now move to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty," together with the provision that at the end of five years the settler shall be entitled to the reduction of fifty cents upon every acre in cultivation. The effect of it will be simply, that at the end of five years the settler will be compelled to pay fifty cents upon every acre that he does not reduce to cultivation.

Mr. GWIN. If my colleague will reduce his amendment to writing, I may accept it.

Mr. WELLER. The Secretary can read it. The amendment was to strike out of Mr. GWIN's amendment "twenty-five cents per acre," and insert:

"Fifty cents per acre, payable in five years, to be returned for every acre which may, within that time, be reduced to cultivation."

Mr. PETTIT. I hope that will not be agreed to. I can see, in the future, thousands of difficulties which will arise out of it. There will be no end to the surveying of each tract of land, to know how many acres have, and how many have not, been reduced to cultivation. There will be no end to the increase of clerks in the Land Office to keep up a record of this matter. It seems to me there is nothing practical in the proposition.

Mr. WELLER. I had not supposed that any western man would be troubled in determining what "cultivation" meant. I think it is a matter which can be very easily attended to at the Land Office. My simple proposition is, that if at the end of five years the settler shall have reduced say sixty acres to cultivation, he shall only be compelled to pay fifty cents per acre upon that which he has not cultivated—fifty dollars, of course, for one hundred and sixty acres of land. I apprehend there would be no difficulty in determining it. It would require, of course, satisfactory proof at the Land Office that the settler had reduced a certain amount to cultivation. Upon what he had reduced to cultivation he would have nothing to pay. My object is to induce the settler to cultivate as much of the land as possible; and therefore, I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. PRATT called for the yeas and nays on the amendment to the amendment; and they were ordered, and taken with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Mallory, Rusk, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Weller—9.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Bayard, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of New Jersey, Wade, and Walker—41.

So it was rejected.

Mr. WELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BROWN. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Gillette, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rusk, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, and Walker—25.

And the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 19, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN BOSTON, NEW YORK, AND PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The Committee on the Judiciary has had referred to it Senate bill (No. 38) "to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts." The committee has also had under consideration the condition of the courts in Philadelphia and New York. I would state to the House that the courts in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia are actually turned out of doors, and that there are no means by which the Government can provide for proper conveniences for them. The bill has passed the Senate on this subject, and I now desire the unanimous consent of the House to report it back, with amendments, in order that it may now be acted on.

There was no objection, and Mr. STANTON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill with amendments, and the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee's amendments were read and agreed to, as follows:

After the word "necessary" strike out the words "and permanent."

After the word "Massachusetts" insert the words "and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia."

Strike out the last part of the bill, which reads as follows: "For a term of not less than ten years, or by purchase; provided that no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress," and in lieu thereof insert "until permanent accommodations can be provided as hereinafter proposed," so that the section will read, when amended, thus:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to provide necessary accommodations for the courts of the United States, and the officers connected with them, in the district of Massachusetts, and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia, by fitting up and leasing the same until permanent accommodations can be procured as hereinafter proposed.

Add, as an additional section, the following:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized to procure, by purchase or otherwise, suitable sites for buildings to be used as court-houses and post offices, in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and that he prepare and submit to Congress, at as early a day as practicable, plans and estimates for the same.

Mr. STANTON. I will state, in a few words, that the bill, as it came from the Senate, authorized the Secretary of the Interior to make provision for permanent accommodations by a lease of not less than ten years. The Committee on the Judiciary propose to authorize the Secretary to make temporary arrangements for the accommodation of these courts, and then, by a second section, directs the President to procure sites for buildings either by purchase or otherwise. This mode of expression was adopted because it has been intimated to the committee that the city of New York would give to the Government of the United States a site for a court-house and post office in one of the public squares. That may, or may not, be so, and hence the words "by purchase, or otherwise," are used. The committee thought that as the necessity for these court-houses and post offices is likely to be permanent, it would be economical on the part of the Government to provide for permanent buildings in these three cities. These courts are very important ones, and the gentlemen representing the cities concerned know that they are now actually turned out of doors.

In one or two of these cities they actually refuse to hold any courts, for want of places in which to hold them. From the city of Philadelphia we have had representations from grand juries, judges, and citizens, so that the fact is ascertained beyond any doubt that something must be done, or else justice will be at an end in these cities. I hope the bill will be passed by the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Tennessee for one moment to the phraseology in that part of the bill which proposes to make it necessary for the President to act—I mean that part of it which directs him to cause sites to be obtained. I think if the gentleman desires to accomplish the object he has in view, he had better employ such phraseology as will leave the matter discretionary with the President. In lieu of the words now employed, I would suggest the words “that he be authorized.”

Mr. STANTON. I accept the amendment. Mr. HAVEN. I do not rise to interpose any objection to the bill, but I would like to hear it read as it is amended.

The bill, as amended, was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move further to amend the bill by inserting the city of Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, as one of the points or places to be provided for in this bill.

I would say just one word to the House in support of this amendment. The business men of the State of Indiana met last winter on this subject, and instructed me to present the question to the House of Representatives, and also instructed the delegation of Indiana to support such a proposition. There is at present no place in the State of Indiana suitable for the Federal courts to hold their sessions. I do not know that I can add any argument which will enforce the necessity of adopting the amendment.

Mr. STANTON. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withhold his amendment for the present. I assure him that the Judiciary Committee would not have asked the House to consider this bill at the present time, but for the fact that in these cities the Federal courts cannot be held. In the city of Philadelphia, I am informed, the papers connected with the courts are actually locked up in the vaults of one of the banks, because there is no proper place to keep them in. The whole world knows that the court-house in the city of New York has been recently burned down, and that in the city of Boston the courts are turned out of doors, and there is no place whatever for the sessions of the courts to be held in. I presume the gentleman from Indiana will not say that in his State there is this pressing necessity for a court-house; and I therefore hope that the gentleman will not press his amendment in this bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The Federal courts have no room at all in the city of Indianapolis. They hold their sessions in the Senate Chamber, which is by no means a suitable building for the purpose. The supreme court of the State of Indiana occupies rooms, so that at the time said court is in session, these rooms cannot be occupied by the Federal courts, and there is no suitable building for the Federal courts in the city of Indianapolis at all. The Senate Chamber is not fit for the purpose. And, therefore, it is that I think this is a proper time to have provision made for the city of Indianapolis in this bill.

Mr. STANTON. I ask the gentleman what he would propose to do when the State is divided into two judicial districts? Does not the gentleman propose to have it so divided?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, I do not propose it, and I hope it will not be done. It is not necessary to divide the State of Indiana into two judicial districts. One district does all the business which Indiana presents. I think this is as important a point for building a Federal court as any other proposed in the bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If there are to be any amendments proposed to this bill, I will also propose to amend the amendment so as to have the State of Illinois come in for a share of the benefit, as there is great need for the erection of a Federal court there. But I am willing that this bill should go through as it is. However, if amendments are to be introduced, it is but fair that we should all have an opportunity of amending.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am certain the gentleman from Illinois does not propose to embarrass my amendment. I ask him if the business men of his State have instructed him to present that proposition?

Mr. WASHBURN. I would state, in reply to the gentleman from Indiana, that my instructions are—the public good of my own State.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am instructed to present the proposition I have offered by all the people of the State of Indiana interested in such business. That is my apology for asking the adoption of this amendment in the bill. The cities of Philadelphia, and Boston, and New York are much better able to provide buildings for the Federal courts than the city of Indianapolis is. I think, therefore, that my amendment should be adopted.

Mr. STANTON. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question was taken on Mr. HENDRICK'S amendment to the amendment; and it was not agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

Mr. STANTON. I move to amend the title so as to correspond with the amendment adopted. I move that the title be as follows:

Bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the districts of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill, (No. 227,) for the purpose of having it referred to a standing committee.

No objection being made, Senate bill (No. 227) “to authorize the extension and completion of the Treasury buildings, and also the construction of a building for the War and Navy and Interior Departments,” was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. OLDS. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the further consideration of the bill “to amend the act entitled an act to amend an act entitled an act to reduce and modify the rates of postage of the United States,” passed August 30, 1852. The pending motion is to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and upon that question the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ELIOT] has the floor.

Mr. OLDS. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield me the floor a moment, I wish to give notice to the House that it is my intention to report to-morrow the post route bill, and I take this occasion to express a wish that those gentlemen who have post routes in which they are interested, and which they desire to have inserted in the bill, will to-day go to the committee room and see that they are in, and in correctly, too; for it not unfrequently happens that the names of places are spelled wrong.

BILLS REPORTED.

Mr. EDMANDS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time by their respective titles, referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

An act for the relief of George J. Rallston;
An act for the relief of Joseph McMinn; and An act for the relief of Asa Leach.

MAIL BETWEEN CALIFORNIA AND CHINA.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table, for the purpose of having it referred to a committee, a Senate bill in reference to steam communication between the Pacific coast and China.

No objection being made, Senate bill (No. 411) entitled “An act to establish a line of steamships between San Francisco, and Shanghai, in China, touching at the Sandwich Islands and Japan,” was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. McDOUGALL also, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, requesting a weekly mail service between the Atlantic coast and San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

RATES OF POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

The House then proceeded to the regular order of business.

Mr. ELIOT, of Massachusetts, who was entitled to the floor, said: I have but a few words that I desire to add. Indeed I should not have entered into the discussion, but that the interests of my own State seemed so deeply involved that I feared it might betoken a remissness which does not by any means exist, if her voice were not heard at all. But I have heard that a friend and colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. WALLEY] designed to speak—so that it may be that, if my time had been more silently spent, it would have been more usefully passed.

But this is my argument: The bill, in order to be effectual, must double to the reader of mailed printed matter the post office charge. That would be, in effect, a tax upon the means of education, and upon intelligence, and would operate as a hindrance to the mental growth of the people. If the bill did not so operate, it would be because the printed matter now subject to charge would be distributed through other channels than the mail. In that case the bill itself would be of no benefit to the Department; so that to benefit the Department it must injure the people!

Such legislation is unwise, unless imperatively demanded by the poverty of the Government. That is not the fact at this time. Nor do the arguments advanced in support of the bill show a rightful necessity for such legislative action. The idea that, at this time, our Post Office establishment should sustain itself, is altogether erroneous. There are too many expensive post routes established, and too much free matter mailed, and too heavy ocean contracts entered into, to make it practicable, without such addition to our postage as would be intolerable. But if the theory were well founded, time enough has not elapsed since the reduction of postages to enable any one to say that, as a permanent establishment, it will not be self-supported.

Nor is it possible to pass a law by which they who use the office shall pay for the benefits of the office, and be just to the several States, without establishing different rates of charge in different sections of country, which no man who regards the Union would advocate. And the argument proves too much. The same kind of argument might be used against the erection of a custom-house at a port of entry, because that port of entry did not pay duties enough to defray the expense. The true theory, so long as one postal establishment exists, is for the Government to pay a part, and the people a part. All are benefited. And the present system substantially effects that.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I call for the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put, being first upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. PECK. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. DICKINSON. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. Dickinson's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 74, nays 67; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Belcher, Benson, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edwards, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Florence, Giddings, Goodrich, Grover, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Kittredge, Knox, McCulloch, Mace, Matteson, Maurice, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sahlin, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Sillers, Richard H. Stanton, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walley, Wal-h, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick D. Wright, and Zollacofer—74.

NAYS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Ashe, Backs de, Bliss, Boyce, Bridges, Carnahan, Cha-tain, Chrisman, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, John G. Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Durham, Edgerton, Edmundson, Faulkner, Franklin, Goode, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Houston, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kurtz, Lamb, Lilly, Lindsay, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Macey, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, John Perkins Phelps, Powell, Puryear, Keady, Reese, Rowe, Seward, Shaw, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Trout, and Daniel B. Wright—67.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the vote by which the bill was laid upon the table be reconsidered, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I submit that motion.

Mr. McMULLIN. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his motion until we can dispose of the business now upon the Speaker's table. There are some bills there which ought to be referred.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the House resolves to go to the business on the Speaker's table, the bill which was yesterday postponed until action was had on the Army bill, which is now under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, will come up first in order, and will have to be again postponed.

Mr. McMULLIN. We can informally pass that bill, and go to the other business upon the Speaker's table. It should be disposed of in one way or the other.

Mr. HOUSTON. I must decline to withdraw my motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I demand tellers on the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and ROBBINS were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 75, nays 59.

So the motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1855."

The following paragraph having been reported by the Clerk:

"For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry, $39,200."

Mr. FAULKNER said: I was about offering an amendment to that paragraph when the committee rose yesterday. I now move to reduce that appropriation from $39,200 to $35,100.

The explanation of this reduction I can briefly state to the committee. There are three items embraced in the estimate, one of $1,300, one of $1,000, and one of $1,800, in respect to which it is ascertained that the improvements contemplated have already been made there; and, therefore, there is no necessity for any further appropriation for them. While I make this statement, I deem it due to the superintendent at Harper's Ferry, and also to the Secretary of War, who presented the estimates to the House, to state that in document No. 1, pages 276-7, there is conclusive evidence to show that there was no intention to practice any deception whatever on Congress; because the fact is set forth in that document, that these improvements had already been finished. And, therefore, in point of fact, this estimate can be regarded in no other light than an act of mere carelessness and inattention on the part of those who made it out at Harper's Ferry. I move to reduce the appropriation to $35,100.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. DICKINSON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether these estimates embrace any expenditures which have already been made there?

Mr. FAULKNER. I have already stated to the committee, that they embrace three items of expenditure, where the work referred to has already been done and paid for. And while I state this fact, I deem it also proper to state, in justice to those who made these erroneous estimates, that they had themselves furnished, in document No. 1, page 276, evidence of the fact, that these estimates embraced improvements which had already been executed and paid for. So that it can be regarded in no other light than as a matter of mere carelessness and inattention, and should not reflect upon the fairness, honesty, or honor of those who made them.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to ask the gentleman if he is satisfied, from his own knowledge, that this application for this money upon the estimates is proper to be made, and such as the House ought to vote for?

Mr. FAULKNER. I am satisfied in reference to all the estimates which I have not moved to strike out, that the appropriations should be made, and those which I have asked to be stricken out, are estimates for works which have already been executed and paid for.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am opposed to the amendment, and my object, as the House will see, in asking these questions, was to allow the gentleman to put himself upon the record, with reference to these appropriations. He has signed a report which shows to this House, or states to this House, that great misappropriations have been made of the money appropriated for the Harper's Ferry armory; and, in consequence of that and similar statements, the House has been induced to vote that a change should be made in the superintendency of that work, as well as in other works.

Now, sir, if appropriations are asked for in this bill which can be dispensed with properly, and there is to be a change of the power which is to administer the Government there, it is but due to the incoming administration to allow it to make its own estimates, and its demands for such appropriations as in its judgment are wise and economical, and called for by a just regard for the interest of the Government in the manufacture of arms.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman allow me to make one single remark? It is this: I am asking that these three items may be stricken out, after a full interview upon the subject with the Secretary of War, and with the knowledge of the head of the Ordnance Bureau. The explanation in reference to this matter will be found in Document No. 1, page 276, and I never saw or heard of it until yesterday, for if I had, it should have been brought to the attention of the select committee. In this I repair the wrong done to them in the report of the majority. My purpose is justice, so far as it can be obtained.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is it in order to move an amendment at this time to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I move to reduce the appropriation in line one hundred and twenty-one—

The CHAIRMAN, (interrupting.) That part of the bill is already passed.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is it irrevocably passed?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. PECKHAM. Then I move to amend by providing that no part of the money; except $40,000, shall be appropriated until six months hereafter. I suppose that amendment is in order. I wish to reduce the $200,000 appropriation to $40,000, for the manufacture of arms. Is that amendment in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

The question was then taken; and the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I move the following amendment:

And the moneys derived from the recent sale of lots at Harper's Ferry, are also hereby appropriated, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of improving the property retained by the United States at that place, who is also authorized to apply the remaining installments, as they become due, to the same object; and the Secretary of War is directed to make a report to Congress, exhibiting, in detail, the application made by him of the said proceeds of sale to the improvement of the Government property at that place.

Mr. FAULKNER said: The object of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of War to make application of the proceeds of the sales of lots which has recently taken place at Harper's Ferry to the improvement of the Government works at Harper's Ferry. It appears from a statement which I hold in my hands from the Major of Ordnance, dated the 18th of May, that "the amount, up to the 31st of March, deposited in the Treasury on account of the sale of public lands at this armory, is about $27,692 31; the amount in the hands of paymaster, and not yet deposited $2,100—there remaining yet to be paid by the purchasers the sum of about $28,854 52, which, together with the sales of unreserved ground authorized ultimately to be made by the report of the board of officers, will amount to at least the sum of $90,800—not less." That is the amount arising from the sale of lots at Harper's Ferry. I propose by that amendment that, inasmuch as a new arsenal is required there, and other improvements of the public works are required, that the Secretary of War shall be authorized to make application of the sale of this Government property for the improvement of the Government works there, in such manner as, in his discretion and judgment, may seem best for the public interest. This was recommended by the Secretary of War, and is among the estimates laid before Congress. I will further add, that a similar provision passed the Senate at the last session of Congress, but was not acted upon favorably in this House. It strikes me that the application, in every point of view, will be just and proper. It is money arising from the sale of Government property.

The amount expended at Harper's Ferry is far short of what has been expended at Springfield in Massachusetts, for machinery and improvements. They are boasting of their superiority over us in the manufacture of arms, and are making it a matter for exultation that they are able to manufacture the musket one dollar and twenty-five cents cheaper than we can. That is owing to the fact that the Government has expended a larger amount of money at Springfield, in perfecting the machinery and affording other facilities, of which we have not the benefit. I ask, therefore, that this fund, not coming directly out of the public Treasury, but from the very spot where it is proposed to be expended, shall be applied, under the direction of the Secretary of War, to the erection of suitable buildings, and the purchase of such machinery as will put the armory at Harper's Ferry on an equality with its rival at the North. Can my friend oppose that? Is he inclined to see us taunted with inferiority in the manufacture of arms, when the superiority of the Springfield armory results alone from the greater expenditure made there by the Government? We have ample water-power and everything to compete with the Springfield armory, had we at Harper's Ferry the same conveniences of buildings and machinery which they at the North enjoy. I regret that the five-minute rule does not enable me to explain the justice of this proposition more in detail; but I am satisfied, if I had the opportunity of doing so, the committee would look with favor upon my amendment. When the War Department determined upon a sale of the vacant lots at Harper's Ferry—

Mr. CRAIGE. This seems to me to be one of the most extraordinary moves for the expenditure of the public money that I have ever seen or heard of; but it is not more extraordinary than that the amendment should proceed from the source whence it does, and be supported by the argument with which it is. I thought the other day, when we were discussing the question of the superintendency of the national armories, that the great argument against the military system, and by which they endeavored to break it down, was, that under that system the expenditures were more extravagant than under the civil system, because of the larger appropriations for officers' quarters, &c. But is it possible, Mr. Chairman, that this committee will sanction the principle laid down by the gentlemen on the other side, that this money does not come out of the public Treasury? By parity of reasoning, New York should receive all the money collected at that city as duties over and above expenses. The same with Philadelphia. The public money, wherever collected, I apprehend, is taken from the people, and goes into the public Treasury. Therefore, I cannot see any force in the gentleman's argument, that, because the Government receives money from the sale of public property at Harper's Ferry, that money should be appropriated to that place.

I am satisfied of one thing, and that is, that the gentlemen who yesterday, or the day before, were so earnest in opposition to the extravagant expenditures at these armories, are not as earnest now. Circumstances, in other words, alter cases. When endeavoring to break down the military system the expenditures were too extravagant, and by the use of such arguments they succeeded in what they proposed. Now that Harper's Ferry is to be benefited, these appropriations are all right. Indeed, we have one of those extraordinary exhibitions which I always regret to see.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am sure that the gentleman would not speak as he does if he had heard my remarks made yesterday. I expressly disclaimed then making any assault on the military system because of the expenditures, either at Harper's Ferry or Springfield.

Mr. CRAIGE. Very well. But I was going on to say that I was more surprised still at the other argument made by the gentleman, that this appropriation should be granted because it was for the South. I am asked as a southern man to vote for the appropriation. I have always been opposed to these sectional appeals. They are made now on all occasions. We cannot have a miserable appropriation for $10,000 before us without being asked, either as northern or southern men, to give it our support. The gentleman should recollect the noble sentiment of one for whom he professes to have a great reverence, at least in as small a matter as this, to know no North, no South, no East, no West. If there are any further reasons to be assigned for voting the amendment, I should like to hear them; but until I hear something more convincing than I have yet heard, I shall vote against it.

Mr. KEITT. I desire to ask the Chair if an amendment is in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment is in order. Mr. KEITT. Then I move to strike out the words "Secretary of War," and substitute the following: "under the management of the superintendent, who shall be a practical mechanic, and shall not have held political office."

It is scarcely necessary for me to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have entire confidence in the Secretary of War. His exploits in the field have illumined our banner, and his wisdom in legislation has benefited the whole country. Then I cannot be supposed to refer to him. I offer the amendment as pertinent to the action of the committee upon that portion of the bill now under consideration, which relates to the management of the armories. Sir, I was for giving the widest range to the Administration in the selection of suitable persons to manage these institutions. I was opposed to any invidious discrimination between the various pursuits of the country. I was opposed to the recognition of classes as hostile to the theory of our Government. These are works common to all the country, and are supported by taxes paid by every section into the Treasury, and my constituents are interested in their profitable and economical management. I shall not tax my constituents to quarter the constituents of any one upon funds thus levied.

But, sir, the committee have acted upon this matter, and let us see its action. The armories were put by law under the Ordnance Department, and the President was authorized to select the most suitable person to manage them. The committee have restricted his discretion, and limited him to a choice among "civilians," as they are termed. Why this change? Mr. BELL, of Tennessee, in 1841, when Secretary of War, appointed a member of the Ordnance Corps to these armories, from a desire, he said, in his testimony before us, to rescue these works from partisan favoritism.

Now, sir, I ask if this Democratic Congress, with eighty majority, and with the prestige of unparalleled success throughout the country, has been reduced to the "lean and slipped condition" of throwing the armories back again into the furnace of party? But, sir, gentlemen who were unsparingly zealous for the change, urged that the great mechanical interest of the Government had a right to these offices. Sir, I recognize no man's right to any office; but these gentlemen zealously urged such right.

The cry was, "working mechanics should be put at the head of these armories." Sir, I believed that this cry was only for effect—now I intend to test it. I believed that politicians were to be put into these superintendencies as a reward for partisan services, and not mechanics, as a tribute to American genius and skill. In this contest between the politician and the mechanic, I am in favor of the mechanic, and I want to test the sincerity of this clamor for the mechanical interest. Sir, one would think, from the impetuous professions here of favor for the mechanics as a class, that the "Know-Nothings" had terrified the Democracy from the embraces of the foreigners, and that, in their alarm, they are convulsively hugging the mechanics. Now, sir, I do not want a time-serving embrace; I want a manly and honest one. I want the committee to support the mechanic against the politician, and not use the mechanic merely to promote the interest of the politician.

I am opposed, as I said before, to any invidious discriminations among our citizens; but if gentlemen are determined to make them, I desire that they be made sincerely and faithfully. If they must be made, I prefer the mechanic to the politician, and I hold gentlemen to that distinction, when they have made it, as the least dangerous. Sir, I do not want a jaded, and broken-down, and spavined politician in these offices. My constituents pay a portion of the taxes, and I want to quarter no politician upon their earnings.

Sir, I cannot think that the Democratic party need to make capital out of the offices at these armories, which were rescued from political favoritism by a Whig Administration, and which act has been approved by every subsequent Democratic Administration. Now, sir, if the object is not to extend the patronage of party, and make political capital out of these offices, but if the object be sincerely to benefit and honor the mechanical interest, let this amendment be adopted.

Sir, I cannot be told that the President should have a wider discretion than what they call the class of mechanics. Sir, I urged unrestricted discretion as important to the public interests; but I was met with the avowal that the mechanics had a right to these offices. If they have such right, do not defraud them out of it. The committee, sir, have expressed their motives for a change; have given as a controlling reason, the right of the mechanics, and now I ask the committee to carry out its purposes in good faith—I want no political speculation.

Sir, I may say in conclusion, that I have full confidence in the Administration, and that I believe that the principles of the Republican party in their entire integrity, are lodged only in the Executive department so far.

Mr. LETCHER. This seems to be a strange sort of doctrine, that military men have no politics. Why, look at it. Is not the President a military man? Are not the Secretary of War, Colonel Davis, and the Attorney General, Mr. Cushing, military men? And is it not notorious that one third of the members of this House, just after the Mexican war, were military men?

Mr. CRAIGE. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] introduced a proposition that the Committee of the Whole should be governed by the same rules that we have in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER] is in order.

Mr. LETCHER. I am replying to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. KEITT.] Now, sir, I say, so far as this matter is concerned, that when the gentleman undertakes, by his amendment, to place these armories in the hands of those who have no politics, he will have to go somewhere else than to the Army to find them.

Mr. KEITT. I said that if such an amendment were not adopted, the armories would be under the control of politics.

Mr. LETCHER. Then if they are under the control of politics now, what is the use of all the fuss that is being made about it? If the Army officers are just as much politicians as civilians, what is the use of the gentleman from South Carolina talking about broken-down politicians who have rendered services at the hustings?

Mr. KEITT. I do not say the Army officers are politicians, but I say that when the armories are put under the control of politics as argued here, that even officers would be brought under that control.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Virginia have the goodness to yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. LETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. STANTON. What I desire to say is this, and I challenge contradiction of the statement, that during the forty-seven years in which these armories were under civil control, not a single man was removed for political causes, and moreover, nearly every man who occupied a position in them died in office or resigned.

Mr. CRAIGE. I apprehend that the Chair did not understand my point of order.

Mr. LETCHER. Gentlemen are creating a great deal of disorder here unnecessarily, by interrupting me. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIGE. I made my point of order on the gentleman from Virginia, and I would make it on any other gentleman in the House sooner than on him.

Mr. LETCHER. Oh don't make me an exception.

Mr. CRAIGE. The amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. KEITT.] is, that this appropriation, so much desired by my friend from Virginia, should be disbursed under the direction of a mechanic.

Mr. KEITT. That the superintendent should be a practical mechanic.

Mr. CRAIGE. Exactly. His amendment is, that the superintendent hereafter to be appointed at each of these armories, must be a practical mechanic. My friend from Virginia opposed that amendment on the ground that the gentleman from South Carolina proposes to put them under military superintendence. Now, it is no such thing.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman from South Carolina also proposed that the superintendent should have held no political office.

A MEMBER. No, sir.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, something of that sort.

Several MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. LETCHER. I thought it was so. Now, if the gentleman had talked about placing these armories under mechanics, yesterday or the day before, or whatever day he was making his speech before the House, I should have been very much inclined to listen to him with rather more favor than I am inclined to listen to him now. But he made no such point yesterday, merely contending that the armories should be under military superintendence. This is a point on which he falls back with the hope of saving himself by it. The gentleman thought yesterday that none but military men should have charge of these establishments, and now he turns around, and thinks that they should be in charge of mechanics.

Mr. KEITT. My desire is that if civil superintendents are to be appointed, they shall be selected from the ranks of mechanics, so that you shall not "Hold the bud of promise to the ear,

And break it to the hope."

Mr. LETCHER. Then if the House has determined that the man who has charge of these armories shall be a civilian and a mechanic—

Mr. KEITT, (interrupting.) He is to be a civilian, and the argument was that he should be a mechanic.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not think that the argument was exactly that the superintendent should be a mechanic. But whether it was so or not, I take it that the gentleman who has charge of the armory, is just as competent, if a civilian, to disburse this fund wisely, as any military gentleman that might be appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina to the amendment.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. PRESTON, and BAYLY of Virginia, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 80.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I offer the following amendment:

To William W. Eaton, of Connecticut, for expenses and services as legal adviser employed at the suggestion of, and before the Army commission, sitting at Springfield, Massachusetts, in the summer of 1853, sixty-three days, at eight dollars per day, $504.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is not in order; it is a private claim.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will state that this is recommended by—

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. INGERSOLL. I wish to make a single suggestion, and I think the Chair will be inclined to rule the amendment to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment to be not in order, and the gentleman can make no statement in reference to it. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

Mr. INGERSOLL. I will appeal, if I can have the opportunity of making a statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal will not be debatable.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Then I do not appeal.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the following amendment, and ask for the question upon it:

At the end of line one hundred and twenty-eight, insert the following words:

For military and geographical surveys west of the Mississippi river, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to offer a small amendment, by the recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means, and also by the Department. Before offering it, however, I desire to say a word, and it is all I shall say in reference to it. It is for the purchase of the planetarium which we have seen in the rotunda of the Capitol. It is thought that it may be useful to the students at West Point. There may be a difference of opinion in reference to it, but I offer the amendment appropriating $2,000 for that purpose.

The amendment was read, as follows:

For the purchase of Barlow's planetarium for the use of the Military Academy at West Point, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to amend by inserting the following:

For continuing the exploration and survey to ascertain the best route for a railway to the Pacific, and for completing the reports of surveys already made, the sum of $150,000.

Mr. LETCHER. I raise a question of order on the amendment.

Mr. McDUGALL. The appropriation is estimated for and recommended by the War Department. I send a letter from the Secretary of War to the Clerk's desk in relation to the matter, which I ask may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Have appropriations been made heretofore for the same object?

Mr. McDUGALL. There have been.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the gentleman's statement the Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. There has been appropriations for the general object; but I would ask the gentleman from California whether his amendment does not contemplate the exploration and survey of entirely new routes?

Mr. McDUGALL. The appropriation of the last session was for the general purpose of exploration and ascertainment of a practicable route. My amendment proposes an appropriation for precisely the same purpose.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the appropriation of the last session was for the survey of a route or routes; that those routes have nearly all been surveyed, and that an appropriation was made in the deficiency bill to complete the surveys. This appropriation, I understand, is for new routes. If my understanding be correct, then I contend that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. McDUGALL. The appropriation of the last session was not made for the survey of any particular route, but for the general purpose of an examination of the country between the Mississippi river and the Pacific coast, for the ascertainment of some practicable route. No one route has been completely surveyed. The object of the appropriation made at the last session has not been accomplished, and my amendment merely proposes to carry out what was begun at the last Congress, and to continue the surveys until some route is determined on.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman's amendment contemplate the completion of the routes already surveyed, or the survey of new routes? I repeat, that, if it contemplates new routes, I contend that it is not in order.

Mr. McDUGALL. There were no particular directions accompanying the appropriation made at the last session, excepting that the country between here and the Pacific coast should be examined and surveyed. It did not relate to any particular survey, but provided for the ascertainment of a practicable route.

The letter of the Secretary of War was read by the Clerk, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, July 18, 1854.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 15th instant, I have the honor to state that it will be seen, by reference to my annual report, and also to my report to Congress on the "first Monday of February" last, that the appropriation made at the last session of Congress to ascertain the most practicable route for a railway to the Pacific, had not been found sufficient to cover thoroughly the vast extent of territory to be explored before that problem could be satisfactorily solved.

The surveys, as far as they have been reported to this office, have failed to indicate any route across the Sierra Nevada range, and adjacent mountains, which is not attended with serious obstacles to the location of a railroad. For the full development of much valuable information collected by the parties charged with those surveys, it will be necessary to have additional means, and to occupy more time in the preparation of a report on the material collected by these parties, than was formerly contemplated. I therefore, in compliance with your request to estimate for continuing the exploration and survey to ascertain the best route for a railway to the Pacific, and for completing the reports of the surveys already made, the sum of $150,000.

This estimate is not given in detail, from the impracticability of designating the routes to be hereafter surveyed, until the results of the labor already performed have been reported to this office, and the difficulties to be overcome are better understood.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.

Hon. J. A. McDUGALL,
Chairman Select Committee on Pacific Railroad.

Mr. McDUGALL. It is well understood by the committee at this time, that the Department undertook to survey two different routes to the Pacific—a northern route and southern route. A partial attempt was made to survey the central route. The surveys of neither the northern or southern routes have been completed; and but little labor has been bestowed in the investigation with regard to the central route. No examination and no exploration at any one point in the great mountain barrier, the Sierra Nevada, which lies along the Pacific, has been made. That whole range of mountains will have to be explored and examined, in order to determine the problem of the practicability of a railroad over that route. The small sum of $150,000, for a great purpose like this, is altogether inconsiderable. The surveys of the railroad routes to the Pacific have been already commenced, and the appropriations made at the last session of Congress will be to a great extent lost, unless further appropriations are made. I believe this is well understood by the committee, and I ask that the request of the Secretary of War be complied with, and that the surveys be made.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I oppose the amendment of the gentleman from California, but I will say that I think it is right.

Mr. COBB. I move to strike out the word "fifty," so as to leave $100,000.

I admit that the work of building a railroad to the Pacific is a great enterprise, but I have been called to act upon surveys made by individuals, for which we appropriated $150,000 at the last session of Congress, and what information have I obtained from those surveys which has resulted in anything practicable? I have been less fortunate than many of my colleagues, with whom I have been connected on the select committee. You have had very little information as to the expenditure of the $150,000, which appropriation was made so that we might arrive at some particular conclusion as to the practicability of the construction of a railroad from the Mississippi to the Pacific ocean. I have never questioned the propriety of such a construction. But we have expended that $150,000; and the application now is that we appropriate $150,000 more for the same purpose. And now that we have received all the information that these engineers are able to give us on this subject, what is the result? Why, according to our own proposition, the construction of the work is to be left to private enterprise. We may give them the measures and boundaries, but the work is to be solely under private supervision. We may say that the line is to start at certain points, and to end at certain points; but that is all the control we have over it. We make—if the bill pass—an appropriation of land and money for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the road; but do you suppose that the companies who take the matter in hand are going to be guided by the surveys we have caused to be made? Certainly not. True, the result of these surveys may furnish them with an outline from which they will draw their own conclusions; but that is all. We leave them to determine for themselves how this road shall be constructed. And yet we are asked here to appropriate $150,000 more for these surveys. Now, I ask, is that proposition politic? Is it right? Is it necessary? Can any good result from it? These are the questions which ought to influence us. True, we may, from these reconnaissances, get some general information in relation to the geography of the country which may result in good; but if that is all the benefit we derive from it, it is not worth the $300,000 we will have expended. Sir, I am opposed to the proposition. I want to see some practical good growing out of the appropriation of $150,000 which we have already made. And when it is clearly demonstrated to me that this further appropriation is necessary, I may be willing to vote for it, so as to consummate the object designed.

Mr. McDUGALL. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] was at one time exceedingly anxious to obtain information from the Government offices in relation to these explorations; but his anxiety must have decreased considerably, or he would have learned that there are in the War Department profiles of two lines of road, extending, one from Fort Smith, through New Mexico, to the river Colorado, and one extending from the Upper Mississippi to the Columbia river. Profiles of both lines have been prepared, showing that one of them is altogether practicable, and that the other is unresolved as to a few points. He would find, also, that under that appropriation of $150,000 which he speaks of, a survey had been made from San Antonio, by El Paso, to the city of San Angelo, in the State of California. And he would find that a profile of that road has been made, leaving, however, a number of points undetermined. And he would further find that the question of the practicability of railroads to the Pacific has been substantially solved—that a line can be constructed by the South, but only by the South. Now, if a road is to be constructed to the Pacific, it is to be constructed as a great national work. And if we have ascertained and determined that we can build a railroad there by the South, let us also ascertain, if you please, whether we can construct another by the North. Let us have the information in all other directions as we have had in the southern direction. But the surveys of the southern line are incomplete; undoubtedly some of the most important points are yet undetermined. And it is as important to the gentlemen of the South as it is to the gentlemen of the other parts of the Union, that these surveys should be completed.

Mr. COBB. Some time since, when the question of these appropriations was up, the gentleman from California seemed to think that $50,000 would be sufficient; and now he comes and asks you for $150,000 more.

I understand that Governor Stevens has made an exploration of the northern route, and made surveys, and has ascertained the practicability of that route. The practicability of a southern route is also established. If it is necessary to ascertain the practicability of the middle route, let us appropriate $50,000, or even $100,000.

Mr. McDougall. I suggested $50,000. I think it important to determine two points: one is Noble's Pass, and the other is in our coast range. I submitted the matter to the Secretary of War, whose business it is to understand this matter, and he thinks that, in order to carry on the surveys, $150,000 will be required. I suggested, when this subject was up before, the sum of $50,000, because I thought that would be sufficient.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to amend by making the words "survey" and "exploration" "surveys" and "explorations."

I do not wish to detain the committee; but every one will see that there are three surveys going on, with a view to a route for a railroad to the Pacific.

Mr. McDougall. I will accept the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have offered the amendment, and I propose to say a word or two upon the subject. I am not disposed to trouble the committee, and I am willing to enter into a bargain with the committee not to speak any more for the next ten days, but to proceed to vote upon the bills as they come up. But the Pacific railroad is a great national work, and there are three routes under survey and exploration. I am willing to make this appropriation, as it is recommended by the Secretary of War, and by those by whom the explorations are made, and who ought to be best informed upon the subject. I have conversed with Governor Stevens, who made one of the explorations. And I understand that this additional appropriation is necessary to carry on the surveys of the northern, the central, and the southern routes. Besides, my friend from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] is wrong in stating that an appropriation of $150,000 was made at the last Congress for these explorations. I think it was but $100,000. Although, as a member of this body, I am desirous of having one great thoroughfare to the Pacific, which will make quick time, yet I believe the opinion is fast gaining ground that we shall ultimately have three grand railroads to the Pacific ocean, in order to satisfy the demands of the travel and transportation of this great empire; and, sir, I, for one, am willing to make this little appropriation to carry on the explorations until we get all the information necessary to a correct understanding of the subject. I think, by making the appropriation, as recommended by the Secretary of War, and desired by the gentleman from California, and as imperiously demanded by the state of these surveys and explorations, we shall be performing a public duty, and I therefore hope the appropriation will be made.

Mr. McDougall. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to reduce the appropriation contained in the amendment to fifty cents.

At the last Congress, when those surveys and explorations were undertaken, we appropriated the sum of $150,000, with the assurance that that was ample to procure all the information that Government might need for the location of a route between here and the Pacific ocean. Well, sir, this $150,000 was expended, and during the present session we have appropriated $40,000 as a deficiency; and now it is proposed to make a further appropriation of $150,000 for additional surveys and explorations of this country.

Mr. McDougall. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the assurance was given that $150,000 would be sufficient to complete these surveys?

Mr. LETCHER. It was stated in the discussion upon this subject, at the last Congress, that that sum would be enough for the purpose. It was then represented that this survey was very important, and that this little sum of $150,000 was all that was needed for the purpose of getting all the information needed in regard to that country.

But it is said now that there is another large tract of country that must be examined and explored, and that another appropriation is needed for this purpose. Now, sir, I will venture to say, that in the exploration and examination of that whole country you can as well expend $5,000,000 just as wisely and properly as the $150,000 which it is now proposed to appropriate.

Sir, how long is this thing to go on? Is it never to stop? Sir, we have had no report from the parties who went out on this expedition last year. It may be that if the report of that exploring expedition was before the House, we should find that we have already all the information that is necessary; that we have a practical route—all that is required by the Government—for this road. It would be better, far better, that we should wait and ascertain the result of the surveys and examinations which we have already authorized and paid for, before we undertake to make provision to obtain information in reference to some other route. I do not understand that we are going to construct three or four roads; and if we do not intend to do this, what do we want with three or four routes? If there is one practicable route, that is all gentlemen need desire. I hope that before the House makes any further appropriation they will ascertain the result of the appropriations they have already made for the accomplishment of this object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will not prevail. The gentleman stated that it was understood at the last Congress, when the appropriation of $150,000 was made that that was all that would be required for these surveys and explorations. Sir, I did not so understand it. I did not vote with that expectation. I supposed that a like sum would again be required; and if it is necessary to accomplish that purpose I am as willing to vote for it as I was to vote for the original appropriation. I understand that the appropriation is needed for the surveys which have already been commenced, and which are incomplete.

Mr. Chairman, the advantages we shall derive from the information obtained through these surveys, as far as pertains to the railroad, will be very important. It will justify all the expenses of a practical and feasible route to the Pacific. But aside from that consideration, much valuable topographical, geographical, geological, and botanical information will be obtained. The information that will be obtained will compensate one hundred fold for the expenditure which will be incurred. I hope that the amendment will not prevail, and that, without further discussion, the vote will be taken, and the amendment of the gentleman from California adopted.

The question was taken on Mr. LETCHER's amendment; and it was disagreed to.

Mr. SOLLERS. I demand tellers on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. EWING and CURTIS were appointed.

The question was taken on Mr. McDougall's amendment, and it was adopted; the tellers having reported—ayes 89, noes 34.

Mr. RICE. I offer the following amendment:

For completing the military road from Mendota to the Big Sioux river, in Missouri, in accordance with the estimate made by the Secretary of War, $52,475 68, said money to be expended under the direction of the War Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. I make the question of order, that the amendment is not germane to this bill. These appropriations have been made heretofore in other bills, and not in the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Would not the same reason apply to the last amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire if this road has been the subject of previous appropriations by Congress?

Mr. RICE. It has.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the amendment is in order, upon the ground that appropriations have been made by Congress upon the same subject heretofore.

Mr. LETCHER. With great respect to the Chair, I appeal from that decision.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and the decision of the Chair was overruled, and the amendment decided to be out of order.

The following clause was then read:

"For fuel and quarters, and for mileage, or transportation for officers and enlisted soldiers of the Army serving in the Coast Survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, $10,000."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move to strike out that clause.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to amend the clause, before the question is taken on striking out, by adding the following proviso:

And provided that no mileage or transportation shall be allowed by this act, in any case, to officers, for themselves and their baggage, over and above the sum actually and necessarily paid therefor.

I will state to the committee, that there has already been an appropriation of $12,000 provided in this bill for officers' transportation. The committee also understand that there is, by law, an allowance made to officers of ten cents for each mile they travel. Under that provision it can readily be seen there is a very large degree of favoritism practiced; not that I charge anything specially at this time.

Mr. PECKHAM, (interrupting.) Will the Chair be kind enough to have the amendment read again?

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. PECKHAM. I submit that that amendment is not in order, and not germane to the provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is in order.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman from New York had been giving his attention to the subject, he would have seen that the amendment was in order. But I am now addressing myself to the Chair. The amendment which I have proposed is, it will be seen, a proper one. As I was going to remark when I was interrupted, the committee understands that there is a law allowing ten cents per mile to officers for mileage, transportation, &c. Under that clause, as is well known, there is a great deal of favoritism practiced. Not that I want to charge it upon anybody particularly, but I believe a great amount of favoritism has been practiced, because if an officer travel and receive ten cents a mile, and actually disburse but three cents, you can see there is a great advantage in his being sent to travel. I propose to correct this, and to provide by this amendment that the officer shall only receive that which he actually and necessarily expends. And that is just, as it seems to me. The question is therefore submitted to the intelligence of the committee, and to its justice, without further observation on my part in support of it.

Mr. STANTON. My proposition now pending is to strike out the whole section; and I desired, if the floor had been assigned to me, to make the same motion in relation to the preceding section. My object is pretty much the same as that of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] and he saves me the necessity of saying anything in support of that view of the subject. But I have another purpose to accomplish. I wish to bring to the attention of the House and the country the important fact, that there are over one hundred of the officers of the Army and Navy taken from their regular professional duties, and employed in superintending the construction and management of the light-houses, and engaged upon the Coast Survey—duties which are of a purely civil character, and which might be performed quite as well by citizens who do not hold commissions for life. That the country may know who these officers are thus engaged in civil duties, I will give their names in my printed remarks. Here is a letter from the Secretary of the Light-House Board, giving the names of the officers employed in that service:

THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Office Light-House Board, March 11, 1854.

SIR: In reply to your communication of the 9th instant, asking for a "list of the officers of the Army and Navy employed in the light-house establishment, giving names, rank, compensation, when appointed to such service, and under authority of what law," I have respectfully to report, that the following is a list of all officers of the Army and Navy who have been ordered by their respective Departments to perform service of any description on account of the light-house establishment:

Under the act of Congress approved August 31, 1832, section 8, chapter 112, the following officers are employed as members of the Light House Board, which was organized on the 9th of October, 1852.

Commodore William B. Shubrick, United States Navy;

Commander S. F. Dupont, United States Navy; Lieutenant Thornton A. Jenkins, United States Navy; General Joseph G. Totten, Chief United States Corps of Engineers; Colonel James Kearney, Corps of Topographical Engineers; Captain E. L. F. Hardcastle, Corps of Topographical Engineers.

Under the twelfth section of the above act, the following officers of the Army and Navy are employed as inspectors of the light-house districts, required by the act of Congress to be arranged:

1st district. Lieutenant W. B. Franklin, Corps of Topographical Engineers; appointed inspector December 21, 1852.

2d district. Lieutenant Samuel R. Knox, United States Navy; appointed inspector April 11, 1853.

3d district. Lieutenant A. L. Case, United States Navy; appointed inspector May 10, 1853.

4th district. Lieutenant James S. Biddle, United States Navy; appointed inspector January 10, 1854.

5th district. Lieutenant A. M. Pennock, United States Navy; appointed inspector December 14, 1852.

6th district. Captain D. P. Woodbury, United States Corps of Engineers; appointed inspector December 21, 1852.

7th district. Lieutenant G. L. Selden, United States Navy; appointed inspector May 16, 1853.

8th district. Captain D. Leadbetter, Corps of Engineers; appointed inspector December 21, 1852.

9th district. Lieutenant W. W. Stephens, Corps of Engineers; appointed inspector November 18, 1853.

10th district. Captain J. C. Woodruff, Corps of Topographical Engineers; appointed inspector December 21, 1852.

11th district. Captain L. Sitgreaves, Corps of Topographical Engineers; appointed inspector December 21, 1852.

12th district. Captain J. D. Webster, Corps of Topographical Engineers; appointed inspector January 24, 1854. (Not yet entered upon his duties.)

The following engineer officers of the Army are charged with the superintendence of construction and repairs of light-house works in the vicinity of their military stations, in addition to the appropriate duties of their corps under the War Department, in conformity to the ninth section of the act of Congress, approved March 3, 1851, chapter 38, in the following words: "And he is further enacted, That the President be, and he is hereby, required to cause to be detailed from the Engineer Corps of the Army, from time to time, such officers as may be necessary to superintend the construction and renovating of light-houses."

Major C. A. Ogden, Corps of Engineers, second district, Boston, April 9, 1853.

Major W. D. Fraser, Corps of Engineers, third district, New York, August 4, 1853.

Lieutenant G. G. Meade, Corps of Engineers, seventh district, Key West, March 16, 1853.

Under the above recited section, the following officers are charged with certain specific works, viz:

Major Hartman Bache, Corps of Topographical Engineers, charged with the superintendence of the construction of a light house in Chesapeake bay.

Captain Henry Brewerton, Corps of Engineers, charged with the erection of a small light on Fort Carroll, now in course of construction by him.

Captain J. F. Gilmer, Corps of Engineers, charged with the superintendence of the erection of a small light in Charleston harbor, near the military works under his charge.

Major J. G. Barnard, Corps of Engineers, charged with the placing and fitting of the illuminating apparatus in the light-house at Fort Point and Alcatraz Island, where this officer is charged with the erection of fortifications.

It would seem proper to add, in this connection, that General Totten and Colonel Kearney, members of the Light-House Board, and Captain Woodbury and Lieutenant Stephens, inspectors of the sixth and ninth light house districts, discharge the duties of the light-house establishment, in addition to their appropriate military duties.

Officers of the Army and Navy performing duty under the light house establishment, (by the seventeenth and twelfth sections of the act of Congress approved August 3, 1852, chapter 112,) are prohibited from receiving for such service any other pay or emoluments than those to which they are entitled by law for the performance of duty in the regular line of their profession.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THORNTON A. JENKINS,
Secretary Light-House Board.

Hon. P. G. WASHINGTON,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Washington.

It will be seen by these official statements, that on the light-house establishment there are twenty-five officers of the Army and Navy employed, while on the Coast Survey there are eighty-two, making in all one hundred and seven. Now, sir, these officers ought not to be so employed, and all laws which authorize it are wrong. The civilians employed on the same service receive no mileage such as is allowed to the military and naval officers; and while performing duties which are purely civil, they should not receive more pay than civilians.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to know, in connection with this subject, if the officers of the Army and Navy so employed are receiving pay for extra services, outside of their regular pay as officers of the Army and Navy?

Mr. STANTON. I am glad the gentleman has directed my attention to this point. Under several little amendments to Army and other bills, many officers employed in civil service are allowed nearly double their Army pay; and there is no one of them engaged in the civil service who does not find some advantage from it over his position in the line of his regular duties. If it were not so, you would not find them quartered on the civil service by hundreds. The members of the boards for rivers and harbors, canal around the Falls of the Ohio, for harbor works on the Atlantic coast, and, I believe, the Light-House Board, all get, under a construction of some provision of one of the laws, two dollars per day extra while sitting upon said boards. When making surveys for roads, by a standing regulation of the War Department, they get one dollar per day extra while in the field, as commutation for transportation. The assistant to the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, a military engineer, gets two dollars per day for "personal expenses."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. That view of the subject is a very forcible one, but I do not see how it bears upon the case in hand?

Mr. STANTON. Well, I will show my friend from Virginia. These officers of the Army and Navy all hold commissions, and are amply provided for by the laws relating to their departments. While in discharge of their rightful duties, every proper allowance is made them. They are not now in discharge of military and naval duties.

They are performing duties of civilians, and should fare as civilians. No other persons connected with the Coast Survey or light-house service but military and naval officers, get ten cents a mile for traveling, or commutation for fuel and quarters.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am sure the gentleman has not properly considered this matter. I understand him to say that those officers are provided for elsewhere. That is a mistake. They are not provided for in the Army bill, or anywhere else. This is the only provision made for them. A few years ago these officers were provided for in the civil and diplomatic bill; but the Committee of Ways and Means saw fit to take it out from that bill, and put it into the Army bill; and the appropriation which precedes the one under consideration, covering the same general expense, applies to the officers in the Army regularly, and the appropriation is not made to the officers who are spoken of here. And if the gentleman will examine the law creating the Light-House Board, he will see that the Secretary of War has no discretion. The law itself says that these Army officers shall constitute the Light-House Board, and the Secretary of War only complies with the law.

Mr. STANTON. And does the law say they shall have two dollars a day?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not know that they get any extra compensation. They are allowed mileage by law, and by the regulations of the War Department. We were bound to report an appropriation for it; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia prevails, that will become the law, and will control the action of the committee hereafter.

Mr. STANTON. Here is the act upon the subject, with the facts as they have occurred under it, communicated to the select committee by the War Department:

"For repairs and contingencies of harbors and rivers, and to meet charges for transportation of officers, and for fuel and quarters, the payment of which is no longer made by the quartermaster's department, and for extra allowance to meet extra expenses, under the special directions of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

Out of the above there has been allowed by the Secretary of War, and paid to officers constituting boards, as follows:

1st Board—For river and harbor improvements: Colonel James Kearney, Lieutenant Colonel S. H. Long, and Major H. Bache, Corps Topographical Engineers; field officers allowed two dollars per day, subaltern officers one dollar and fifty cents per day.

2d Board—For additional canal around the falls of the Ohio: Lieutenant Colonel S. B. Long, Brevet Lieutenant William Turnbull, and Charles B. Fish, Esq., Civil Engineers. The military officers allowed two dollars per day, and the civil eight dollars, and transportation. This board has ceased.

3d Board—For harbor works on the Atlantic coast: Lieutenant Colonel R. E. De Russy, Major J. L. Smith, and Major C. A. Ogden, Corps of Engineers. Allowed two dollars per day.

I presume, sir, it is by some such construction as is here put upon this law, that the Light-House Board, while sitting in this city, is enabled to get additional pay. One of the boards above alluded to sat more than six months, and received two dollars a day during the whole time, over and above their regular Army pay. If the construction is right, the law is wrong; and if the law was designed to increase their salaries, it should have been done openly, instead of covering up its purpose by appropriation for contingencies and incidental expenses.

I withdraw my amendment, as it was intended simply to get these facts before the country.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise for the purpose only of stating the question. The clause to which I seek to attach my amendment is this:

"For fuel and quarters, and for mileage or transportation for officers, and enlisted soldiers of the Army serving in the Coast Survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, $10,000."

Then comes in my amendment, and I suppose nobody will object to it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to move an amendment to the original clause, before the question is taken upon the amendment of the gentleman man from Virginia. I move to strike out the one hundred and thirty-ninth to the one hundred and forty-second line inclusive, as follows:

"For fuel and quarters, and for mileage or transportation for officers and enlisted soldiers of the Army serving in the Coast Survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, $10,000."

Mr. T. said: I make this motion for the purpose of giving the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means an opportunity of explaining the necessity for this appropriation. I desire that he shall give us some information upon this subject, for I confess that, after many years service in Congress, I am constrained to vote upon these vast appropriations without any explanation from any one, and with very little information from the report of the committee. One reason is, that it is impossible for members to examine with any minuteness the reports of the departments upon each appropriation. Here is a bill appropriating $8,000,000. In a single line there is an appropriation of over $600,000 for commutation of officers subsistence, which I do not understand. And here, in the item which I propose to strike out, is an appropriation of $10,000:

"For fuel and quarters, and for mileage or transportation for officers and enlisted soldiers of the Army serving in the Coast Survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department."

I do not understand that. Why are these cases no longer provided for in the quartermaster's department? These are officers outside the regular Army, I suppose. I take it for granted the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] is true, and that there are officers outside the regular Army who still receive the regular pay of officers of the regular Army of the United States. I say that if the abuses stated by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky here, in his place, do exist, it is a matter that demands reform at the hands of Congress. If these officers do receive their regular pay as officers of the Army, and two dollars per day in addition, because they are assigned to the Coast Survey, or because they are assigned to the Pacific railroad survey, or because they are assigned to the surveys of the northern lakes, I say it is an abuse that ought to be corrected.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. If the gentleman will allow me to correct him, I said that boards were selected out of these Army officers who received this additional compensation. The Light-House Board receive, and the Harbor Improvement Board receive additional pay of two dollars per day for each officer.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is that in addition to their regular pay?

Mr. STANTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then it is an abuse that ought to be corrected. Sir, the compensation of these Army officers is very large. The $8,000,000 appropriated in this bill would furnish an average compensation of $1,300 per year to all the officers and men in the present reduced state of the Army. The regular pay of a soldier in Mr. Monroe's time, I believe, was only about $400 per year, and how, I ask, is this large additional compensation to be accounted for? In my opinion, the committee who reported the bill ought to be prepared to explain it to us. When a gentleman of the experience and diligence of the gentleman from Kentucky gets up in his place and says that Army officers receive, in addition to their regular pay, a further compensation of two dollars per day; when provisions are placed in this bill for the payment of compensation which is no longer allowed by the quartermaster, I want to have the necessity of that appropriation explained, so that we may act understandingly. I ask my friend, the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, to explain the necessity of this item.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I thought I had explained that section a moment ago; I said then as I say now, that the gentleman from Kentucky is totally mistaken in the statement he has made, that these officers are provided for anywhere else than in this provision in the bill. They are men who have been detached from the Army proper, and when they were detached from the Army proper, and placed upon the Light-House Board, or upon the coast survey corps, they were no longer provided for by the Quartermaster's Department. And in relation to this matter, the appropriation will speak for itself. These appropriations which it is proposed to make here were deducted originally in the estimates from the general estimates for the Army. There is no such thing as these officers being paid twice. It is utterly incorrect.

Mr. STANTON. Does the gentleman mean to say the statement is incorrect so far as the Light-House Board are concerned?

Mr. HOUSTON. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio to turn his attention a moment to the law which creates the Light-House Board. Those who compose that board are required, under the express language of that law, to be either officers of the Army or Navy.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection to the Light-House Board being constituted of officers of the Army and Navy. I think that was one of the wisest things ever done by Congress. Now, will the gentleman tell me whether it be true or not that these officers of the Army and Navy get two dollars per day in addition to their regular pay?

Mr. HOUSTON. As I have already stated, I do not know whether that is true or not. I understand from a gentleman who is connected with those offices, serving in the coast survey office, that the assertion, so far as they are concerned, is untrue. But I propose to refer the gentleman to the law. It is in these words:

"Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Light House Board, immediately after being organized, to arrange the Atlantic, Gulf, Pacific, and Lake Coasts of the United States into light house districts, not exceeding twelve in number; and the President is hereby authorized and required to direct that an officer of the Army or Navy be assigned to each district, as a light house inspector, subject to, and under the orders, of the Light House Board, who shall receive for such service the same pay and emoluments that he would be entitled to by law for the performance of duty in the regular line of his profession, and no other, except the legal allowance per mile when traveling under orders connected with his duty."

Such is the case in reference to the officers serving in the coast survey. As to the other officers I do not know, although I hardly believe that the Secretary of War would be guilty of an abuse in allowing the officers, in the very face of the law, two dollars per day, when the legal allowance of mileage was not equal to that amount.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reference to that matter I only know what was stated by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. STANTON. I can prove what I have said. It cannot be denied.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have shown that the gentleman has mistaken in one of his points. I have not looked at the other. If what is stated be true, then the Secretary of War must be guilty of impropriety. If two dollars a day in addition be paid these officers, when their legal allowance for mileage does not reach that amount, then they are paid in opposition to the law. I want the committee to remember that this is the only appropriation for these officers. If you strike it out, then you deprive the Department of the power to pay that which the law says these officers shall receive. If they are allowed two dollars a day, and that is more than their legal traveling allowance, then there is impropriety on the part of the War Department. About that, however, I know nothing.

Mr. TAYLOR. With the consent of the committee I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I renew it. I simply wish to vindicate myself from the charge of misrepresentation made against me by the gentleman from Alabama. I am not in the habit of misrepresenting, if I know it, and I am too well acquainted with this subject to mistake the facts.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not charge the gentleman with misrepresentation. I said that he was in error.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. The proposition had been made and discussed pro and con. Now, when withdrawn, can it be renewed and again discussed? I am perfectly willing to hear the gentleman, but I want the question decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the question of order.

Mr. STANTON. That I may be in order then, I move the amendment, with the word "necessary" in lieu of "actual."

Mr. Chairman, I said that there were certain boards composed of military and naval officers, for purposes which I indicated, but did not say there was a board of such officers for the Coast Survey. Nor did I say that the officers serving upon the Coast Survey all receive two dollars per day in addition to their Army or Navy allowances. All I intended to say, or did say, was, that the officers forming these boards, by a construction of law which provided for appropriations for contingencies and extra expenses, not of the individuals of the board, but the board collectively, had their salaries increased two dollars per day, over and above all other legal allowances.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know if I understood the gentleman from Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman as saying that those officers get, in addition to their pay and regular allowances for travel, fuel, &c., two dollars a day.

Mr. STANTON. They do. Here is the provision of the law upon which the Secretary puts such a construction as to allow that sum, and I will read it to the House.

"For repairs and contingencies of harbors and rivers, and to meet charges for the transportation of officers, and for fuel and quarters, the payment of which is no longer made by the quartermaster's department, and for extra allowances to meet extra expenses under the special direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

The officers in each of the boards, viz: River and Harbor Board, for canal around the Falls of Ohio, and harbor works at the Atlantic coast, have been allowed by the Secretary of War, an addition to their salaries of two dollars per day to field officers, and one dollar and fifty cents to subalterns.

Mr. WADE. In the river and harbor bill, which has already passed this House, there are three distinct appropriations made, in which this same matter is included. In that bill I find the following:

"For the preservation of public property and the contingencies of western river improvements, for the accommodation of transportation, baggage, quarters, and fuel of officers, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, and for allowances to meet extra expenses under the special direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

There are two other clauses in the bill identical with this, only that one makes an appropriation of $15,000, and the other of $20,000 for the same purpose. I desire the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means to explain this matter; for it seems that there are appropriations in this river and harbor bill for transportation, baggage, &c., upon the western lake service, and upon the Atlantic service.

Mr. HOUSTON. They are provided for there for the reason that these officers are not provided for in the regular Army appropriation bill.

Mr. WADE. Do they not draw their regular pay?

Mr. HOUSTON. They draw their pay as regular Army officers, and this is the appropriation to meet it. There is no other appropriation to meet it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, then withdrew his amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. SMITH's amendment.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I move to strike out the word mileage in the amendment, for the purpose of being able to make some remarks on this point.

I desire to say that I regret the course which the discussion has taken. I have sat here for a number of days and heard a great deal said about the Army, about Army officers, and Army superintendents, and I have come to the conclusion that it must be painful for a man to hold a position in the Army. I can hardly reconcile it to my feelings that a gentleman can now hold an Army office at all, if they are to be treated as members of this committee desire to treat them; if they are to be restricted to the very smallest pittance. They must be always on duty, and ready to meet the enemy at a moment's notice, and yet they are not to be allowed sufficient to hold soul and body together. I can hardly see how, under these circumstances, men can hold office in the Army. Sir, this course of discussion is unjust to the Army. And I am surprised to see the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] with his extended knowledge of the country, and having spent a year or two—I do not know how long—on the Pacific, where he must have observed the condition of the officers employed in service on that coast, desiring now to strike off the little mileage allowance they enjoy, and saying that they shall not have more than they actually expend. Will the gentleman look at his own case, and apply his argument to himself? He travels a short distance here to Washington, and receives at the rate of eight dollars per twenty miles. He can travel here at a cost of five dollars, and yet he pockets with cheerfulness all the mileage allowed him; and I am inclined to think if it were ten times as much, he would as cheerfully pocket it. Let me put this case to gentlemen. The general in command of the forces will order an officer from New Orleans to New York, or from New York to New Orleans, subjecting him to all the perils of cholera, yellow fever, and other diseases. He is required to run all risks, passing through the varieties of climate, and subject to all diseases. If he fall sick by the way, the payment of his doctor's bill is of course provided for by the regulations. But he is required to undergo the fatigue and incur the visits incident to the travel; and yet you would deprive him of his ten cents a mile. It is an unreasonable proposition, and I am sorry to see us descend to such a question. Sir, I know Army officers serving in Oregon and California, discharging their duty at these places, whose pay does not subsist them. They must call on their friends or on their private resources, or they would starve. You see them dressed in coarse flannel shirts and roundabouts, which is the best suit of clothing they can afford to put on. Their pay does not enable them to dress better, and to subsist themselves.

And now, sir, it is proposed to deprive them of that pittance, and to say that they shall not have two dollars a day for extra duty. I do not know that they get it. If they do not get it, they ought to; and if the law does not provide it, it ought to.

I regret to find this crusade against our Army. We have in this country a regular Army, and it is necessary. Let it be kept up, and let the dignity of our Army be sustained. We have, in addition to that, a standing army composed of the whole people of this country; and whenever their services are necessary, they are ready to offer them. While you keep up the regular Army, you should provide for them as Army officers and as gentlemen should be provided for. Why observe economy in the pay of officers particularly? I hope the amendment will not be adopted; and I trust the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I must be permitted to say, that I am wholly surprised at the remarks of the gentleman from Oregon. I state this—and I stated it in my first remarks—that the proposition embodied in my amendment is designed to give the officers everywhere the expenses which they are actually put to, and thereby cut up a system of favoritism which is believed to prevail. Now, I put it to the committee, if there is favoritism, whether it ought not to be arrested?

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I beg to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman from Virginia makes a charge that there is favoritism in the Army, and that it has been practiced there. I would like to have him specify the instances.

Mr. SMITH. It is not necessary that I should do that. I assume that it does exist. If, under this system, an officer can travel for three cents a mile, and yet get ten cents a mile, it will result in favoritism. It is a charge of long standing. I know, and the gentleman knows, that in the country to which he refers, the amount allowed for mileage is not enough. In many instances in the State of California, when an officer is off upon duty, the allowance of mileage does not pay his expenses. If the gentleman from Oregon does not know that, I can appeal to the members from California upon this floor to substantiate what I say. The payment of ten cents a mile for mileage, then, in that State, will not pay an officer's way. I want the amendment which I have offered adopted, in order that we may pay to those officers what they actually expend. My amendment provides that every officer shall be paid what he necessarily and actually pays out. If there is cholera there, and an officer cannot travel the most direct route on that account, but has to go around, and thereby is compelled to pay more than he otherwise would be obliged to, he ought most certainly to be allowed the sum which he actually pays out.

I am perfectly satisfied of the value of this amendment. I ask, why should ten cents a mile be allowed to favorites, when it is not allowed to the great body of the Army—or rather, when the great body of the Army are not in a condition to avail themselves of it? Let this little picking be taken away, and let the officers have the allowance in another form—in an increase of pay. I am not willing that this opportunity for pickings should exist, except it be allowed equally to all, and it is with this view that I have offered the amendment, and without any idea of making war upon the Army, which I am anxious to maintain in its proper dignity and character; and for that reason I do not want to see officers running after pickings, in order that they may put a little pelf into their pockets. Let us have a system; let that system be effective; let it be adhered to; let it be carried out alike to all; let all have an equal share. At the same time, I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not charge these things upon any one. I am speaking of what we hear talked of every day, and I say the facts should be known.

Some twelve years ago, upon my motion, an order was made that there should be spread upon the Army Register the amount of compensation which every officer of the Army received from whatever source. It was done for the purpose of having it appear what they did receive. This information continued to be incorporated in the Register for some years, but it has since been dropped out; why, I cannot tell.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, I move, as a matter of form, to increase the appropriation provided for in the amendment moved by the gentleman from Kentucky, ten dollars.

Sir, I have but a few words to say, and if the committee will but hear me, I am quite willing the Chairman shall knock me down at the expiration of only four minutes. [Laughter.]

I have proposed this amendment so as to enable me to reply, as briefly as I can, to some remarks, some heresies, that have been put forth here within a few days past, upon the subject of the officers of the Army, that ought not to go unnoticed in this debate.

Sir, I desire to say to the committee that I have no connection and no particular personal relations with the Army whatever; but I have sat here, for nearly the whole week past, and listened to the discussion which has been carried on in this committee, in regard to the superintendency of the armories; and, as an impartial man, think the Army officers have had great injustice done them. Irregularities, and vague suggestions and remarks of individuals have been seized hold of, and pertinaciously insisted upon as a disparagement to a whole corps, when no person was justly responsible for them. And every opportunity has been taken to disparage honorable men, who, I am quite sure, sir, deserve better treatment at our hands. I do not desire to complain of the past, of what we have done, but it seems to me high time to interpose and arrest this tendency of things. Sir, these men receive very different treatment at our hands when we are at war, and the country is in actual danger; and, in my opinion, they deserve very different treatment at our hands now.

I have no time to speak of the general questions that have been under discussion in reference to the officers of the Army and Navy, but I must say a few words, however, in reference to the issue that has now been tendered by the honorable gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] upon the very item now under consideration. I submit to this committee, and to the gentleman himself, that the statements he has made here to-day upon this subject are entirely fallacious, and calculated most eminently, although not intended, to mislead and to prejudice our minds. He moves to strike out this appropriation, made upon regular estimates, "for fuel and quarters, and for mileage or transportation for officers and enlisted soldiers of the Army, serving on the coast survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department;" and in order to sustain himself in this motion, he tells us that these officers and enlisted men receive two dollars per day extra allowance, by reason of being employed in the coast survey service, and provided for in this manner. Such is the impression he leaves upon the minds of this committee. And to prove it, and make us vote with him, he reads from a work which he has in his hands, that certain boards of officers which he names, who, in acting as such boards, for directing the works of internal improvements, and perhaps the light-house system of the country, have been allowed two dollars per day by the Secretary of War, in addition to their regular compensation. Sir, in reference to that I know nothing. Whether the allowance by the gentleman's Secretary of War to these boards has been proper or improper, whether it has been authorized by law or not, I do not stop here to inquire. That is a question he may settle with his Secretary of War. But, sir, it is not a question between the gentleman and the officers of the Army provided for in this clause he proposes to strike out.

Why, sir, I ask, is this statement read here upon and against these officers of the Army? For what fair purpose can it be legitimately used here? None of these men provided for in this amendment belong to the board or boards about which the gentleman reads. It is wholly and utterly foreign to the matter about which we are legislating; but, sir, it seems to cast discredit upon honorable men, unjustly arraigned here, and not liable to the charge. I do not say the gentleman does it with any wrong or unfair intention; on the contrary, no doubt he believes he is correcting a public evil. Still, sir, it is no less cruel and improper for worthy officers, to whom the application is sought to be made. Sir, if there is impropriety in the extra allowance of the two dollars per day to the boards mentioned, let the gentleman settle that impropriety with the Secretary of War, who has done the business with those boards, and not charge it upon this class of officers, who have nothing whatever to do with those boards—who receive none of the money.

But, Mr. Chairman, I said injustice had been done the officers of the Army within a few days here. I am of that opinion. We ask of them, and have provided by law, that they shall give security for the public moneys for public buildings and public improvements which we intrust to their hands. Sir, you ask this of men who hold our commission, and whom we order, of right, to any service in this line, and which they cannot refuse without being liable to conviction by court-martial, and dismissal from the Army, and to be held in everlasting disgrace. It is no voluntary service sought by them; it is a disagreeable service forced upon them; it is not of their choice. And you insist upon this security, sir, from men who, in the Mexican war, disbursed over $60,000,000 without a dollar of defalcation—without one penny sticking to their fingers.

This demand is made, too, mostly of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, who are not unfrequently the sons of poor men who cannot furnish security. Sir, these officers have been the best and brightest scholars at West Point; and in consequence of their superior proficiency and good scholarship, owing to that perseverance which often belongs to humble conditions in life, they have received the preference upon graduating of appointments in the Topographical Corps. The greatest security, sir, which such men can give, is found in the fact that the law now provides, when they turn out defaulters, it is the duty of the President to supersede their commissions, and strike them from the rolls of the Army in disgrace. That, sir, has been a security that has never failed. Can gentlemen say as much of civilians and others, who have been charged with the disbursement of public moneys? I really wish they could, and say it truly.

Now, a word more. The gentleman from Kentucky, and the two gentlemen from Ohio, [Mr. WADE and Mr. TAYLOR,] all inquire, and very properly, why this appropriation for the pay of officers having in charge river and harbor improvements, and Coast Survey, and other works of similar character, is separated from the appropriations for the Army engaged in the regular line? Why, sir, my friend, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, explained that. These officers and men are detached for the performance of a particular service—a particular line of duty—and their pay is therefore put down, and provided for, in separate items, under the heads of the service for which they are detached, and to which they belong. Those serving regularly in the Army are estimated for, and appropriated for, under that head alone; and the estimates come from the Quartermaster General. No others are provided for there; whilst those performing other service under other heads, are estimated for by persons in charge of those heads or service, and we appropriate for them under those heads, and those only. This may be difficult of explanation, but I believe it easily understood, if the mind is brought to bear upon it. If gentlemen will look at the bill, this matter will need no further explanation. It says:

"For fuel and quarters, and for mileage or transportation for officers and enlisted soldiers of the Army serving in the Coast Survey, in cases no longer provided for by the quartermaster's department, $10,000."

If it had been provided for in the quartermaster's department, it would not have been here. They are detached from the regular line of service and placed here, and here we estimate and appropriate for them. I have done in reference to this matter.

Now, I desire to say to the committee that we have been laboring on this bill for three or four days. Great and important amendments have come and are still to come to us from the Senate to other bills which we have acted upon, and we shall want all the time left of the session for their discussion. There are at most but fourteen working days left of the session; and to avoid passing our appropriation bills by committees of conference, to which, for one, I will never consent, I hope we shall give the rest of our time to other work than damaging the officers of the Army. I suggest and hope we shall now soon bring this debate to a close, and go at once to voting on the bill.

Mr. McMULLIN. I deeply regret, Mr. Chairman, that invidious distinctions have crept into this House of Representatives. For the last two or three days such distinctions have been made in the discussion on this bill between citizens of a common country. It ought not to be so. I am the last man who would reflect on the character of our gallant and patriotic soldiery; the last man to do them the least injustice. While I say this, however, I am for holding each man to his proper and appropriate sphere. Let the military men attend to military matters, and the civilians to civil matters. I like to see members of the bar attending to the law; physicians to physic and their patients; the politician to politics, and the mechanic to his trade.

The proposition now before us for consideration is for an increase of the salaries of certain officers. I hold that we have the right to command the entire time and attention of officers of the Army and Navy. But while gentlemen urge the peculiar claims of these officers, why do they not propose an increase of the poor soldier's pay? He is the man who fights your battles.

My friend from New York [Mr. HAVEN] is mistaken. Propositions are, time and again, presented to us for compromise of the accounts of officers who seem to stand in default to the Government. Such a case was up the other day. I hope that I shall always be found acting liberally towards these officers who are thus placed, by misfortune or otherwise.

But I see, Mr. Chairman, that the military are making rapid strides in monopolizing positions which could be occupied by civilians and mechanics. We have heard much talk of standing armies. The policy of this Government ever has been to have its standing army of the people of the country; and I am opposed to building up any set of men, military or otherwise, calculated to make war on the free institutions of the country. I should like to see this Administration giving military appointments to the military, and civil appointments to the civilians. I think that the pay of the officers is now sufficiently high; but I am of opinion that my colleague's amendment will meet this case. Officers in California, where the expenses are higher than they are in the States, ought to have increased pay I admit. The amendment of my colleague will meet fully and fairly the justice of this case, and I hope it may be adopted.

Mr. HAVEN, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] by striking out the words "necessary and actual."

I do not think it is necessary in this debate to say one word further upon this subject; for the clear-minded gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] quite met the case that I wished to bring before the committee. But I am provoked to say one word here, in consequence of the remarks which have fallen from the two gentlemen from Virginia.

I do not, con amore, array myself against Virginia; but it so happens that upon the only occasions when I have intruded myself upon the attention of the House, I have been forced into opposition to the views of some of the gentlemen representing that State.

The argument made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] refutes itself. He admits that the mileage allowed to officers of the Army does not begin to meet the actual expenses which are incurred by those who are sent to California, Oregon, and the distant possessions of the country. Notwithstanding, no appropriations are made by Congress to supply the deficiency in the expenses of these Army officers, and they are impoverished in your distant territories, while their families are left by Congress to starve at home. No provision is made by Congress for these gentlemen, nor is any proposed to be made to supply these extra expenses. How is it possible for an economical officer of the Army to meet these expenses? The law fixes ten cents a mile, not eight dollars for twenty miles travel, as a commutation for traveling expenses. True, an officer of the Army may travel upon your railways and steamboats for three cents a mile; and an economical, prudent, and sagacious man will put the extra seven cents in his pocket, to meet the large expenses which he must incur when he is sent into your distant territories, where the Government makes no provision for his expenses, and where, perhaps, it costs him fifty to seventy-five cents a mile to reach his point of destination.

A MEMBER. And what must he eat?

Mr. STUART. He must eat acorns. They live like the wild Indians of the forest when they are among them. They live so, because this Government is too parsimonious to pay for the value of their services. There is a distinction between the civil and military men who are employed upon your public works; ay, there is a distinction—a most unjust and invidious distinction. A lieutenant in the Army is paid $1 50 a day. I ask the attention of gentleman of the committee to the fact that a subaltern in the Army is paid one dollar a day, and there is an allowance made here to cover commutation, fuel, quarters, of $1 50 a day. Granting that, and the pay of the subaltern is $2 50 a day, all told, what is the civilian who is employed in the same service paid? His pay is eight dollars per day. The subaltern gets one dollar per day, pay proper, and $1 50 per day commutation for fuel and quarters, and extra expenses. And the civilian gets $6 50 per day pay proper, and $1 50 per day commutation for the same expenses. That is the inequality and the injustice of the system.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: Few things have surprised me more than the springing up of this discussion. I submitted a proposition, I hope the committee will mark, a proposition to give officers of the Army when they travel the sum actually and necessarily expended by them, no matter where it is. In some portions of the Union the law allowing ten cents a mile to officers traveling is actually allowing a bonus to the officers selected for the purpose; while the law allowing the same remuneration in other parts of the Union does not permit the payment of the expenses actually incurred. In this state of things, then, the gentlemen are tendered a proposition which equalizes this thing, which gives to each officer the sum actually and necessarily expended by him; and they decry it. Well, sir, this being the proposition that I have submitted—one of equity and justice, it seemed to me—it ought not to have provoked the opposition of gentlemen here; but I have been unfortunate enough to provoke by the ire of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. STUART.] He is provoked at that simple proposition, equitable and just as it is. And that gentleman follows the lead of the Delegate from Oregon, [Mr. LANE,] and talks about the allowances for traveling made to members of Congress. Now, I beg to ask the gentleman from Michigan what amount of mileage he receives?

Mr. STUART. Eight dollars for every twenty miles.

Mr. SMITH. How much does he receive in the lump? That is what I want to know.

Mr. STUART. I receive just in the same proportion as the gentleman from Virginia does. I receive a great deal more than I deserve, and a great deal more than I am worth, and so, I think, does the gentleman from Virginia. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Now, I ask the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] how much he receives?

Mr. LANE. Does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] want to know that?

Mr. SMITH. Ay. The gentleman who taunts me with receiving mileage at the rate of eight dollars per twenty miles receives, I suppose, $4,000 for mileage?

Mr. LANE. Yes; all of that.

Mr. SMITH. Five thousand dollars?

Mr. LANE. Yes; all of it.

Mr. SMITH. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. STUART] receives $1,000 or $2,000, I suppose, to pay his traveling expenses from Michigan to Washington?

Mr. STUART. No, sir; not so much. I wish I did. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Well, now I say to these gentlemen who talk about mileage to members of Congress, that I am willing to concur with them in supporting a law for the repeal of the whole of this allowance.

Mr. LANE. I want to reply to the gentleman from Virginia, if he will allow me.

Mr. SMITH. I would cheerfully comply with the request of the gentleman from Oregon, if time allowed.

Mr. LANE. Then I say that the gentleman has no right to ask me a question without giving me a chance of replying.

Mr. SMITH. I put the question, and you might have answered it by saying so many thousands of dollars.

Mr. LANE. The gentleman should give me an opportunity of replying to his question, as I desire.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman from Oregon must know that five minutes is too short a time to admit of more than one speech being made in it. I cannot comply with the gentleman's request. It is not out of disrespect to the gentleman, but from necessity, that I decline to yield him the floor.

Mr. LANE. I will not answer a question, unless I am allowed to reply to it fully.

Mr. SMITH. You could have answered it in a shorter time than this discussion has consumed. Well, now, Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition which is impartial in its operation. But the gentlemen hinge an argument upon it as to the bad pay of the officers of the Army. I say to these gentlemen that I am willing to go with them in putting this thing upon a right and proper principle. This mileage allowance gives to officers in one portion of the country a handsome addition to their pay, while the poor soldier on the frontier, who has got the hard work to do, does not come in for a share of it.

Mr. STUART. They take their turns.

Mr. SMITH. I say they do not take their turns. That is the objection I have to it. When the actual sum necessarily expended is paid to the officer who travels, there will not be, perhaps, any anxiety to obtain orders for surveys and distant expeditions. I cannot understand why some of these gentlemen should receive less than fifty dollars a year for mileage, while so many others receive thousands of dollars. The whole question, then, comes to the proposition which I make

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STUART then withdrew his amendment to the amendment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, moved a pro forma amendment, and said: Mr. Chairman, when I made the motion to strike out the clause in reference to fuel, officers' quarters, &c., I did not expect to draw out so interesting a discussion as we have since had; but I now look upon it as a public service that I performed when I made the motion, and called upon the Committee of Ways and Means for explanations.

Now, sir, I desire to disclaim any opposition to the Army in the remarks which I make in regard to appropriations for the Army. I am friendly to the Army, and to the officers of the Army, many of whom I know personally, and know to be men eminent in the service, and distinguished by their deeds for their country, and they are worthy of the kindest consideration from the Congress of their country.

But, Mr. Chairman, when I hear it stated, as it has been by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] that abuses, such as he specifies, do exist in the Army, and when I hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] charging that favoritism does prevail in the Army, I am bound, by my sense of duty, to call upon the Committee of Ways and Means to explain some of these items.

Sir, this bill appropriates $8,000,000, and if we had not been engaged so much of the session, and consumed so much time, upon important national questions, I should have desired to call upon the Committee of Ways and Means to explain every item of the bill; and I believe we should be inclined to cut it down more largely if we understood it. I hope the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, has his amendment ready, and that when we get through the items of appropriation in this bill, he will offer the Senate bill reforming the Army, as an amendment or additional section, and I, for one, am ready to vote for it. I am ready to vote for a reform of the Army, to pay our soldiers better, and to put our whole military system upon a better footing than it has been for many long years. I am aware of the fact that you cannot get men to serve in your armies at seven dollars a month. They ought to be better paid, and I would reform the Army so that the pay should be more equal and just.

I wish it to be understood, by the committee and the country, that, in moving to strike out the item of $10,000, I wished to elicit the very information which has been given to us by the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] because, by voting for it without that explanation, after the declaration which was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] that the officers of the Army were receiving, in addition to their regular pay, two dollars a day, and large extra allowances, we should stand, in the estimation of the country, as giving countenance to this extra pay, a charge which I do not wish to subject myself to. At the same time, if the officers and men in the Army are not sufficiently well paid, no man would be more ready to make a reasonable increase of their pay; but I would, while I would increase the pay, increase the work also.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to occupy a little time in explaining the paragraph which was read by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] When I was upon the floor before, and he asked me in reference to that two dollars a day, I had not seen the book. It is a document which had not before been in my hands, and of course I could not explain it. But I have the book now, and I undertake to say to the committee that the gentleman has entirely mistaken the construction which the Secretary of War made, in allowing that which, he says, the law did not justify. I would like to have the gentleman answer me if he did not vote for the river and harbor bill of the last Congress?

Mr. STANTON. No, sir. I never voted for such a bill in my life.

Mr. HOUSTON. Whether he voted for it or not, Congress passed it, and in that appropriation bill there is an item introduced for the express purpose of allowing these two dollars a day; and I cannot see how it is to be brought up here as a charge against the Secretary of War that he has abused his power.

The clause to which I refer, in the river and harbor bill, is as follows:

"For repairs and contingencies of harbors and rivers, and to meet charges for transportation of officers, and for fuel and quarters, the payment of which is no longer made by the quartermaster's department, and for extra allowance to meet extra expenses, under the special direction of the Secretary of War, $10,000."

Now, sir, the Secretary of War has not exceeded the authority given him by law. You have made provision by law for these extra allowances. You not only make provision for travel, for commutation, for fuel, for quarters, but in addition to that, you made an extra allowance to meet the extra expenses of these very officers; so that the Secretary of War has administered the law according to the true sense and letter of the law itself.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow me a single word, I have here a letter from Lieutenant Kurtz, communicated to the Secretary of War, and by him communicated to the select committee of which I am a member, in which he says:

"The members of the Board of River and Harbor Improvements receive a per diem of two dollars when the board is in session. This board was constituted by order of September 5, 1852, of the Secretary of War, and was in session from November 24, 1852, to July 11, 1853."

Now, sir, according to this letter, this allowance was given to these officers during the session of the board. That board was constituted by the order of the Secretary of War alone; and I should like to know what extra expenses could be incurred by these officers while the board was in session? They are allowed by law for their fuel, for subsistence, for quarters, for transportation, and I should like to know what other expenses they could incur to make necessary an increase of salary, that they do not incur while on military duty?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not here to audit the accounts of these boards. But I am here to explain this provision in the bill, if I can do so. I said the Secretary of War had carried out the provisions of the law in making extra allowance to the officers of this river and harbor board. Here is the law which makes provision for extra allowances to meet the extra expenses of this very board. These officers are allowed two dollars and one dollar and a half per day, and no extra allowance is given to any other board. I understood the gentleman from Kentucky to say, when he was up before, that this extra allowance was given to the Light House Board.

Mr. STANTON. I did.

Mr. HOUSTON. Where is the evidence of it?

Mr. STANTON. Here in the book I hold in my hand.

Mr. HOUSTON. Here is the report of the Secretary of War in reference to this subject, in which he enumerates the three boards which receive the extra pay. The first board is for river and harbor improvements, for which field officers are allowed two dollars per day, and subaltern officers one dollar and fifty cents per day. The second board is for additional canal around the falls of the Ohio. The military officers are allowed two dollars per day, and the civil eight dollars, and transportation. This board has ceased. The third board is for harbor works on the Atlantic coast. The military officers are allowed two dollars per day. There is no Light-House Board in all these, and there are no other boards which receive extra compensation. The law I presented before, I presented as laying down the line of duty of the Secretary of War, in reference to these boards. Under that law he has constituted three boards to take charge of these river and harbor improvements. That is all he has done. The river and harbor bill, from which I read before, made that his duty; and I think the same provision is contained in the river and harbor bill which passed the House a few days since.

Mr. STANTON. If the gentleman will turn to page 119, he will see that officers of the Light-House Board, belonging to the engineer corps, are set down with others. Colonel Abert, after enumerating the officers connected with this Board, says:

"Under the law of August 30, 1852, a per diem of two dollars additional was paid to officers of the Board of Engineers, to meet extra expenses, under the special direction of the Secretary of War; but this was not considered additional pay."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAYLOR, by unanimous consent, withdrew his amendment.

The question recurring on Mr. SMITH's amendment, it was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am directed by the Committee of Ways and Means, to move the following amendment:

Add at the end of the bill:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That of the appropriation of $50,000 for continuing the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigation as may lead to determine the most practical plan for securing it from inundations, approved August 31, 1852, the sum of $5,000 may be applied, under the special direction of the Secretary of War, to the payment of any expenses connected with said survey and investigation incurred prior to the 1st day of July, 1852.

Mr. Chairman, there is a small indebtedness growing out of former appropriations to the object specified in the amendment; but the restriction of the bill of the last Congress prevents the payment of that debt. The amendment is to remove the restriction and pay the debt.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. McDUGALL. I move to amend by adding the following as an additional section:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the amount of expenses incurred by the State of California, in the suppression of Indian hostilities within the said State, prior to the 1st of January, Anno Domini, 1854, and that the amount of such expenses, when so ascertained, be paid into the treasury of the said State: Provided, That the sum so paid shall not exceed in amount the sum of $924,259 63; which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. Chairman, this proposition, in the form of a bill, was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with the instruction that it be moved as an amendment to the Army bill. I sought to obtain the floor when this bill was under general discussion, for the purpose of speaking to this particular matter. Opportunity was denied me, in consequence of a rule adopted, that all debate should be on the question pending. I have caused the report of the Committee on Military Affairs to be laid on the desk of each member, and I hope that the committee now understand the question. It is impossible for me to make an explanation of it in five minutes.

I will state that this appropriation is to pay the debt incurred by the State of California in maintaining her frontiers against Indian invasion. Owing to the peculiar condition of California, the Federal Government has not been able to maintain any considerable military force along that frontier. It is well understood that there are numerous powerful tribes of Indians inhabiting the borders of that State. They have been engaged in almost constant war upon our people, and the young State of California, without any money in the Treasury, and without any resources, has been compelled to perform the offices of the Federal Government, and maintain a series of wars which have involved her in a debt of $1,000,000. The State of California is now paying an annual interest upon that debt of $80,000—a debt incurred because the Federal Government was not able to discharge the first and highest obligation imposed upon her by the Federal Constitution—the obligation to defend the State against the hostile and savage tribes inhabiting its borders.

It will be perceived that this amendment makes no absolute appropriation, but provides simply that the State shall be paid the amount which the Secretary of War shall ascertain to be due. The State has actually paid the amount of nearly $1,000,000. There can be no question about the absolute obligation upon the part of the Federal Government to maintain the frontiers of California. Not having discharged her obligations, but having imposed them upon the State, there can be no question that the Federal Government is bound to reimburse to the State of California the expenses incurred by her. I call the attention of the committee to the fact, that in every instance where incursions have been made by hostile Indians, and the General Government has failed to furnish adequate protection to the frontiers, and the States have in consequence been compelled to call out their own militia, the Federal Government has reimbursed their expenses. She reimbursed to the State of Georgia the expenses incurred by her. In the case of Tennessee, Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, and Illinois, the expenses incurred by them in defending their frontiers against the Indians were reimbursed. It has been always determined by Congress that the Federal Government was bound to meet the expenses incurred by the States in defending their frontiers.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I am opposed to the amendment, and I ask for a vote upon it.

Mr. MACY. I move to amend the amendment so as to increase the appropriation five dollars.

Mr. McDUGALL. I am opposed to the amendment. The debt incurred by the State of California has not been improvidently incurred. I have before me a letter from the General commanding on the Pacific coast, in which he states that, owing to the temptations to desertion and the distance from the seat of Government at Washington, it is impossible to maintain, upon the part of the Government, a sufficient force to defend the frontiers.

Again: I wish to state to the committee that these accounts were audited and settled and paid according to the rules and regulations of the Army of the United States. I will read a short extract from the report of the State comptroller of California as to the manner in which the accounts were settled by that State. He says:

"A rigid and careful scrutiny has been exercised by the Board of Examiners, (consisting of the Comptroller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State,) in the auditing of war claims, and in the allowances made therefor. Full vouchers, satisfactory proofs, and evidence of the authenticity of each was required, and in the settlement the board, as required by law, endeavored to be guided 'by the rules and regulations of the United States Army,' precisely the mode and manner of such settlement."

Now, I will further call the attention of the committee to some facts having a bearing on the subject. There have been ten different wars with the Indian tribes of the State, and ten different expeditions sent against them. The amount called for by the State to reimburse what has been paid may be thought to be a very large amount. But gentlemen will remember that two small expeditions in Oregon have cost $380,000. We have appropriated at this present session of Congress $175,000 to pay for the cost of one expedition against the Rogue river Indians. We have also appropriated $175,000 to pay the expenses of the Cayuse war. If a series of wars in California, through a period of three years, has cost the government of that State nearly $1,000,000, the committee will remember that the Florida war cost the Government $40,000,000.

This war has been on our part economically conducted. We ask only that Congress will not insist on our discharging this debt; a debt upon which we are paying annually an interest of $80,000. The debt is not justly due from California. It is due from the Federal Government. It is justly due from the Federal Government, and we ask that it shall be paid, not as a matter of favor, but as a matter of right. If a State can have any right under the Constitution, we have a valid one in this claim, and I earnestly hope it may not be denied to us.

Mr. PARKER. I do not rise to oppose the proposition of the gentleman from California. I have no doubt, from the manner in which it has been presented, of the merits of the question. I have no doubt that the State of California has incurred the expenses in question for the purpose of protecting her frontier. For this expenditure she ought to be indemnified; and Congress ought to indemnify her at this session. There might be, I imagine, some question of order raised on the presentation of this amendment. But under the circumstances it may be let pass. If there are meritorious claims involved in the case, and no doubt there are, it is immaterial to me in what form they are presented. Congress ought to dispose of them without hesitation. If the gentleman from California will admit of the amendment which I am about to propose to his amendment, I shall go for it with great cheerfulness, and I think the House ought to adopt it with equal cheerfulness. The amendment I propose is this: Insert after the word "incurred" the words "and now actually paid."

Mr. McDUGALL. Certainly; I accept that amendment.

Mr. PARKER. With these words I think there can be no question but this amendment ought to pass. This Government is bound to protect not only the California frontier, but all the other frontiers of the Republic. If these expenses have been incurred by the State of California, and have been actually paid, it seems to me there can be no question whatever about our liability to reimburse them, and to reimburse them at once. But if the amount is to be left open to be determined hereafter, to be considered whenever it may please the State to pay this amount, God only knows where the end of it will be. But if we find that the accounts are now paid it seems to me that this amendment should be passed without any hesitation.

Mr. MACY, by unanimous consent, then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. ORR. I move to increase the appropriation one dollar, for the purpose of making a few remarks.

With the guards which the gentleman from California has thrown around the amendment which he has offered to the consideration of the committee, I shall vote for it. I think this sum should be paid to the State of California. The circumstances of the settlement of California were peculiar, and it was out of the question for the Government to think of extinguishing the Indian title to that country. When the annunciation went through the country that gold in immense quantities had been discovered there, a large number of emigrants immediately sought that region. They went and took possession of land belonging to the Indians throughout the whole length and breadth of California. The Indians were driven back, and they commenced war upon the settlers and citizens of California from one end of the State to the other. It was perfectly natural that they should have done so. The Government had but very few troops there, and of the few they had, a large portion deserted. It was impossible for the officers to keep the men in the service of the Government, and California was compelled to order out her own citizens to suppress the hostilities. These expenses were therefore incurred in California in making defenses which the Government ought to have made, and which she was doubly bound to make, for the reason that she had not extinguished the Indian title. She had not removed, as she was bound to do, the cause of the war.

The amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from California is sufficiently guarded; and if the State of California has audited the accounts, and paid $900,000, it is just, and fair, and right, that the General Government should reimburse this sum. The sum, it is true, looks to be large, and yet you know the exceeding high price of everything in California at that time. Now, to extinguish the Indian title to the territory situated in Georgia and Alabama, which belonged to the Cherokee Indians, the Government paid more than $10,000,000, while we have not paid one single dollar to extinguish the Indian title in the State of California. We could not have expected anything less than these disturbances; and when the expenses thereof have been devolved upon the State of California, it is right and just that we should compensate California for that outlay.

Mr. LETCHER. I merely rise to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina whether this account has been presented to the War Department, or to any other Department of the Government for investigation?

Mr. ORR. The amendment which the gentleman from California has framed, directs that the Secretary of War shall audit this account, and pay not exceeding $900,000, if the State of California has paid it.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand all that; but whenever a proposition of this sort is made, it seems to me that it ought to be presented to a Department, and the Department be required to furnish to the House such information as is in their possession, acquired either from the State of California, or from some other source.

Mr. ORR. The gentleman from Virginia will allow me to suggest that there is no information in any Department of this Government in relation to this matter which it could furnish. These transactions occurred in California, and the services were performed by State troops entirely, and not by United States troops; and information in relation thereto could not be procured at the War Department.

Mr. LETCHER. This is not the first case which has come before Congress for indemnity for expenses incurred in the defense of a State. But the other day we had an application under consideration, for reimbursements of a similar kind to the State of New York. We have had various applications since the Mexican war for reimbursements of expenses incurred by States in that war. Why has not this matter been presented by the Department? Why has it not been referred to a committee of this House for them to examine the facts, ascertain whether this money was due or not, and report to the House?

Mr. ORR. This amendment is a report of a committee of this House.

Mr. LETCHER. What committee?

Mr. ORR. The Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. McDUGALL. And I presented that report to the gentleman from Virginia this day.

Mr. LETCHER. Not in reference to this debt. Mr. McDUGALL. Yes, sir, in reference to this very debt.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman showed me a paper in reference to the civil debt of California, but I do not recollect any in reference to this. Now, sir, I do not like the way in which this matter comes before this committee. The members of the House have not seen any report upon this subject. We are to take it for granted that this money has been paid, and that it is due. We are to take it without explanation, and without investigation.

Mr. ORR. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia one question. I suppose the Secretary of War had ascertained that nine hundred and some odd thousand dollars had been paid by the State of California bona fide to the citizens of that State for the suppression of Indian hostilities. Would the gentleman say that we should not refund that money?

Mr. LETCHER. No, sir; I would not say any thing of the sort.

Mr. ORR. Now, let me make one other remark, and I think I can obviate the difficulty of the gentleman from Virginia in reference to this amendment. The amendment only provides that this money shall be paid when the Secretary of War shall have ascertained that it has been actually paid by the State of California.

Mr. LETCHER. But let me ask my friend from South Carolina how we are to know that the money has been paid in good faith by California? How are we to know that that State has not paid out nominally or really two, three, or four times as much as was necessary, and now comes here to have the whole amount paid back by the United States Government?

Mr. ORR. Does the gentleman suppose a sovereign State of this Confederacy would set to work in this manner to trump up claims against the Government for the benefit of her citizens?

Mr. LETCHER. I know that such intimations have been made with regard to Virginia.

Mr. ORR. But nobody would believe them, especially of Virginia.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, sir, I want the matter fairly understood; that is all.

Mr. ORR. I will withdraw my amendment. The question now being upon Mr. McDUGALL's amendment,

Mr. ORR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DICKINSON and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 28.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENTON. I offer the following amendment:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the city of St. Louis, the ground on which the St. Louis arsenal now stands, with the permanent and fixed improvements: Provided, The city shall first pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $250,000, which sum, when so paid, shall be immediately applicable, and hereby is appropriated, to the construction of another arsenal, and the removal thereto of the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools, now in the St. Louis arsenal: And provided also, That possession of the said arsenal and ground shall not be delivered to the said city until after the new arsenal is built, and the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools aforesaid removed thereto: And provided further, That the cession, when made, and possession thereof delivered, shall remain forever a public park.

If I can get the attention of the committee for three or four minutes, I wish to explain this amendment. In the first place, I have to say that I believe it differs from all the amendments heretofore offered; inasmuch as it makes no appropriation. The case, sir, is this. There was an arsenal built near St. Louis many years ago, when the country around it was desolate and deserted. There was also a magazine built there, but the progress of population required that it should be removed. The progress of population about the arsenal now requires that it should be removed also. Ten or twelve miles below the city, the Government own a tract of land where the barracks and magazine are situated. The proposal, then, is to transfer this arsenal, or rather to supersede it, by one built upon the barrack tract. This subject was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs at the commencement of the session. We sent it for consideration to the Secretary of War; and as his answer is very brief, I will read it. It is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, January 27, 1854.

SIR: I have considered the subject of the resolution left by you at this Department, directing an inquiry into the expediency of ceding to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose of a public park, the ground on which the United States arsenal now stands, and I herewith transmit a report from the Colonel of Ordnance on the subject.

I see no objection to the cession if time be allowed, and means be provided, for the construction of an arsenal on another site, and the removal thereto of the arms, munitions, machinery, tools, &c., now at St. Louis arsenal, for which purposes the sum of $250,000 is estimated to be required.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
JEFF. DAVIS, Secretary of War.
Hon. THOMAS H. BENTON, of the Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Accompanying the letter is one from the Ordnance Department, which goes more into the details upon which the Secretary comes to his conclusions. The ordnance officer says that the present arsenal cannot be broken up until another is provided. The present arsenal should not be vacated or superseded till the new one is built. The Ordnance Department could not possibly dispense with the present one till a new one is constructed. The letter goes on to say:

"On the other hand, there seems no doubt that since the original location of the arsenal, the extension of the city has brought the two into an inconvenient and disadvantageous proximity for both, and that the removal of the arsenal to a site further from the city is desirable. The erection of proper buildings on the new site, and the removal of the ordnance stores and supplies thither, would cost, it is estimated, $250,000. If means to this extent should be furnished either by the city of St. Louis, in consideration of the cession, or by an appropriation by Congress for the purpose, the erection of the buildings and the removal of the stores might follow as soon as practicable, and when that is done I know of no objection to the cession of the present arsenal to the city."

The conditions mentioned here have been rigorously provided for in the amendment which I have proposed. And I have to say that it is desirable, as we all know, that military establishments should be taken out of cities. Nothing is so inconvenient to a military establishment as the immediate proximity of a town. On the other hand, it is exceedingly desirable that the city of St. Louis should have some outlet—some breathing place. When that town was laid out, its destiny was not foreseen. It is now without parks, without public grounds, without a place for recreation, where the population of the place may go for health and amusement. And, since the lands in and about the city have become so valuable, they have been cut up into small parcels, so that it has now become impossible to get ground large enough for the purpose of a place of recreation for the inhabitants. The ground occupied by the arsenal is wanted for this purpose by the city; and, in this point of view, the Congress of the United States would find an inducement to go as far as possible in making this cession, even if it were sought gratuitously. But we ask nothing gratuitously. The land perhaps originally cost some twenty or thirty dollars per acre, and it is now valued at $6,000; and we would take it at that rate.

Mr. ROWE. How many acres are there in these grounds?

Mr. BENTON. There are 37 67-100 acres in it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I rise, sir, more for the purpose of obtaining information from the gentleman from Missouri, than to impart information to the committee.

This piece of property is one of the most desirable portions of land which I know of in the entire West. It may be that the sum of $250,000, proposed in the amendment is ample and sufficient; but, sir, I am inclined to doubt, from the fact of the vast and growing population of St. Louis, and from the very large prices which are asked for and obtained for real estate in that city, whether that sum is sufficient. I therefore desire to propound to the gentleman from Missouri one or two interrogatories. I desire to know whether the sum of $250,000 will place the Government in possession of a site and buildings for an arsenal in every respect equal to those which are now owned there by the Government? Secondly, I desire to know of the gentleman whether or not the Government could not dispose of its property at that point for a sum much greater than $250,000? If I can be satisfied upon those points, the probability is that I will give the amendment my vote. But my experience is, that whenever the Government enters into a transaction of this sort with individuals, cities, or corporations, the Government gets the worst of the bargain.

In this case I desire no advantage of the citizens of St. Louis, but, on the other hand, I am desirous to deal liberally with them, if the judgment of the Secretary of War, communicated to this House, is correct. But I desire to have the entire communication read to the committee. If, however, no injury is to arise to the Government, certainly I shall not oppose the amendment; but I desire to be fully informed before I vote.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. It is, that this whole proposition is new matter, and without any previous authority of law.

Mr. S. then read the amendment, as inserted above.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order, and entertains the amendment for this reason: It is a proposition to appropriate money for the purpose of erecting an arsenal, which has already been repaired and built by appropriations heretofore made by law.

Mr. LETCHER. I very respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The question being "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. ORR demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ORR and KERR appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 82, noes 35.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained, and the amendment decided to be in order.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Chairman, I will now answer the questions put by the gentleman from Virginia. The first is as to procuring ground for a site. In answer to that, I have to say that the United States now possess, as a free gift of the inhabitants, seventeen hundred acres of land about ten miles below St. Louis, on which are the Jefferson barracks and the powder magazine, the latter of which was removed from this place. They have, therefore, ample ground. The seventeen hundred acres is on the bank of the river, running up and down. So much for the new site.

As for this $250,000 being sufficient to build it, I refer to the letter of H. K. Craig, accompanying the letter from the Secretary of War. It contains all the material of the Secretary's conclusion. The opinion of the ordnance officer, as well as that of the Secretary of War, is, that $250,000 will be enough. When we come to compare it with the cost of the present building, we find that the latter has been constructed in the most permanent manner for $163,000. Then what is proposed to be paid is nearly $100,000 more than what the present building cost. I know that the present building is patch-work, and has been enlarged from year to year.

Mr. McMULLIN. There is an important interrogatory, to which I wish to direct the gentleman's attention, and that is in regard to the improving value of this property. Is $250,000 a sufficient consideration for the property?

Mr. BENTON. Here is the answer of the Colonel of Ordnance to that point:

"The site selected, and on which the arsenal now stands, contains 37 64 100 acres, and is estimated to be now worth at least $200,000, exclusive of the inclosing walls, interior fences, drains, culverts, and roads, which are valued at $30,000. The buildings which are constructed in the most permanent manner, are valued at $163,010. The arms and munitions of war of all kinds, together with the machinery, and tools in store and in use, are valued at $1,275,773. The proposed cession to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose stated in the resolution, will require the abandonment of the land, with its permanent and fixed improvements, and of the buildings, the value of which amounts to $393,010, and the removal of the rest of the public property."

"St. Louis arsenal is the only arsenal west of the Mississippi, (and excepting that at Pittsburg the only arsenal in the West,) where constructions and repairs of artillery, carriages, implements, arms, accoutrements and ammunition can be carried on to a large extent. It has now great facilities for doing such work, and nearly all the supplies for the West and Northwest are prepared there. It cannot be abandoned without very great injury to the public interest and service, until another and similar arsenal is constructed in that part of the country to supply its place, and the arms, munitions, and all the movable apparatus at the present arsenal are transferred thither. The cession to the city of St. Louis, until after this shall have been done, is, in my opinion, altogether inexpedient."

"On the other hand, there seems no doubt that since the original location of the arsenal, the extension of the city has brought the two into an inconvenient and disadvantageous proximity for both, and that the removal of the arsenal to a site further from the city is desirable. The erection of proper buildings on the new site, and the removal of the ordnance stores and supplies thither, would cost, it is estimated, $250,000. If means to this extent should be furnished, either by the city of St. Louis, in consideration of the cession, or by an appropriation by Congress for the purpose, the erection of the buildings and the removal of the stores might follow as soon as practicable; and when that is done, I know of no objection to the cession of the present arsenal to the city."

I have to say that the present arsenal is disadvantageous to the United States in two particulars. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LETCHER. I cannot see why there should be any difference between disposing of the arsenal at St. Louis, and disposing of the one at Wilmington, Delaware. When Congress were called upon at the last session to dispose of the arsenal in Wilmington, they required that the property should be advertised for sixty days, put up at public sale, and sold to the highest bidder. It was accordingly disposed of in that way. It is proposed now to give to the city of St. Louis, for the nominal sum of $250,000, land which I understand is intrinsically and actually worth to St. Louis at this time, if put into the market and sold to the highest bidder, $500,000. It is proposed to give them property actually worth $500,000 for half that sum. What authority has Congress to dispose of this property for so inadequate a price?

Mr. BENTON. What authority has the gentleman for saying that it is worth $500,000?

Mr. LETCHER. I have the authority of gentlemen from Missouri who so inform us, who fix its value at that sum.

Mr. BENTON. The Ordnance Office says a quarter of a million.

Mr. LETCHER. The distinguished gentleman, when called upon to say what it was worth, did not answer at all, except by reading the letter. I imagine this property is worth half a million. If this property is to be disposed of, why not let the Government dispose of it as it disposed of the public ground and arsenal in Wilmington, by putting it up at public auction, to be sold to the highest bidder? There are thirty-seven acres of ground there on which this arsenal is located. Now, what particular necessity exists for removing the arsenal from its present location? None at all that I know of. Here is a piece of ground which cannot be purchased at public auction for perhaps less than half a million or a million of dollars. Here is this arsenal located and built by the Government, and now it is proposed to us that we are to dispose of these grounds and buildings, and erect a new arsenal on another piece of ground belonging to the Government of the United States. Is there any guarantee that a new building could be constructed capable of accommodating this establishment at $250,000?

I imagine there is no such guarantee. So far as these expenditures for the erection of public buildings are concerned, we all know, from actual experiment, that it requires from two to five times as much now to accomplish a particular result in the construction of Government buildings as it did ten or twenty years ago. If the Government has no need of this land in the city of St. Louis, we should pass a law exactly the same in all respects as we passed in the case of Wilmington arsenal. The people of St. Louis occupy precisely the same position in this matter that the people of Wilmington did in that. We should pass a bill placing the property in the market, and after due notice, allowing it to be sold to the highest bidder. And then let the city of St. Louis take it at whatever is ascertained at public outcry to be its value.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri by adding thereto "150,000, making the sum to be paid $400,000. This, Mr. Chairman, is a very important question, and I beg the attention of the committee to the fact, that according to the exhibit of the Secretary of War, produced here to-day by the honorable gentleman from Missouri, this property is estimated as being worth $393,000 at least. Now, I beg particular attention to that fact. Sir, I think that estimate greatly below the real value. I should not be at all surprised, if the Government should choose to appoint a commission to go and dispose of the property at its real value, that the Government would receive from $500,000 to $1,000,000. According to the State computations, property in St. Louis is the most valuable property in the entire West. St. Louis is destined to become the London of America. You can hardly conceive the value of real estate there.

Mr. LETCHER. If my colleague will allow me, I would make a suggestion as to another similar instance to this, which occurred in the history of Congress. I refer him to the case of the city of Rome, in the State of New York, where an arsenal was located, and where the lands were sold in exactly the same way as this piece of ground in Wilmington, to the highest bidder.

Mr. McMULLIN. I thank my colleague for his suggestion and information. There was another instance of the same character which took place in Chicago. The Government there owned property which it came within the contemplation of the city of Chicago to procure; and it had to pay the highest price for it. So in these various cities alluded to we have evidence that the property of the United States should be so disposed of. I hold it to be the duty of Congress, in disposing of such property, to dispose of it on the best and most advantageous terms. I have no sort of objection to provide by law that the Secretary of War shall appoint a commissioner to go to St. Louis, and examine the property, and make a report on the meeting of this Congress on the first Monday in December next. Let justice, even-handed justice, be done as between the city of St. Louis and the Government of the country.

But, sir, according to the evidence which we have in this case, we are called upon to do what? To dispose of property which, at the lowest estimate, is worth $350,000. I put the question to every member of this committee, are you prepared to-day to sell $350,000 worth of property for $250,000? A gentleman near me says the property is worth $400,000. I take occasion to say again, that the value of this property is almost incalculable, and it cannot be worth much less than $500,000; and if it were worth $1,000,000, I should not be surprised. We should act in reference to this case as we would in a matter in which we were individually interested. Would we as individuals be prepared to make this sacrifice? I am anxious to see the citizens of St. Louis accommodated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia to increase the amount, whatever that increase may be. It is true that in the letter from the ordinance office, which has been read, the value of this ground and these buildings is stated to be $393,000. One hundred and sixty-three thousand dollars of that amount is made up in the value of the buildings, which, for the purposes of a public park, for which the property is desired by the citizens of St. Louis, would be of no value.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) The gentleman speaks of the uses to which this ground is to be applied. I ask the gentleman if we have the right to direct that the citizens of St. Louis shall appropriate this property for the purpose of a public park.

Mr. STANTON. We have no such power ordinarily; but when the city of St. Louis proposes to take the property upon that condition, I suppose it is perfectly in our power to annex that condition to the sale—and especially to a gift. It may be true that this land is worth $500,000. It may be true that it is worth $800,000. But it must be remembered that this is not a proposition to give this property to St. Louis for $250,000, to be sold out by it for town lots, and for the purpose of thereby putting two or three hundred thousand dollars into the Treasury of St. Louis. It is for the purpose of being used as a park.

Mr. LETCHER, (interrupting.) I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if put into a park, it would be worth anything?

Mr. STANTON. Whether it is worth anything or not, I presume the Government of the United States might rely upon the faith of the citizens of St. Louis to apply it to that purpose. And if the land is worth $500,000, the city of St. Louis propose to supply an amount sufficient to transfer this arsenal, and to rebuild it upon property already in the possession of the United States, and for which the Government has no other use. I do not consider that it is overstepping the bounds of propriety, or doing anything which is not just, in transferring this property to St. Louis. It is true, sir, as I said before, that the Government, by turning land speculator, and selling out this land in town lots, might get a little more than is here proposed to be given for it. But I, for one, am willing to forego that advantage, and give it to St. Louis.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania,) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House (No. 95) "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending 30th June, 1855," and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes before four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 19, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLIGER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

Bill for the relief of Charles Staples, of the State of Maine; and Joint resolution in relation to fixing the compensation of the employees in the legislative department of the Government, and to prohibit the usual extra compensation to such as receive the benefits hereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore then signed the above named bills.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of William Walker, for himself and the heirs of Henry E. Walker, praying that they may be authorized to locate lands granted to them by the fourteenth article of the treaty of Upper Sandusky, Ohio, dated March 17, 1842, entered into between the United States and the Wyandott tribe of Indians, or to be allowed a commutation in money for the said lands; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of route agents of the Post Office Department, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SUMNER. It proposes to require the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to ascertain the amount due and remaining unpaid to either of the two clerks who were employed in the office from April 1st, 1846, to July 18, 1849, on the business of reservations and grants under Indian treaties; to make their compensation equal to the sum appropriated therefor, as authorized by the act of May 9, 1836, "providing for the salaries of certain officers therein named, and for other purposes," and subsequent acts and joint resolutions extending its provisions; and to pay the amount so found to be due. The sum of $1,119 80 is proposed to be appropriated for that purpose.

The committee were discharged.

OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the additions allowed by the resolution of the 17th instant to the officers and others in the service of the Senate, for the fiscal year ending the 30th ultimo, be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

I have conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Finance, who says that it is desirable this resolution should pass, in order to simplify the accounts. The effect of it is simply to charge the contingent fund of the Senate with the sum probably of $1,000 for the additional compensation to those officers whose payment relates back to the commencement of the fiscal year. I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

TEXAS DEBT.

Mr. BRIGHT. I gave notice on Monday that I should ask, yesterday morning, for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Finance "to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850." I did not make the motion then, in consequence of other business intervening, but I move now to take up that bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill originally introduced by Mr. Thomson, of Kentucky, provided for the issue of $8,333,000 of three per cent. stock, redeemable at pleasure after twenty years from January 1, 1851; which was to be distributed amongst the parties holding evidences of the debt of the late Republic of Texas, for the payment of the interest or principle of which the revenues on imports were either specially or generally pledged. The parties before receiving the stock were to file in the Treasury Department a full discharge of any alleged or actual claim against the United States on account of this portion of the Texas debt. It also provided that in estimating the amount of such debts held against Texas, interest should be included up to January 1, 1851, at the rate specified in the certificates or other evidences of debt issued by Texas.

The Committee on Finance, to whom the bill was referred, reported it back on the 15th of June, 1854, with a substitute proposing to distribute $6,500,000 in cash, pro rata, among the holders of such bonds or other evidences of debt of the late Texan Republic, as were reported to be within the provisions of the act of Congress, of September 9, 1850, by the late Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to the President of the United States, approved by him on the 13th of September, 1851. It also provided that the creditors should release their claims, and that the Texas Legislature should release the United States from all liability on account of the $5,000,000 in stock, reserved under the provisions of the act of September 9, 1850; and that if Texas should not, before January 1, 1855, either release the United States, or procure from the creditors releases of all claim by them against the United States, interest should from that time cease upon the reserved $5,000,000.

On the 21st of June the bill was recommitted to the committee, who, on the 1st of July reported it with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert a substitute.

The bill was read by the Secretary.

Mr. BRIGHT. As time is very valuable to the Senate, I should be glad if Senators would give their attention to what the Secretary is about to read. That portion which he has just read the committee recommend to strike out, and it is the substitute which he is now about to read on which the Senate is called to act. I hope, therefore, Senators will give their attention to it so that it may be understood.

The substitute was read, as follows:

That in lieu of the sum of $5,000,000, payable to the State of Texas in five per cent. stock of the United States, by the act entitled "An act proposing to the State of Texas the establishment of her northern and western boundaries, the relinquishment by the said State of all territory claimed by her exterior to said boundaries, and of all her claims upon the United States, and to establish a territorial government for New Mexico," passed September 9, 1850, the issuing of which stock was restricted by the first proviso, to the fifth proposition contained in the first section of said act, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to the creditors of the late Republic of Texas, who hold such bonds or other evidences of debt for which the revenues of that Republic were pledged, as were reported to be within the provisions of the said act of September 9th, 1850, by the report of the late Secretary of the Treasury to the President of the United States, and approved by him on the 13th day of September, 1851, or which come within the provisions of said act, according to the opinion upon the Texas compact of the present Attorney General of the United States, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, under date of September 26, 1853, the sum of $6,500,000, to be apportioned among the said holders, pro rata.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the State of Texas may have paid any portion of the debt described in this act, the said Secretary shall refund to the proper officer of said State the amount actually so paid by the State upon the presentation at the Treasury Department of the evidences of said debt, on which the said State may have made such payment: Provided, The said sum shall not exceed the proportion which would have been allowed to the creditor or creditors, if such payment on said evidences of debt had not been made by the State of Texas, and where any original certificates or other evidences of debt have been surrendered to the authority of the State of Texas, such new certificates shall be received as evidences of the original amount of the claim.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That no payment shall be made under this act to any holder of said securities, or evidences of debt, unless the said holder shall first execute to the United States a receipt for the said payment, in which said holder shall forever release all claim against the United States for or on account of the said securities or evidences of debt, and shall also indorse upon said security or evidence of debt, a credit for the amount so received by said holder, in such form as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and the said certificates, or other evidences of debt, shall then be deposited with the Treasury Department for the benefit of those whom it may concern, until otherwise directed by law.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That before payment of the moneys aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury shall give notice, by public advertisement, for the space of ninety days, of the time at which said payment will be made, and no payment shall be made on any bond, certificate, or evidence of debt, which shall not, thirty days before the time limited by said notice, be presented at the Treasury Department.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $8,500,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That this act shall not take effect until it shall be assented to by an act of the Legislature of the State of Texas, and a copy of the act of said State, duly authenticated, deposited in the Treasury Department at Washington.

The pending question was on this amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, this subject has been so long before the Senate, that I should consider it a waste of time this morning to go into the general arguments connected with the question. I deem it proper, however, to state the basis upon which the committee have acted in making this recommendation. The bill upon its face would indicate that it is an appropriation out of the Treasury for the purpose of paying this debt. Such is not the fact.

The amount proposed to be paid by the bill, as it now stands, was appropriated by one of what are known as the compromise measures of 1850. In the act of 1850, defining and settling a boundary between Texas and the United States, the sum of $10,000,000 was appropriated, $5,000,000 of which was reserved for the purpose of relieving the United States from any liability that might result in consequence of the debt of Texas, for which her import duties had been previously pledged.

The five millions reserved is in the shape of stock—five per cent. stock—which is now worth in the market, with interest and premium, six and a half millions of dollars. The amount proposed to be appropriated by the bill is just the amount which will be due at the expiration of the time when this stock matures. Hence, the only point presented for the consideration of the Senate is, whether, for the purpose of settling this vexed question, which has been before the Senate for years past, and will be for years to come, unless settled, you anticipate the balance of the time this debt has to run; that is to say, pay the interest now, instead of at the end of the time.

Mr. SHIELDS. If I understand the subject aright, the Government owes $5,000,000, and the interest which is to accrue upon the $5,000,000. This bill contemplates giving the $5,000,000 and the supposed premium upon the stock, and the interest upon the debt and the premium together.

Mr. BRIGHT. The bill cancels the obligation of the United States to issue the stock. That stock is now worth in the market a premium of fourteen per cent. The $5,000,000, together with interest and premium, on the 1st of January last, would have amounted to $6,500,000 if the stock were issued; but this bill cancels the obligation of the United States to issue the stock, and requires the payment in money. The stock matures in a little over nine years from this time. Five years of the time, in round numbers, has expired.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the honorable Senator what the amount of the original debt, which is $5,000,000, and the interest accruing upon the $5,000,000, will be at the expiration of that time?

Mr. BRIGHT. Just what is appropriated in the bill. The bill, as it now stands, proposes to appropriate at this time the amount of the debt for which the United States are liable, $5,000,000, and the interest on that at the end of fourteen years. That is all it proposes. It is proposed further, that before this bill can take effect, the assent of Texas shall be obtained, and that no part of the money shall be paid until the creditors of Texas have filed a full and final release to the United States. The committee, after a very thorough examination of the case, have come to the conclusion that this is a fair and just settlement between all the parties. We are willing to refer it to Texas for her assent. If she refuses to give that assent, it will then be an open question, and will remain here for further agitation. If she accepts the offer, it will end the question. If any gentleman objects to this, I hope he will propose a substitute that will be more fair, equitable, and just.

Mr. CHASE. If I understand this proposition it is to pay now, in lieu of the five per cent. bonds which were issued, I think, for fourteen years, the sum of $8,500,000. Those bonds were issued in 1850. There is then now due four years' interest upon these bonds, or twenty per cent., which would make the exact amount at the end of four years, $6,000,000. The honorable Senator from Indiana states that the premium which this stock now commands in the market would, added to the interest, make altogether the sum of $6,500,000. The bill proposes to pay $8,500,000. Taking the statement exactly as it is, then, the proposition is to pay $2,000,000, for which there is no obligation on the part of the United States existing in contract. That is the simple proposition. It is to pay $2,000,000 for the sake of getting rid of a vexed question. For one, sir, I am not prepared to vote in favor of that payment.

It has been stated repeatedly upon this floor in the course of the discussions of this winter and past winters, and I think stated by the honorable Senator from Texas, [Mr. Rusk,] that there was no obligation whatever upon the part of the United States to pay any proportion of the debt of Texas. That was my opinion at the commencement of the discussion, and it remains unchanged to day.

Mr. RUSK. The honorable Senator has mistaken me. He puts me on the opposite side from that which I occupy. I have said from the beginning, (I have omitted no occasions, when it could be properly said, and frequently when it could not be properly said,) that the United States were bound in conscience and equity to pay more than one half of the debt of Texas, in consequence of the violation by this Government of her treaty stipulations, in permitting Indians to war upon us continually.

Mr. CHASE. Then I misapprehend the position of the honorable Senator in regard to the obligations of the United States to Texas; but I think I do not misunderstand his opinions in regard to the ground of this obligation. The Senator now states that his ground of obligation is, that the United States have failed to fulfil their obligations in respect to the Indians, and that damages sustained by the State of Texas, in consequence of Indian incursions, have created a claim upon the Treasury of the United States for a very large amount.

But I will ask the honorable Senator whether he or his colleague has ever asserted on this floor that the United States were bound to pay any part of the debts of Texas, upon the ground that they were debts secured by the customs revenue of Texas?

Mr. RUSK. I have not.

Mr. CHASE. The honorable Senator says he has not, and that was the point. The ground upon which this debt was provided for, in the year 1850, was, that the United States were liable to pay the debts of Texas, because by annexation the United States had become possessed of the revenue of Texas, out of which those debts would otherwise have been paid.

Everybody knows, Mr. President, that the United States, in 1845, entered into a solemn compact with Texas, by which it was expressly stipulated that the vast area of Texas, her vast public domain, should be reserved intact to that State, and that the State itself should pay her entire debt, and that that debt should in no event become a charge upon the Treasury of the United States. The honorable Senator from Texas did nothing more than was to be expected from his known candor and fairness, when he repudiated all claim upon the United States on the ground of any obligation to discharge the debts of Texas because the United States had become possessed of her revenues.

I do not propose to go into that matter now. It was settled in 1850, so far as the Congress of that day proposed to settle it. It was settled against my vote; but at that time Congress did agree to assume, in behalf of the United States, $5,000,000 of the debts of Texas.

Now, sir, we are bound to pay that money. It is a debt honestly due, and it amounts now to $6,000,000, and I am ready at any time to vote for an appropriation of that sum to be paid to the creditors of Texas, or to the State of Texas herself, as the creditors and Texas shall arrange. But not believing that there was any original just ground of claim, and not believing that there is now any just ground of claim, I am unwilling to pay the sum of $2,000,000 to the creditors of Texas, when the sole ground urged is not any compact, not any obligation of public duty, but simply to get rid of vexation. If that is a ground of claim, although your Treasury is very full now, it certainly would be empty to-morrow. I thus have stated very briefly the grounds on which I am compelled to vote against this bill; and having stated my views I shall not prolong the discussion.

Mr. TOUCEY. I do not admit the liability of this Government at all in this case. We have, however, a fund in our hands which is to assume the form of a debt, paying interest at five per cent., at a future day, and the premiums on the bonds at this time, as I understand, would be some fourteen or fifteen per cent.

Now, sir, we have this fund, and we have this interest to pay. I shall give my vote in favor of the bill recommended by the committee, on the ground that we pay what we are now willing to pay to buy in any debt or stock, and make a further concession by way of compromise. The amount is not very large, and if we can dispose of this whole subject by making a moderate concession and get rid of it, in conformity with the recommendation of the committee, I acquiesce in it. But in doing so, I cannot recognize the liability of this Government for the debt of Texas. I rise not to discuss the question, but barely to express the ground on which I shall give my vote.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not my purpose to make a speech on this question, but I merely wish to state my views in regard to it. I cannot vote for this bill. I consider it as assuming, in part at least, a debt of Texas which we do not owe. I am willing to carry out the obligation of what is called the boundary act. I am willing to pay over the five millions with interest in any manner that may be designated by the State of Texas and the creditors. I believe, sir, I would go further. I would pay five millions of stock and the premium. I am willing to pay what we owe according to the statement of any fair account, but I am not willing to pay one cent beyond that; and, therefore, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. There is an amendment necessary to come in at the end of the first section.

Mr. DIXON. I desire to know of the Senator from Indiana, if this bill proposes to pay anything but principal and interest?

Mr. BRIGHT. It proposes, as I stated before, to anticipate the interest for the residue of the term. It proposes to pay just what the bonds will amount to at the expiration of the time for which they were issued.

I move to amend, by adding at the end of the first section, the words:

Provided, That the interest on the debt embraced in this act shall be calculated and regulated by the existing laws of the State of Texas.

That was an omission in the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not understand that. The interest on what debt?

Mr. BRIGHT. Upon the debt of Texas. Texas has passed an act whereby the interest on such debt ceased. The object is to make the bill conformable to her legislation, and as far as possible to make it acceptable to her when her Legislature shall come to declare its assent or dissent.

Mr. PEARCE. I apprehend that will make very little difference. The money appropriated by this bill is not sufficient to pay all the claims of the creditors. It proposes to distribute the amount pro rata, and there will not be more than enough money, indeed there will not be money enough, to pay the whole of these debts, and the interest upon them to the time when, by the legislation of the State of Texas, the interest ceases; so that it will really make no difference. In regard to the bill itself, I am so situated on the subject, that it does not become me to detain the Senate by any long discussion at present. I however, beg leave to say a very few words.

The obligation of the Government of the United States, under the act of 1850, is to the State of Texas, and not to its creditors. That is certain. It is an obligation to issue to the State of Texas $5,000,000 in bonds, taking fourteen years to run, and paying five per cent. interest; but this issue is not to be made, according to the act of 1850, until all the creditors of Texas, to whom their duties or customs were pledged for the security of the bonds or other evidence of debts, shall have released any claim which they may have against the Government of the United States, and filed such releases at the Treasury. That is the provision of the act of 1850. It was intended to compel an arrangement between the State of Texas and her creditors. It has failed in its effect. No arrangement has been made. Texas has not paid these creditors her debts; and, except as to a very small portion of them, has paid none of them. The releases have not been filed at the Treasury; and the bonds cannot be issued until the releases of all the claims are filed.

That being the condition of things, it is evident that no settlement of the matter between the creditors of Texas and the State of Texas, and the United States, as against whom these creditors also claim that they have a demand, can be made without further legislation; and I do not see how it is possible for us to adopt any further legislation except by the assent of Texas, because $5,000,000 of the stock proposed to be issued by the act of 1850 were to be issued to her, and not to her creditors.

In the mean time the creditors are suffering. The delay in effecting a settlement between them and Texas is ruining them. Many of them are our own citizens, and they think—and not without reason—that besides the claim which they have upon Texas, they have a claim upon the Government of the United States. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Chase] thinks that they have no claim because we appropriated the funds pledged by the State of Texas to the liquidation of these debts.

There are others who think they have a claim. What the precise extent of it is, whether it is perfectly right, or whether it is a claim for a perfect and complete indemnity from the United States, it is not necessary for me to argue. They believe they have a claim, and they have under the laws of nations, I think, good authority for asserting that they have such a claim. But I do not propose—the bill does not propose—to pay the creditors in full. It proposes an arrangement which may be considered a release. Undoubtedly the bill proposes to appropriate a larger sum of money than is now due upon these bonds, even if you include the premium which has been mentioned in the argument. The amount to be given, as stated by the Senator from Indiana, is the amount of the $5,000,000 bonds with interest on them, calculated up to the time of their maturity, and, therefore, it is manifest if we adopt this bill, we shall be giving the creditors of Texas a sum between $2,000,000 and $1,700,000 more than is now due upon the bonds.

The only question, therefore, is, as to these two millions. Will the United States give the two millions beyond what they now actually owe to the State of Texas, in order to settle this vexed question, in order to relieve ourselves of the perpetual demands of the creditors of Texas, for ample and full indemnity, upon the Treasury of the United States, and in order to relieve them from the consequences of the delay which is so ruinous to them?

I think we have often made appropriations upon grounds vastly weaker than those on which this bill is urged. For myself, I shall not hesitate to give it my vote, not upon the ground that we are under strict legal obligation to pay this money, but because we are under liability to Texas to pay her $5,000,000 with interest upon it, which in about ten years would amount to the precise sum mentioned in the bill, and because the excess over what we now undisputably owe is, I think, a small consideration to pay for the settlement of a question likely to harass us so long, and which, in all probability, at some day, if not now, will be acknowledged. And it should also be done for the relief of the individual creditors, whose safety from ruin depends upon the action we take on this bill. If we do not pass it, or some other bill like it, the question will remain unsettled until the expiration of the fourteen years, the time for which these bonds were considered as issued.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the honorable Senator sits down I desire to ask him if he has calculated what the debt, and interest, and premium, up to this time, would be?

Mr. PEARCE. The debt and the interest upon it, up to the 1st of January next, will be $6,000,000. As to the premium which the Secretary of the Treasury will not pay on these bonds issued and redeemable by him according to the practice pursued, if, according to the statement of the honorable Senator from Indiana, it be fourteen per cent., that would be $700,000 more; that would be $6,700,000. So that the Senate are to consider whether they will advance, as a compromise of this disputed question, the sum of $2,000,000 over and above what we now actually owe. I think we should be cheaply rid of the question by passing the bill to rescue the creditors from ruin, and satisfy the State of Texas.

Mr. WALKER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, I think, does not alter the question presented by the bill, so far as we should view it in the relations of the United States Government to it. I wish to understand it, his matter, and for that purpose shall state what my present understanding is, so that if I am wrong I may be corrected. If I understand it, the Government of the United States owes the State of Texas $5,000,000 under the compromise act, as it is called, of 1850. Upon these $5,000,000, under that act, interest has run which will make it $6,000,000 on the first of January next. This sum is taken, and the interest is calculated upon it for nine or ten years—which?

Mr. BRIGHT. For nine years.

Mr. WALKER. Then the $6,000,000 is taken, and nine years' interest calculated upon it, and added to the $6,000,000, and that is made the aggregate which, in this bill, we are to appropriate for the benefit of the creditors of Texas. If I am correct in that, I should like to hear upon what principle we are to make this advance from $5,000,000 to $8,500,000. So far as I have heard any answer to it, it is given by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. PEARCE,] and that is, that we should pay it by way of compromise. I should like to know if we are in any difficulty with the State of Texas which is forcing us to a compromise? I do not understand the State as raising any serious question with the Government as to the liability of the Government; but if she does raise it—

Mr. PEARCE. If the Senator will allow me, I did not state that it was a controversy between the State of Texas and the United States as to any amount of money. I stated the claim of Texas, as to these $5,000,000 of bonds, when the releases should be made. The creditors themselves allege that they have a claim against the United States, and many persons think that claim well founded; and it was as a compromise of that claim that I spoke of it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will state to the Senator that the answer to his position is to be found in the fact that the debt of Texas, at this time, amounts to about $13,000,000, say thirteen in round numbers. Her creditors have sent memorial after memorial here for the last five years, alleging that the United States is bound for the payment of every dollar of that debt, on the ground that Texas was annexed to the United States under circumstances which took from her all means of paying the debt, and necessarily threw it as a charge upon the United States. That position is denied by many Senators, and by many others admitted. I am one among the latter, and I am not alone in it. Now, for the purpose of effecting a compromise between these parties, and between the creditors of Texas and the General Government, we say to them, we will pay you the $5,000,000 stipulated under the act of 1850, now; instead of waiting nine years, provided Texas will assent to the arrangement. Who doubts that if this proposition fails another session will find us legislating again upon this subject? Who doubts that the creditors will be found appealing to us for payment of the entire debt, and so will they continue until the time shall have expired for the maturity of the stock stipulated to be issued under the "act" of 1850. This is, in short, another, and it is to be hoped a full and final, compromise of this vexatious and embarrassing subject, and as there is a probability of its acceptance by the State of Texas, let us close it at once and forever, justice to our own citizens and the public interests, alike prompt this course.

Mr. WALKER. The controversy, then, it seems, is not as between Texas and the General Government, but between the creditors of Texas and the General Government; they alleging, on their part, that the Government of the United States is liable for the whole amount of the Texas debt. That is one question. The question before the Senate is, What have we agreed to do? Have we ever assumed the debt of Texas? Not at all; we have not assumed that debt. We stipulated by the act of 1850 to pay to Texas $10,000,000. Five millions of that ten were reserved in the hands of the Government to meet contingencies contemplated by the act. Now, it is proposed that we shall compromise, in consequence of the claims set up by the creditors of Texas, and pay $3,500,000 beyond that sum. It is true, that if the debt should now be paid—$5,000,000, with interest upon it up to the 1st of January next—it would amount to $6,000,000. That the Government is bound for; but it has never assumed the debt of Texas. She promised, by the compromise act of 1850, to pay $5,000,000 in a given time, with interest upon it. This is, then, a proposition which, in its equivalents, asks the Government to increase the amount which she has assumed, and to pay to the creditors of Texas $3,500,000 beyond it. For one, I say, with the Senator from Virginia, I cannot vote for it. I am willing to vote now upon any terms that may be deemed just to the creditors of Texas, and in which the State of Texas shall acquiesce, every dollar that was promised by the act of 1850. They may fix their own terms, but when they fix terms which do not simply ask the Government to comply with its promise of 1850, but ask it to go $3,500,000 beyond that, I cannot vote for it.

Mr. RUSK obtained the floor.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I do not like to interfere with the business of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART.) The Senator from Texas has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. RUSK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Nor do I wish to prevent the Senator from Texas addressing the Senate on this question at this time, if he desires to do so; but I suggest to him whether it would not be better, in view of many considerations, that we should take up this bill to-morrow morning during the morning hour, and as this is the first time it has been before us, we can then consider it more thoroughly. It is a pretty large question, and I think, all things considered, it would be as well to let it go over until to-morrow, so that we may now take up the homestead bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I stated when I asked the Senator to take up the bill, that I would not press it to the prejudice of the special order. If, therefore, Senators desire to go on with the special order I will give way, but I think we can have a vote upon this to-day. I hope no Senator wishes to speak upon it.

Mr. MASON. I have stated to the Senator from Indiana, when he said that he thought it would not take more than an hour to consider this bill, that I should feel it my duty to ask the Senate to go into Executive session, and I must do so when the debate upon this question closes, or when the consideration of it is postponed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Do I understand that the Senator from Texas is willing to postpone the consideration of the subject until to-morrow?

Mr. RUSK. I should prefer to go on now. I shall not occupy more than twenty minutes.

Several SENATORS. Go on.

Mr. RUSK. Mr. President, for several years past, in the early part of every session, some of the Texas creditors have petitioned Congress for the payment of their claims. These petitions have generally been referred to the Committee on Finance; and I have, upon several occasions, urged upon that committee to make an early report, so that time might be allowed for the discussion of the subject.

While I would make no complaint in reference to the action of the committee referred to, I am, nevertheless, compelled to regret that they have always reported at a late day in the session, so that sufficient time has not been allowed for the proper discussion of the grave questions presented by these petitions. I have, upon more than one occasion, said that although Texas had been liberally charged with repudiation, I could show that it was the United States Government, and not Texas, that repudiated just obligations.

In 1850, immediately after the Committee of Thirteen was formed, I presented to Mr. Clay, the chairman of that committee, a proposition from the Texas delegation for the settlement of all matters in dispute between that State and the United States. The proposition was to agree upon the thirty-fourth parallel of north latitude as the boundary line, Texas ceding all north of that line to the United States, and releasing them from all claims hereafter on account of encroachments of the Indians of the United States upon Texas prior to annexation, for a sum sufficient to pay off the Texas debt in full. In the paper which I submitted to Mr. Clay, I stated that a very large portion of that debt had been created by the necessity of defending ourselves against the Indians of the United States, whom this Government was bound, by every principle of humanity and good neighborhood, as well as by treaty obligations, to restrain, but utterly failed to do so. By this failure to comply with their treaty obligations, at a time when she was contending at fearful odds against Mexico, they subjected Texas, at vast expense of blood and treasure, to defend herself against the Indians of the United States, whom you were bound, by the most sacred obligations, to restrain from outrages upon us. I shall, sir, now proceed, as briefly as possible, to show,

First. That the United States were bound to restrain these Indians; and Secondly. That the Government failed to comply with its obligations in this particular.

If I succeed in establishing these positions, I think it follows as a necessary consequence that this Government is in good faith and honor bound to pay what Texas was forced to expend, in consequence of the violation of the oft acknowledged obligations of the United States.

The first piece of evidence which I shall adduce, is the thirty-third article of the treaty with Mexico in 1831, which is in the following words:

"It is likewise agreed that the two contracting parties shall, by all the means in their power, maintain peace and harmony among the several Indian nations who inhabit the lands adjacent to the lines and rivers which form the boundaries of the two countries; and the better to attain this object, both parties bind themselves expressly to restrain by force all hostilities and incursions on the part of the Indian nations living within their respective boundaries, so that the United States of America will not suffer their Indians to attack the citizens of the United Mexican States, nor the Indians inhabiting their territory, nor will the United Mexican States permit the Indians residing within their territories to commit hostilities against the citizens of the United States of America, nor against the Indians residing within the limits of the United States, in any manner whatever. And in the event of any person or persons captured by the Indians who inhabit the territory of either of the contracting parties, being or having been carried into the territory of the other, both Governments engage and bind themselves in the most solemn manner to return them to their country as soon as they know of their being within their respective territory, or to deliver them up to the agent or representative of the Government that claims them, giving to each other reciprocally timely notice, and the claimant paying the expenses incurred in the transmission and maintenance of such person or persons, who, in the mean time, shall be treated with the utmost hospitality by the local authorities of the place where they may be. Nor shall it be lawful, under any pretext whatever, for the citizens of either of the contracting parties to purchase or hold captive, prisoners made by the Indians inhabiting the territories of the other."

NEW SERIES...No. 114.

At the time this treaty was made, Texas was a part of Mexico, and although she was separated from that country soon after by revolution, that revolution did not obliterate the obligations of the treaty. According to the principles of national law, Texas was bound by all the obligations which were applicable to her in her new capacity as a separate government, and this Government so claimed; for in a treaty made with Texas in 1838, it is recited that Texas was bound by the terms of the treaty made by the United States with Mexico in 1828, in reference to boundary.

The treaty alluded to contains these words:

"Whereas, the treaty of limits, made and concluded on the twelfth day of January, in the year one thousand eight hundred and twenty-eight, between the United States of America on the one part, and the United Mexican States on the other, is binding upon the Republic of Texas, the same having been entered into at a time when Texas formed a part of the said United Mexican States."

Now, sir, it is assumed here that Texas was bound to the United States by the terms of treaties made with Mexico, while Texas was a part of that Republic. If Texas was thus bound to the United States, were not the United States, upon the same principle, bound to Texas; or, in other words, can the United States claim benefits, and at the same time avoid responsibility? The proposition is too untenable to be even asserted, much less insisted upon. After her separation from Mexico, the Republic of Texas claimed the benefit of the thirty-third article of the treaty of 1831, as will fully appear by the letters of her diplomatic representatives here, many of which I might produce; but I will content myself with only reading two of them:

On page 5 Document No. 14, January 3, will be found the letter from which the following is an extract:

TEXAN LEGATION,
WASHINGTON, March 14, 1837.

Within the last two months we have received from our Government several dispatches, all giving detailed accounts of different Indian aggressions. We trust that this Government will feel itself bound alike by humanity and by its treaty obligations, to prevent a recurrence of similar acts of rapine and bloodshed, by the only effectual means in its power, which is the reoccupation of Nacogdoches, or some other point west of the Sabine.

With high consideration, &c., &c.,
W. H. WHARTON.
M. HUNT.

Hon. JOHN FORSYTH, Secretary of State.

Also on page 6 of the same book, the following:

TEXAN LEGATION,
WASHINGTON, July 18, 1837.

I have also to inform you that certain Indians from the United States are still committing their depredations upon the citizens of our eastern frontier, and again I would urge the terms of the existing treaties relative to the control of the Indians in that quarter.

I have the honor to be, &c., MEMUCAN HUNT.
Hon. JOHN FORSYTH, Secretary of State.

These two extracts will be sufficient to show that at that early day, after the separation from Mexico, Texas demanded the fulfillment of the thirty-third article of the treaty with Mexico, in reference to the Indians of the United States. Did this Government deny the obligation? The letter from Mr. Forsyth, of the 29th of July, 1837, will show that, so far from refusing to acknowledge it, the distinguished statesman referred to virtually admitted the force of the demand. On page 7 will be found his answer to the letter from Mr. Hunt, in which he says:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, July 29, 1837.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit a copy of a letter to this Department from the Department of War, to which a part of your note of the 18th instant was referred, by which you will be reminded of the importance of more particular information upon the subjects thus referred, in order that a proper direction and efficiency may be given to the efforts of this Government for the suppression of the acts complained of.

I have the honor to offer you renewed assurances of my great consideration.
JOHN FORSYTH.
Hon. MEMUCAN HUNT, &c., &c., &c.

Although in this letter Mr. Forsyth did not, in terms, admit the obligation under the treaty named, still he did not deny it; and that, too, when it was the ground on which our Ministers had placed their demand.

This correspondence continued; and in 1839 Mr. Forsyth addressed to Mr. Dunlap the following letter on the same subject:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, July 17, 1839.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 29th ultimo, calling the attention of this Government to those stipulations in the treaty between the United States and Mexico of the 5th of April, 1831, which relate to Indian incursions and depredations, and transmitting sundry documents evincive of schemes of Mexican authorities to incite Indians within the territory of the United States, and of the disposition of those Indians, to wage war upon the citizens of Texas.

A copy of your note, and the original documents which accompanied it, have been communicated to the Secretary of War, whose province it is to attend to the relations of this Government within the Indian tribes on our soil, and who will, no doubt, exert the best energies of his Department towards the fulfillment, on our part, of the stipulations referred to.

The original commissions to the Indian chiefs, which you requested might be returned to you, are herewith inclosed.

I avail myself of this occasion to renew to you the assurances of my very distinguished consideration.

JOHN FORSYTH.

R. G. DUNLAP, Esq., &c., &c., &c.

Mr. Poinsett, then Secretary of War, under date of the 18th of July, 1839, uses this language:

"Although I am fully convinced these orders have been punctually obeyed, and that the United States officers will use due vigilance in their execution, still they shall be reiterated, and the Texan government may rely upon every exertion being made on our part to fulfill our treaty stipulations in this particular."

Mr. Crawford, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in a letter to Mr. Armstrong, Indian agent, dated 25th of July, 1839, uses this language:

"You will, therefore, please to exert yourself to prevent any inroads upon Texas by Indians resident within our limits; if such movements are contemplated, they must be counteracted, and our treaty obligations faithfully discharged."

I could go on and read similar statements from Mr. Webster while Secretary of State, but surely this is enough to establish my first proposition.

This brings me to the question—has this Government complied with its obligations on this subject? The first evidence I shall adduce on this head is a treaty entered into by this Government with the Caddo tribe of Indians, then residing in Louisiana; made first day of July, 1835, and proclaimed by the President on the 2d of February, 1836. The second article of that treaty is in these words:

ART. II. The said chiefs, head men, and warriors of the said nation, (Caddoes,) do voluntarily relinquish their possession to the territory of land aforesaid, and promise to remove at their own expense out of the boundaries of the United States, and the Territories belonging and appertaining thereto, within the period of one year from and after the signing of this treaty, and never more return to live, settle, or establish themselves as a nation, tribe, or community of people within the same."

By other articles of this treaty, the Caddo Indians ceded to the United States a quantity of land lying in Louisiana, for which thirty thousand dollars were to be paid to them in goods and horses at once, ten thousand dollars in money before the first day of September, 1836, and ten thousand dollars a year for four years thereafter. This treaty was made about the time the revolution in Texas began; the Indians received a large part of their first thirty thousand dollars in arms and ammunition, with which, in hostile array, they marched into the town of Nacogdoches, where I then resided; and demanded of the political chief that he should assign them lands in Texas, which was refused. They then went out among the wild Indians, settled, and began a war upon our frontier, which they kept up until within a few years past. Once every year, for the succeeding four years, they made a trip from the prairies to Shreveport, Louisiana, where they received ten thousand dollars each year, which they laid out in arms and ammunition, to be used in their warfare upon Texas. Not only did the Caddoes do this, but they furnished arms and munitions to several other tribes of Indians, and incited them to war upon Texas. There was no single year in which, in their journey from the prairies to Shreveport, they did not steal from and commit murders upon the people of Texas. We had scarcely one engagement with the Indians in which Caddoes were not found among the enemy. Upon one occasion, in an attack upon my camp, one of their principal chiefs was killed within thirty steps of my line. On one of their last visits to Shreveport, to receive their annuity, they most wantonly murdered the family of a Mr. Pearce, within a few miles of the United States line. I pursued them into Louisiana, and took their arms away from them, which, at the time, was complained of as a great outrage upon the integrity of the territory of the United States.

But, sir, the Caddoes were not alone in this warfare upon Texas. There were Cherokees, Shawnees, Delawares, Kickapoos, and many others who joined in this warfare upon Texas. After the battle of San Jacinto, in 1836, Mexico, despairing of the reconquest of Texas by her own arms, offered to the Indians the country, upon condition that they should aid Mexico in exterminating the Texans. One Don Manuel Flores, a citizen of the United States, who resided within a few miles of one of your garrisons, figured largely in this business. General Valentine Canalizo, at that time in command of the Mexican army on the Rio Grande, granted commissions to Flores and Cordova, who received and entered into arrangements with the Indians at Matamoros, issued orders and instructions for their campaign against Texas, and sent officers and agents to incite them to the work of destruction. One of these agents, a Colonel Miracle, was killed in Texas, and the commissions and instructions found in his possession. These documents were all sent on and exhibited to the Government here. They are long, and I shall read but one of them; the others may be all found in Executive Document No. 14, second session Thirty-Second Congress:

Canalizo to the Chiefs of the Tribes.

Don Manuel Flores, and the chiefs of the friendly tribes accompanying him, will make known to you my sentiments towards yourself and my friends, the Indians of your tribe; and also what you have to expect as regards your remaining in quiet possession of the land selected by you within the Mexican territory for settlement. And these individuals are informed in relation to what has to be done.

Have an understanding with said Flores, in order that you may act in such a manner as to be secured in the peaceable possession of your lands, and to prevent any adventurers again destroying the repose of your families, or again treading the soil where repose the bones of your forefathers, and be careful not to deviate from his instructions.

Act under the full assurance of our generosity, of which we have given so many proofs, and that nothing can be expected of the greedy adventurers for land, who wish to deprive you even of the sun which warms and vivifies you, and who will not cease to injure you while the grass grows and water flows.

I desire to hear from you, and to know how I can serve you. Communicate with Manuel Flores in order that he may inform me.

Lieutenant Colonel BUL, of the Cherokees, (meaning Bowles.)

Don Manuel Flores was a citizen of the United States, and every one of the tribes addressed were natives of the territory of the United States. I could adduce much more proof to the same effect, if time would permit. The consequences of the war of your Indians upon Texas—for some parts of all these tribes were engaged in it for several years—were of the most serious character. While we were engaged with some eight thousand Mexican troops, all the families of the eastern portion of the Republic were compelled to leave the country, or they would have fallen a prey to the tomahawk and scalping-knife of your Indians. After we had driven back the Mexicans, our frontier was drenched in blood by these ruthless savages. We had to make many campaigns; and keep up a standing force for defense against them, which involved large expense. I requested the Auditor to make me out an account of these expenses, which is as follows:

COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, March 20, 1854.

JAMES B. SHAW, Comptroller.

This, sir, does not cover all the expenses, so that it may be safely asserted that more than one half the entire debt of Texas was created in defending herself against the hostile incursions of Indians whom you were bound by treaty stipulations to restrain, to say nothing of the magnanimity which ought to have been shown by a great and powerful nation towards a weak neighbor, struggling for liberty and existence. The damages to the Republic of Texas growing out of these transactions were incalculable.

The controversy between Texas and Mexico was soon settled, for all practical purposes. After the battle of San Jacinto, the war with Mexico was a nominal affair. Our debt was small, and we had, so far as Mexico was concerned, quiet possession of an empire of the most desirable lands upon this continent. The United States Indians, however, had possession of a large portion of the most valuable of them; and not content with retaining that possession, were daily committing ravages of the most appalling character upon our frontier inhabitants. The property of our citizens was taken, men were shot down at the plow, neither age nor sex were spared, and women and children were carried off into a captivity far worse than death. Accounts of these ravages found their way into the newspapers, and thousands were prevented from removing to Texas who would otherwise have done so, while many who were already there were induced to leave the country.

Our debt, after the Mexicans were expelled from the country, amounted to less than a million of dollars. Our Government was placed upon an economical footing, and we should very soon have been able, from the sale of our lands, to have paid our debts, and supported the Government. But, the fact that your Indians were in possession of the lands, added to the terror which they inspired, caused them to depreciate, so that they could not be sold at any price. To keep up a force for the defense of the frontier large sums were required, and necessity compelled us to make paper issues. Having no means to redeem this paper, its price, as a matter of course, went down, and it descended in the scale until much of it commanded but ten cents in the dollar. That paper constitutes the very debt in controversy, and is now here demanding its full face value, with eight and ten per cent. interest.

Now, sir, suppose this transaction had been between individuals in place of between nations, and was before a court of justice, would not the party violating his contract be condemned to refund the money expended by the other, in consequence of the violation of the contract, as well as the damages which have been sustained?

I shall support this bill, as it is to be submitted to Texas for her approval or rejection. There is now in the Treasury of the United States $5,000,000 in bonds, bearing an interest of five per cent., redeemable in fourteen years from their date, which was in 1850; four years' interest is now due. If these bonds are allowed to run on to maturity, there will then be due upon them $3,500,000 interest; this, added to the $5,000,000 of principal, would make $8,500,000, the sum proposed to be appropriated now in payment of these bonds.

I had intended, sir, if this bill had come up at an earlier day of the session, to have offered an amendment providing that a board of commissioners, or the officers of the Treasury, should be authorized and required to take testimony, and ascertain and pay the amount which may be found justly and equitably due to Texas on account of the Indian incursions upon Texas. But, sir, we have not time now to investigate this subject as fully as it may be desirable. The friends of the bill are desirous of having a vote upon it as it stands, and I have, therefore, concluded not to offer the amendment.

But here, in my place, I distinctly announce that I believe this claim to be just. I believe this Government in honor bound to pay it; and so believing, I shall, upon all proper occasions, as long as Texas honors me with a commission as her representative, continue to press this claim until it shall be paid.

Mr. MASON. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill until to-morrow, with the view of going into Executive session.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill from the House of Representatives creating a new collection district in the State of New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and to constitute Dunkirk a port of entry, and the ports of Barcelona, Silver Creek, and Cattaraugus Creek, ports of delivery, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill from the House for the relief of Charles Lee Jones, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MASON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. HUNTER. I wish to state that the Committee on Finance have reported the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and we are now ready to proceed with its consideration. It is not my purpose to oppose my colleague's motion to-day, but I give notice that to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to divide the time, at least with him. Unless we can dispose of that bill this week, I do not well see how we are to adjourn on the 4th of August. I hope, sir, that to-morrow the Senate will agree to take it up and proceed with it. It is a very long bill. I give notice that I shall ask the Senate to-morrow to take it up.

Mr. GWIN. I hope we shall take up the homestead bill. We have spent day after day upon it, and we are now ready to come to a vote.

Mr. PRATT. There is no chance of getting a vote upon that now.

Mr. MASON. The Senator from California will allow me to say to him, and to the Senate, that they are aware that there is important business pending before the Senate, in Executive session, business of very great importance. The session is drawing near to a close; and, therefore, I shall be compelled to ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of it; but I want to do one thing at a time. I want to get clear of the homestead bill now; and therefore, I hope we shall proceed to its consideration and get through with it.

Mr. CLAY. I will say to the Senator from California, that it is utterly impossible to get through with that bill to-day. I have several amendments which I shall propose to it at the proper time.

Mr. GWIN. We have to dispose of it; and as we have it under consideration, I am opposed to laying it aside for anything until it is disposed of. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion of the Senator from Virginia, with a view to vote against it in order to take up the homestead bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do hope that we shall do something. We have now two measures before us of great importance—the homestead bill, and the Texas debt bill.

Now, the fact is found to be that, when we partially discuss a bill, and then postpone it to another day, it increases debate upon it from day to day. The only proper way to proceed, is to take up some one subject and go through with it, before we proceed with anything else.

If we begin with the homestead bill, and then the next day take up the Texas debt bill, and in the middle of the discussion on that go into Executive session to take up some treaty, the result will be that the Senate will adjourn without action on some of the most important measures. I am not opposed to going into Executive session; but I do hope that now we shall proceed to decide either the homestead bill or the Texas debt bill.

Mr. BELL. I wish to ask the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, if he stated that it was a matter of immediate importance that we should go into Executive session?

Mr. MASON. I will state to the Senator, and to the Senate, that there is a matter pending before the Senate in Executive session of great public interest and great public importance. It is indispensable, I think, to the success of that measure that it should be acted upon within the present session. It may be that it will elicit a good deal of difference of opinion, and a good deal of debate, and it may require time.

I gave notice that I should move an Executive session on Monday, but at the solicitation of gentlemen interested in the homestead bill, I deferred it until I have found, as I am now satisfied, that if that homestead bill be continued it will take up the remainder of the session, for there will be protracted debate upon it, and various amendments will be offered. I submit to the Senate that Executive matters of the character to which I have alluded, should take a certain degree of precedence when it is indispensable that they should pass.

Mr. BROWN. I shall oppose going into Executive session. It is very clear to my mind that we cannot, by any possibility, do more than pass the necessary bills during the remainder of the session. If day after day is taken up in the consideration of Executive business, we shall have no time for legislative action. If the Executive business is of that pressing importance indicated by the Senator from Virginia, the President can detain the Senate here when the two Houses shall have adjourned, and that too, without incurring any risk of paying extra mileage, which has heretofore been the great bug-bear. I would rather have that sort of Executive session to transact important Executive business, than that the homestead bill and other important bills should be defeated for want of time. The President can very easily detain us here if he chooses to do it for Executive business, after the adjournment of Congress, and we cannot be detained for anything else.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I wish to call the recollection of the Senate and the Senator from Virginia to the fact that many, many months ago, the homestead bill and its friends here begged for an equal participation of time, when another treaty was under consideration, which has since that time been ratified and proclaimed as the law of the land. I hope they will not now give way for another treaty, or for any other measure, but will proceed to consider and dispose of the homestead bill.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I shall vote against the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business; but at the same time I am bound to say that I believe that that business to which the Senator from Virginia has adverted has high claims upon the consideration and the prompt consideration of the Senate. I shall vote against the motion, with the earnest hope that those Senators who wish that the homestead bill may be disposed of in some way, will agree that to-day it shall receive that disposition.

We can dispose of it, if we will sit here and do it, but it is perfectly certain that if we adjourn at the usual hour, that bill cannot be disposed of to-day, nor in my judgment during the whole session. The experience of the Senate has demonstrated that if there is a bill which excites great interest and leads to protracted debate, the only way in which it can be disposed of is by appropriating some day to it, and disposing of it on that day.

Mr. ADAMS. Let it be now.

Mr. CHASE. I agree with my friend from Mississippi who says, "now." So say I, now. Let us take up that bill to-day and press it to a final vote.

If the opponents of the bill who are so anxious to proceed to the consideration of other business, if the honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] who presses the consideration, as he thinks it his duty to do, of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, and the other honorable Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] who has charge of the business of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and other Senators, who are opposed to this bill, will to-day agree to give their attention to it, and to keep it before the consideration of the Senate until it is disposed of to-day, we can dispose of it.

Mr. President, I have but another word to say, and that is to the friends of the homestead bill. This bill as it came from the House, in my judgment, has a majority of friends upon this floor, that is to say, if it is put to a vote in the shape in which it came from the House without a material amendment, in my belief, it will be adopted by the Senate. There is an amendment suggested by the Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] immaterial wholly in its character, designed to remove an objection to the homestead principle.

Mr. HUNTER. This is not in order. It is not in order to discuss the merits of the homestead bill on this motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the chair.) The Senator is out of order in discussing the homestead bill, or any provision connected with it. The question simply is on going into Executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. We ought to determine what we shall do.

Mr. CHASE. I was aware that I was out of order, but I was not more out of order than many others who preceded me in the debate; but I desist, with the expression of a hope that we shall have a vote.

Mr. BADGER. I wish merely to say that, if the friends of the homestead bill wish it considered, they had better allow us to vote on this question; because I cannot see what is the difference between consuming the day in Executive session, and consuming the day in debating whether we shall go on with it or not.

The question being taken by yeas and nays upon the motion to proceed to the consideration of Executive business, resulted—yeas 20, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toucey—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Clayton, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Weller—31.

So the motion was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed, with amendments, Senate bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States, in the district of Massachusetts.

Also, that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bills; which were then signed by the President pro tempore:

An act for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn;

An act regulating the time of holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States, in the eastern district of Louisiana;

Joint resolution providing for the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson; and

An act to incorporate the Georgetown Gas-Light Company.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Gwin to strike out of the first section the words "free of cost," and insert "at twenty-five cents an acre, payable when the patent shall have been issued."

Mr. SHIELDS called for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. I shall vote against the amendment, and I wish to state very briefly the reasons why I shall do so. I am decidedly in favor of graduating the price of the homestead as we propose to graduate the price of the public lands to all purchasers. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] has an amendment which he intends to offer if this amendment of the Senator from California should not prevail, which does propose a graduation of the price of the homestead, and with a view of reaching his amendment and voting for that, I shall vote against this amendment. I wish to say at the same time, however, that I do not think this price is low enough for some lands which are subject to entry. As respects the lands in Alabama, I say without hesitation, and my respected colleague, [Mr. Fitzpatrick,] and the Senators from Mississippi, who are acquainted with the character of those lands, will, I believe, fully sustain me in the assertion that the settler will not thank you for the privilege of entering his land at twenty-five cents an acre, for there is not an entire section of unentered public and unappropriated land in the State of Alabama at this day, which on six months notice by advertisement, would bring even the price of twenty-five cents an acre. Those lands are sterile, barren, and valueless, except for the timber upon them, and they are valueless for the timber at this time, because they are remote from market and inaccessible. Hence, I shall vote against the amendment to fix the price at twenty-five cents, with the hope that the amendment of my friend from Mississippi may prevail. It is but sheer justice to the citizens of Alabama that they should not be required to pay as much for her worst lands as is only demanded of the citizens of other States for their best lands, or that her citizens be made to pay more than her lands are worth, while citizens of other States may obtain lands at less than they are worth.

Mr. MALLORY addressed the Senate upon the pending question, and upon the general principle involved in the bill. [His remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

The question being taken by yeas and nays on Mr. Gwin's amendment, resulted—yeas 19, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Butler, Case, Gwin, Houston, James, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Sebastian, Slidell, Stuart, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Weller—19.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bell, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Chase, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rockwell, Shields, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Wade, and Walker—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN obtained the floor.

Mr. GWIN. There is another amendment of mine, to which I suppose there will be no objection. It is to strike out the word "contracted" in section four.

Mr. BROWN. I wish the floor, if there be no other amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART.) The Chair does not understand how any other amendment could be pending.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the vote will be taken on my motion to strike out that word.

Mr. BROWN. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment may be considered as agreed to unanimously.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to perfect the bill by an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made to the amendment of the Senator from California, the Senator from Mississippi is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Then I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and insert the substitute which I send to the Chair.

Mr. WELLER. The bill can be amended before the vote is put upon the substitute.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire further to amend the bill before the substitute is offered. I move to strike out the fourth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unquestionably the Senator has the right to move to amend the bill before the question is taken on any substitute.

Mr. BRODHEAD. My motion is to strike out the bankrupt section—the fourth section—which is in these words:

"SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing the patent therefor."

Mr. BROWN. Do I understand the Chair to decide that I have not the right, at this time, to offer my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair intended to say that the Senator had a right to offer his amendment; that it would be before the Senate, and be considered after the amendments to the original bill should be disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. That is what I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending motion now is, to strike out the fourth section.

Mr. BROWN. I have an amendment to offer by way of perfecting the bill in the first section; but I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CHASE. I move to amend the section which the Senator from Pennsylvania proposes to strike out, by striking out the word "contracted."

Mr. GWIN. That has already been stricken out on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not stricken out. It was objected to, as the Chair understood, by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and not stricken out.

Mr. CHASE. Then I move to strike out that word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the proposition to perfect the section which it is proposed to strike out?

Mr. CHASE. It is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is in order.

Mr. GWIN. Was not that amendment permitted to be made by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated distinctly that the Senator from California could not move more than one amendment at a time. The pending question then was on his motion to strike out "free of cost," and insert "twenty-five cents, payable when the patent shall have issued." He could not move any other amendment while that was pending. The question now is on striking out of the fourth section the word "contracted."

Mr. WALKER. I am one of those who believe that the word "contracted" should be stricken out of the fourth section of the bill; but I also believe that the residue of the section ought to be left, and for this reason: The remainder of the section is necessary for the protection of the Government of the United States. As it will read, if this word be stricken out, the section will simply provide that all the lands settled upon under the bill shall not be sold prior to the issuing of the patent. If you strike out the section, the States might exercise the right of selling the lands before the issue of the patent; and this Government, having itself taken the initiative in regard to the primary disposal of the soil, it would really be a question whether the State government might not sell it. But as the section stands, with the word "contracted" in it, it might be, if Congress could act in the manner proposed, that the lands would forever be exempt from sale under execution. But it is necessary that the remainder of the section should be left for the protection of the Government during the five years occupancy of the settler.

Mr. CLAY. I shall vote against the proposed amendment to strike out the word "contracted," because I do not see that it is going to achieve the objects assumed by the friends of the motion. Suppose the word "contracted" be stricken out, then the section will in effect be this: that no land occupied under this act shall be subject to any debt or debts until the patent has been obtained. What will be the effect of that? I say it will be to divest the States of the right of taxing these lands, because, if the land cannot be sold for any debt until the patent issues, of course it will be in the power of the occupant to avoid all sale of the land, to avoid all liability for contribution, in the way of taxes, towards the support of the State Government, by simply abstaining from asking or receiving a patent. I cannot vote for any provision of this kind. It is said that it is protecting the rights of the Federal Government. I do not think that such will be the effect of the amendment; but it will be to protect the settler in the enjoyment of the land with a perfect immunity from all debts to individuals or to the States, so far as the land is concerned.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, if I understand it, the motion is to strike out the fourth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, sir; the first amendment is to strike out the word "contracted" in that section.

Mr. PETTIT. At any rate the question ought to be upon striking out the whole section. That section reads as follows:

"That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor."

Let us read it now, leaving out the word "contracted," which it is proposed to strike out, and we shall find that it has little or no meaning. Without that word it reads thus:

"That all lands acquired under the provisions of this act shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts prior to the issuing of the patent therefor."

The whole section ought to be stricken out for this reason: After the patent issues, the property becomes individual, and has passed from the Government—this Government cannot longer control its disposition. It must be left to the States alone to determine. The lex loci rei sitæ—a question which we have examined in another form in this body—clearly and unquestionably governs. The laws of the State will determine how property may be seized and exposed to sale by execution, for what debts it may be liable, through what courts and under what adjudication it must go, and this Government can no longer control it after it has parted with its title. This section, therefore, ought not to remain at all.

Now, sir, a few words in reference to the question that has been raised by the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY,] and answered, I think, to some extent, by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] relative to the power of taxation. There is no difficulty at all in the States taxing these lands after they shall have gone into the individual possession of persons, and after improvements have been made. I grant you that that tax will not settle down as a mortgage or lien upon the lands so as to expose them to sale, and divest the title of the United States. But a tax upon their value, the value of the interest of the occupant, may be assessed and levied, and it will be charged against him on the assessment books. If he does not pay it voluntarily, any personal property which he has upon the premises or elsewhere, may be distrained, and may be exposed to sale to pay the taxes assessed upon this realty, this possessory right which he has, whatever the local Legislature may see fit to estimate it at. I say, therefore, there is no trouble about collecting taxes on this kind of property by the States, so long as any personal property of the owner or occupant can be found. I repeat, that I grant the State or Territory in which it may lie cannot seize upon the title and sell it, and divest the General Government of it; but the tax may be collected in the manner I have suggested.

But, sir, not to have the appearance of attempting to control the manner of disposing of the realty within their jurisdiction, I am in favor of striking out this whole section. The amendment to the amendment will leave it awkwardly worded—that the parties shall not "become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts prior to the issuing of the patent." It shall not be so sold prior, to be sure; it could not be sold so as to pass the title. That is certain. The possession might be changed by the local Legislature probably, possibly at any rate; but to make the question a clear one, let us keep up the distinction between the powers of this Government, and the rights and powers of the States and territorial governments. No question does exist, in my mind, that as a local matter, this Government cannot entail real estate to persons after they have passed the title. When the title has once passed, it is wholly subject to the disposition of the local laws, and there ought to be no section in reference to it whatever. The question of taxation, as I have said, is clear enough if any personal property can be found upon which to levy. I think that the section ought to be stricken out. When that shall have been done, there is a substantial amendment which I shall propose to the second section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the word "contracted."

Mr. CHASE called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall vote against striking out that word, with the view of voting to strike out the whole section, when that shall have been defeated.

The yeas and nays were taken; with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Chase, Dawson, Dixon, Douglas, Evans, Foot, Gillette, Gwin, Houston, Johnson, Mallory, Pratt, Rockwell, Sebastian, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Clay, Dodge of Iowa, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Rusk, and Shields—14.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania, to strike out the fourth section.

Mr. CHASE called for the yeas and nays upon it; and they were ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to say a few words in reference to this question. The Senator from Pennsylvania says that this is a bankrupt law. It is quite the contrary. The whole effect of this section, as it stands, is simply to exempt the homestead from liability for debt until the patent shall vest the title. After the title shall have been vested by the patent, it will be liable for debts precisely as any other property of the party will be. Now, until the title shall so vest, it is perfectly obvious that no person, except the beneficiary, can acquire the interest, because the interest of the beneficiary himself can hardly rank as even an inchoate title. It may revert, under the circumstances indicated in the bill, to the Government. The sale for debt or taxes can effect nothing as against the Government. The Government will take no title as against the beneficiary; and the consequence is, if you strike out this section, you strike out a vital principle of the bill. It confers nothing upon the beneficiary which the Government has not a clear right to confer. The land remains, until the issue of a patent, against all the world, except as against the beneficiary, the land of the Government. If it so remains the land of the Government, clearly the Government may vest its title, until the issuance of the patent, in such a party as it may see fit. I hope the section will not be stricken out. I regard it as one vital to the bill.

Mr. President, I wish to say another thing. It will not escape observation that when I moved an amendment to the bill, simply to strike out a discrimination between two classes of foreigners, it was rejected; and many Senators voted against it upon the avowed ground that it was not desirable to make any amendments to the bill. I appreciated fully the force of that objection to my amendment, and I acquiesced in the vote by which the Senate decided against it. But, then, immediately after the Senate had rejected an amendment moved by a friend of the bill, it incorporated into the bill a number of amendments moved by its avowed opponents, which have had no other effect than to weaken and jeopard it. This amendment comes from an avowed, and honorable, and manly opponent of the bill. It comes from the Senator from Pennsylvania. I hope the friends of the bill at least will retrace the policy, upon which, in my humble judgment, they entered unadvisedly, and will now agree to vote down every amendment, unless it be such as is absolutely necessary to make the bill perfectly unexceptionable in view of the Constitution.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not intend to take any part in this discussion. I shall vote against the whole bill; and, therefore, it is fair that I shall make this remark. But the Senator from Ohio has touched upon what I regard one of the vital principles of the bill. I am opposed to this tenure by bounty. It is a new tenure. I may designate it a tenure by bounty upon the public lands within one of the sovereign States. Any one who settles upon the public lands, under such a tenure, has not a responsibility to the State in which he lives, equal to the responsibility of other citizens. You make him a federal tenant—a tenant, I again repeat, not owning the lands by money advanced for them, not for a consideration which makes him responsible as a citizen of the State, and subjecting him and his property to the sovereign dominion in which he resides; but a tenant by the bounty of the Federal Government, exempting him from the liabilities of other citizens. I would strike it out; and I say, so far as regards the States in which such lands exist, it is going very far to impose upon them such a class of citizens.

Mr. PETTIT. I am a friend of this bill. Of that no Senator can doubt. But I am not willing to pass a law that shall be totally inoperative, nor to burlesque law-making by passing provisions which can have no vitality or existence, can produce no good result, are only fraught with evil consequences, and must necessarily produce litigation wherever they are sought to be enforced. Now, sir, this provision of the bill seeks to exempt lands from debts existing prior to the issuing, or the "issuance," as the bill says, of the patent. That, I hold, is an utter impossibility for this Government to do. The State governments, and the State governments alone, after this Government has passed the title, have the only power to determine the means by which it shall be exemplified or authenticated; and that applies with no greater force to the fee simple itself than to the possessory right. Your States can determine who shall possess property, which is held individually, as well as they can determine who owns the fee simple. They may give the writ of ejectment to recover the possession. It is true, at common law, the only thing triable in such actions, was the right to immediate possession, and in this country it is vested entirely in the States. Therefore, you would do what would be a nullity, an idle mocking, by undertaking to say by your legislation here, after you have individualized the land, and put individuals in the possession or cultivation of it, and after they have acquired a property and interest in it, that the local laws of the State shall not determine how that possessory right may be forfeited, or the possessor ejected or removed. It is, therefore, a mockery. You cannot do it. The power is as much in the State or in the Territory where the land lies, to determine, after the Government shall have individualized the possession, who shall be the possessor of it, and how it shall be taxed, and how the citizen shall be responsible to the local government, as it is to determine who has the legal title after the General Government shall have surrendered hers. The whole section ought, therefore, to make it harmonious, to make it comport with enlightened judgment and enlightened information, as to the respective rights of the two governments—the State and the General Government—be stricken out. I protest that this Government has no power to determine who shall possess the lands after the possession has been given to A, B, or C. She has no power to control the State legislation as to by what means he may forfeit the right of possession. Will you, though he were a convict and ought to be sent to the penitentiary, say that he ought not to forfeit the possession, but shall forever remain on the land? I only instance that to show the extreme absurdity of this. There is no such power to individualize the possession, and the States alone can control to whom it shall be given under their laws.

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the honorable Senator takes his seat, I wish to ask him a question. As I understand, this is but an inchoate, a contingent right. I would like to know what right the purchaser could get, when he made a purchase, if these lands were sold under an execution? What right would the possessor receive? Then, I ask, would it not be illusory to the purchaser? He could get nothing.

Mr. PETTIT. I say to the Senator, in response, that he would not get the legal title. That is true; but he would get the growing crops; he would get the implements; he would get possession of the house, and the cultivated fields under the law of the State or Territory where such a law was provided for him. They might be sold upon judgment. In many of your States you now provide, though it did not exist at common law, that choses in action, that equitable rights, that the mortgagee's interest, may be sold upon execution. Such is the case in my own State, I know; and I have no doubt it is so in many other States. But a few years ago, you held tenaciously to the old common law doctrine, that nothing but what was tangible property could be sold in that way; now, any chose in action, any bond, any note may be seized and sold at public auction as property, could have been at common law. So you may sell possessory rights; they may be sold in different States. The mere equitable right, the right of redemption, I believe, at common law could always be sold; but it was ideal held that, although by a mortgage, in the form of a fee simple, or conveyance with a defeasance, to be sure, they had mortgaged the property to all the earth, yet, as against the mortgagor, it might be sold upon execution; but the mortgagee's interest could not be sold on execution. It is now provided that they can be seized, and levied upon, and exposed to sale, and all the rights of the mortgagee under the mortgage are transferred by that means to the purchaser at the sheriff's sale. So it is with this property. I grant you, you cannot wrest from the Government the fee simple; but you can wrest from the possessor the possession of his house, his crops, and everything attached to his grounds; and you cannot divest the States of the power to determine as to the transfer of property within their jurisdiction.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 20, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Clay, Dawson, Evans, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, Slidell, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, and Walker—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Gillette, Hamlin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Walker—20.

So the fourth section was struck out.

Mr. BROWN. I move to amend the first section of the bill by striking out all after the word "enter" and inserting the following, (so that the section will entitle any free white person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, to enter:)

—lands which have been offered for sale for five years, at one dollar per acre; lands which shall have been offered for sale for ten years, at seventy-five cents per acre; lands which shall have been offered for sale for fifteen years, at fifty cents per acre; lands which shall have been offered for sale for twenty years, at twenty-five cents per acre; and lands which shall have been offered for sale for twenty-five years, at twelve and a half cents per acre, payable in every instance at the expiration of five years, or sooner, if the citizen shall elect to make an earlier payment, and the patent shall issue after payment.

The substitute which I had the honor to lay upon the table this morning, and move in lieu of this entire bill, has two main features in it. One is a right of occupancy for ten years without payment; the other is the scale of graduation almost like what I now submit. If this bill is to pass in any form, I am for applying the graduation principle to the payment of the public lands. I voted against fixing the arbitrary price of twenty-five cents an acre, or fifty cents an acre, or any other price; because there is a difference in the value of the land. I am for the graduation principle, because that fixes the nearest approximate price at which you can arrive, in reference to what is the real value of the soil. I take that scale from the bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] and as I have had occasion to remark once before, I take it, because, having been brought to us from that eminent source, and our minds having been induced to rest upon it, we are prepared to vote upon it, without any great amount of consideration further. I should, if it had been left to me entirely, have fixed a somewhat different scale; but I am satisfied with that. We cannot, of course, sell each particular section of the land at precisely what it is worth; but it is idle to tell me that it is all worth the same price; that if you sell it at all, you must sell arbitrarily at twenty-five cents an acre, whether it is poor or rich. The Senate well knows, that I entertain no constitutional scruples about giving away the land; none on earth; but we have those to deal with who do entertain those scruples, and we must meet on some half way ground, or we cannot get along together. I want to ask gentlemen who think that you have not the constitutional right to give away the land, how near they approach that, by fixing an arbitrary price of twenty-five cents, or say fifty cents an acre? A piece of land is worth, in point of fact, ten dollars an acre; but you say to one man, we will sell to you at twenty-five cents, and to another man you shall not have it if you give ten dollars an acre; and you thus, in fact, give the first man $9 75 on the acre, and save the Constitution by refusing to give him the land. I am not going, when the Senate is impatient, to debate the proposition. I am quite content, so far as I am concerned, to take the vote without any further discussion. I should not have said thus much, except to draw the attention of the Senate to the amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of graduating the price of the public lands, but not on this bill. I am in favor of the principle of the graduation bill, but I want to pass this bill on its own merits as a homestead bill. I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. I have simply to say that the bill to which the Senator alludes for graduating the price of the public lands, if he alludes to the one which came from the House of Representatives, only provides for the actual settler or occupant of the lands; and hence the provision of my friend from Mississippi is substantially that provision. If the amendment prevails, I shall vote for the bill. If it does not prevail, I shall vote against the bill. I think it is altogether unjust and unfair to the citizens of my State, where the public land is not absolutely worth twenty-five cents an acre, to exact of them, if we are going to fix any price at all, as high a price as has been paid or can be paid for the best lands bought of the Government.

Mr. GWIN called for the yeas on the amendment; and they were ordered and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Toombs, and Toucey—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bright, Cass, Chase, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, Hamlin, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rockwell, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—26.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to move an amendment, which it will be seen at once is necessary and essential, to the second section of the bill. The proviso in that section reads as follows:

"In case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children, under twenty-one years of age, the right and the fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian, may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, and in accordance with the laws of the State in which such children, for the time being, have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants."

I move to strike out the words "children, for the time being, have their domicile," and insert, after the word "such," which now stands before the word "children," the words, "such lands are situated." It will be seen, at once, that the provision here is, that the lands shall be sold according to the laws of the State in which the children are domiciled. This cannot be done. The title to the lands can only be sold according to the laws of the State in which the lands are situated. I therefore offer this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the first section, by adding:

Provided, That before any patent shall issue under the provisions of this act, the patentee shall pay such sum as the land covered by the patent may have cost the Government, to be ascertained by the estimate of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to know of the friends of this bill whether, by the first section, they propose to secure a homestead only on lands subject to private entry, or do they mean to embrace lands not subject to private entry, but which have been surveyed? If they mean to embrace lands which are not subject to entry, but which have been surveyed, then the section achieves their object; but if they mean to confine it to those lands only which are subject to entry, the last words of this section "and after the same shall have been surveyed," should be stricken out; because, in the former part of the section, it is provided that persons of the description mentioned "shall be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, which may, at the time the application is made, be subject to private entry at $1 25 per acre," but it concludes, "or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed." I move to strike out the words "and after the same shall have been surveyed," because they will produce confusion.

Mr. WALKER. It cannot be denied that the wording of the bill is a little obscure there, but it cannot be denied at the same time that the land must be surveyed before it can be privately entered. Therefore, to strike out these words would not change the effect of the bill, and I hope, for one, that unnecessary amendments will not be made.

Mr. CLAY. I will state, in reply to the Senator, that I submitted this section to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. He approved of the amendment, and said that, as the section stands, it would produce a great deal of difficulty and confusion, and that it would be construed in some quarters probably as embracing lands not subject to entry. At his instance, I have moved the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. It cannot be so construed, except in some locality where it has been discovered that lands can be entered at private entry before they are surveyed.

Mr. CLAY. But all lands which have been surveyed are not subject to private entry. They must first be offered for sale. The section, as it stands, I say does admit the construction I give it, to enable them to enter lands not subject to private entry.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLAY. I have another amendment to move to the second section of the bill. That section provides that the party, in order to be entitled to a patent,

"Shall prove, by two credible witnesses, that he, she, or they have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land, and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated the same or any part thereof."

Here is a bounty for perjury. I should like to know where two credible witnesses could be produced to prove this negative, that the party had not alienated the land. I ask some of the friends of the bill to answer that question. I propose to strike out those words, "have not alienated the same or any part thereof" and insert:

Provided, That on proof that the same, or any part thereof had been alienated prior to the issue of the patent, the grant and patent shall be null and void.

The amendment was rejected—ayes 15, noes 20.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall apply to any of the public lands lying northwest of the Ohio river, and which were ceded to the United States by the Commonwealth of Virginia, pursuant to the act of that Commonwealth, of the 30th of October, 1783, accepted by Congress March 1st, 1784, the same being, by the Virginia acts and deed of cession aforesaid, considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditures, and to be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other uses or purposes whatever; and the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, providing that all debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation.

If this bill pass, it will certainly introduce a new policy, on the part of this Government, with reference to a portion of the public property. The honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] when contrasting the policy of this bill, with other bills of general interest that were pending before Congress, said he considered it the great measure of the session, and I agree with him. It is the great measure of the session.

Mr. CLAYTON. And of the age.

Mr. MASON. It is the great measure of the age, to make it more ample, because it asserts a right on the part of this Government, twofold in its character: first to give away the public property without consideration; and secondly, to select the class to whom it shall be given—to give away the public property that it holds under the Constitution, and to select the class to whom they shall give it, because they are to give it only to those who will reside upon and cultivate it.

Now, Mr. President, if that is to be the policy of the Government in reference to the public property, I can see no reason, and I apprehend no Senator can assign a reason, why it shall be limited to the public lands; why they cannot, for the same reasons, go into the public Treasury, and take out the coin and give it to one class of the community to the exclusion of others; why they may not go into the public Treasury and take the public money, and say we will give it to the paupers, to enable them to maintain themselves without labor; or to the manufacturers, to enable them the better to carry on their manufactures? It asserts a power in the Government, I submit with all possible respect to those who differ from me, to exercise an unlawful control over the public property. I agree, then, with the honorable Senator from Michigan, it is the great measure of the session, and probably of the age. It is agrarian—agrarian in its strongest aspect. The whole of the States are tributary to this policy. The great body of the public lands are those which were purchased and paid for out of the Treasury. They became public property, and this bill asserts a right to take that public property, not for the public use, but to give it away.

Sir, I can see no warrant in the Constitution for it; but if it is the purpose of the Senate thus to use the public property, I respectfully submit to them, on the part of the State which I have the honor to represent here, that they shall regard the compact made with that State, at least in relation to so much of this property as was derived from it. That which was called Northwestern Territory, and out of which have been carved five States of the Confederacy, is bound by that compact. I have recited the terms of the compact in the amendment; because, if it be the pleasure of the Senate to reject it, I want it to go on the record, that my State and my people may know how far this Federal Government regards a compact made with one of its members; how far this Federal Government will regard a compact made with one of the States, when it is in pursuit of a policy which I well know the people of that State will deprecate. Sir, what is the compact? The States, under the articles of Confederation, were urgently requested by the Federal Government of that day, to make a cession of all their public lands for public purposes, upon fair and legitimate grounds, upon the grounds that these lands, having been acquired by the common blood and treasure of the colonies of Great Britain, should not be exclusively applied to those States. Virginia made a very large cession; she made it upon conditions. Those conditions are upon your statute-book; and the Constitution under which we now legislate, and which we are all sworn to support, imposes upon this Congress to regard the engagements entered into by the Confederation.

I have recited that in the amendment. Sir, the compact was this: Virginia passed a law, in pursuance of the recommendation of the old Congress, authorizing her Representatives in Congress, by deed, to convey this domain to the United States, but upon this condition, among others: After reserving a portion of it in order to pay the bounties stipulated to be paid to her officers and soldiery, it says:

"It shall be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of such States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and shall be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever."

The Representatives of Virginia, thus authorized, did convey the land, and in the deed of conveyance itself recited that it was made to and for the uses and purposes, and on the conditions, recited in the act. That act was signed and sealed in the presence of the old Congress, and by a resolution of Congress accepted; and they made themselves parties to it in all its stipulations and provisions. One of the conditions of the cession was, that only three States should be carved out of this territory; and as evidence that Congress considered itself bound by the stipulations and conditions, it afterwards, by resolution, requested the State of Virginia to relax that portion of her policy, and to enlarge the condition, so as to permit five States to be made. Virginia did it, and that was the only one of the conditions contained in the cession which was relaxed or modified on the part of Virginia.

I submit, then, it is binding upon the Congress of the United States, under the present Constitution, because, as recited in the amendment, by the sixth article of the Constitution all contracts and engagements entered into by the Government under the Confederation are assumed to be binding upon this Government. Now, sir, I do not see, if a compact is to be regarded; if the Congress of the United States is not to set an example to its own people, and to the world, of violating a solemn compact entered into upon good consideration at the time it was done; how we can avoid making the amendment to the bill. Why, sir, what is the stipulation? I do not believe, far-seeing and sagacious as our ancestors were, that they ever contemplated a day when Congress would assume to give away the public property; and whether they did or not, the bill upon your table comes strictly within its purview. What, then, is the condition? The condition is, that these lands shall be treated as a common fund, and that the States then in the Union, and those that thereafter should come into the Union, should have the benefit of that fund. How? In proportion to their common charge in the general expenditure. At that day this general expenditure, under the Articles of Confederation, was apportioned among the States, and the States provided for it; and this was the fund to be for the relief of those States proportionate to its common charge in general expenditure. Now, the power of taxation is given; a revenue is collected from the people of the States in lieu of the apportionment of this common charge; and under the terms of that deed of cession, mutatis mutandis it accommodates itself perfectly in reference to the present condition of things and the taxing power, because if you treat this as a fund, bring it into the Treasury as a part of the common fund, it will then go exactly in proportion for the relief of States for their common charge in support of the Confederacy.

Now, Mr. President, I do not know whether this bill is to pass into a law or not. If it does pass, I, as a representative of the State of Virginia, ask in her name that the land ceded by her shall be exempted from its operation. I ask it under the terms of the conditions upon which the land was ceded; I ask it as a right upon the part of one of the States of the Union, that a compact made with her shall not be violated, but shall be regarded; and if it be the pleasure of the Government to enter into this policy of treating the public property no longer as a trust, but as a subject confided to their arbitrary discretion, to be given away either to classes or to the people in numero, let this property, which is exempted by the terms of the cession from any such disposition, be exempt from it.

Mr. FISH. Before the Senator from Virginia takes his seat, I should like to ask him whether the amendment he proposes is confined to the future disposition or restriction upon the lands ceded by Virginia alone, or whether it extends to the other States who have likewise ceded land to the Government?

Mr. MASON. It is confined to Virginia.

Mr. FISH. I would likewise like to ask the Senator whether the deeds of cession executed between the Government and the other States did not contain similar restrictions as to the disposition of the lands?

Mr. MASON. The deeds of cession made by the various States contained various provisions. I think the one made by the State of Connecticut reserved the fee-simple and sold the land afterwards. The deed of cession between New York and the General Government may have contained the same provisions as that of Virginia. I think the terms of it were for the common benefit of all the States, or some equivalent expression. I confined my amendment to the State of Virginia, because I thought it incumbent upon me to bring the attention of Congress to this compact made with her in reference to the lands, so far as she ceded them.

Mr. FISH. It would be utterly impracticable to put into operation the prohibition of this amendment, should it be enacted, as it is impossible at this day to tell what lands were ceded by Virginia, and what were not ceded by her. The claim of Virginia at that time was very extensive in its territorial limit; but it was very doubtful as to the larger portion of what was claimed. Other States, my own among the number, claimed title also to what was then known as the Northwestern Territory. The State of New York, foremost among the old States, executed a deed of cession containing a provision in terms similar to that which the Senator from Virginia has stated, and in effect that which the State of Virginia afterwards attached to its deed of cession. A committee of Congress, some time in the year 1781 or 1782, on the cession of the Northwestern Territory, had referred to it the claims of the several States. The State of New York, the State of Connecticut, and I think the State of Massachusetts, attended by their representatives before that committee, and submitted to it their claims. The State of Virginia refused to submit her title to the land, or give the nature or extent of her claim; and in her deed of cession she made it one of the conditions that the General Government should guarantee to the State all the lands claimed by her, and not embraced within the deeds of cession. That committee, in the absence or in the refusal on the part of the representatives from Virginia to submit her title, reported upon the title of the other States, and, among others, reported that the State of New York had the prior and best title to the territory lying out of her own proposed limits, north of the Ohio and south of the forty-fifth degree of parallel; and in reference to Virginia, also reported distinctly, and recommended the refusal to accept the grant proposed by the State of Virginia, on the ground that that State asked Congress to guarantee her land to which she had no title.

I do not desire at this time to enter into any discussion on that question. My object was merely to interpose a claim for New York to which she is fairly entitled, of having been the first to tender and execute a cession of lands, the title to which at that time was recognized by the Committee of Congress, and of having had the best title to the Northwestern Territory. If the Senator wishes a vote upon his amendment now, I am inclined to think that I shall vote for it, if he will so modify it as to embrace the land ceded by the other States.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia asks and demands in the name of the Commonwealth that he represents, that her compact of cession of any interest which she may have had in the western lands, shall not be violated. I hardly need say to that Senator, or the Senate generally, that I shall be the first to hold up my hand against any such violation; that I cannot, under any circumstances, be induced to vote for a proposition which shall violate any of the early compacts, as such, which were entered into between the States and the General Government; that if there were any State in the Union which I could be induced to procure a violation of such stipulations against, Virginia would be the last; and I will not attempt, under any circumstances, to violate a compact which that ancient and honorable Commonwealth has entered into. The patriotism of Virginia, ancient and modern, the chivalry of her sons, ancient and modern, forbid that any such thing should be attempted. But allow me, Mr. President, to say I think, if the Senator holds that there is any danger of a violation here, he is grossly mistaken. That no such attempt is made here, nor will this bill violate any such provision, is very clear to my mind.

Sir, let me say to that Senator, that after his State passed the law of 1783, with the provision in it that he read to the Senate, she made another, a subsequent, a different compact with these States. She ratified and confirmed the Constitution of the United States, which, in so many words, if it conflicts—though I hold it does not conflict with it—would abrogate this original compact, because it expressly, in words, authorizes this Government “to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States.” That was a later and subsequent contract, a subsequent agreement of the Confederation that this Government should dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations concerning the land. First, while we were a mere Confederation, under the articles, she put in that provision. Then we were poor; then we were weak; then we were contracting debts, or had just contracted debts, to acquire an independent, national existence; but after that was over, when the gloom of the Revolution had disappeared, and the bright effulgence of the political noonday sun was shining upon us, she came forward and said, we should have unlimited power to dispose of the lands ceded by her, as well as by others. Does Virginia propose to repudiate that latter contract, or will she admit that the latter one supercedes her former enactment, her former stipulations? Sir, the latter contract does supercede the former, if there were a conflict; but I hold there is no conflict.

Mr. President, the Senator says that this is an agrarian measure.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to ask the Senator whether the Government would not be constitutionally bound by the compact with the State of Georgia? That State ceded the land out of which has been formed the States of Alabama and Mississippi with like conditions. Now, how can the constitutional question apply to the subsequent contract made with the State of Georgia?

Mr. PETTIT. Very well, when that comes properly in my way, I will attend to it. I rose to reply briefly to a few remarks of the Senator from Virginia, and that question is not before the Senate. The Senator from Virginia says that this is an agrarian measure. Well, sir, if this measure, which holds out inducements to the citizens of the United States to acquire the realty, the ownership of the soil, to identify themselves with the soil of the country, tends to agrarianism, then I should go for the measure which would consummate it entirely, and would be the perfection or pattern of agrarianism. I only would to God I had the power—for I would not hesitate to exercise it if I had it—to compel every American citizen to own a piece of the soil of the country. By so doing I need not say to you I should give her a defense and strength which she could not have under other circumstances.

Give the man an interest in the soil, let his children know that they shall own it, and he may well bid defiance from all invasion abroad, and turmoil and revolution at home. I would carry it to the full extent of agrarianism, if in my power. I repeat, I would compel men to own soil whether they lived upon it or not.

Sir, it is a common saying, it is cant, I may properly observe, to talk of agrarianism and of the Gracchi—those lovers of their race who desired that men should become rural occupants of the country. If to desire that men should be possessors of the soil, coupling patriotism with an interest, making them an ardent, enduring, and available defense in time of need; if to desire that men should have the means by which they could, with little industry, draw from the soil itself the necessary sustenance for them and their families be agrarianism, then I am an agrarian, and to the fullest extent. But, sir, it is not. That term is applied odiously, and as a term of derision and contempt to those who would divide up the present individual ownership of soil among persons who have it not, and cannot acquire it. Some Senators here may have large possessions, more than they can cultivate and dispose of; and there may be people who, per force of law, would divide it out to those who had none to cultivate. But that is not my feeling or desire. I sympathize with no such movement.

Now, let me say to the Senator from Virginia, that if he is desirous of maintaining the provisions of the deed of cession, of the act of the Legislature of Virginia of 1783, I will go with him to the fullest extent, if he will put in this provision as it ought to be. If, instead of saying that the bill shall not apply to the lands of Virginia, he will put in what I propose, I will not object. I will not go into the question of whether Virginia then, or in modern times, has arrogated a little more than justice might always warrant her in doing. I will not go into the question of whether she arrogated to herself the ownership of all the lands, even to the western ocean. I will not contest her right before this tribunal to the ownership of all these lands. If, however, the Senator will amend his amendment so as to make it read, that this act of Virginia referring to it, and the clauses of the Constitution, shall not be violated, then I will go with him, and vote for the amendment; but when he says that the bill shall not apply to the territory northwest of the river Ohio, I shall dispute the right of Virginia now, or at any time, to put any such restrictions upon it. She had no right to do so; she never pretended even to do it.

Mr. MASON. The terms of the amendment are, “the lands ceded by the State of Virginia.”

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator amend it as I have proposed, by saying, provided, that this act of Virginia, this deed of cession, this compact, as he calls it, between Virginia and the United States, shall not be violated? If he does, I shall be with him, and then we shall see whether the courts, if it shall be necessary to resort to them, will determine that a grant of lands under this bill is a violation of it. Sir, it is no violation, and it never was; and there is not a court in the Senator's own State but would hold it idle to set up such a pretense or claim.

The Senator says he wants to maintain the compact inviolate. Then let us reaffirm it. I am ready now, and I hope all my successors here may be ready, to affirm and reaffirm the engagements into which our ancestors entered. If Virginia has reserved to herself a right that is inviolable, we cannot change it, but we must give her the full benefit of it. Let the amendment be so amended as to provide that this compact, this deed of cession, shall not be violated, and then, I say to the Senator, I will vote for it upon the yeas and nays; but as long as he shall persist in saying in his amendment that the act shall not apply to the territory northwest of the Ohio river ceded by Virginia, I cannot agree to it. That is making a new law. I am willing to confirm the old law; and if the Senator has any question about that, he will certainly accept my proposition.

Sir, I do not know that I desire to say anything further on this question. I earnestly ask the Senator to put his amendment in the form I have suggested, so that it shall be an express reservation, so that it shall not violate any compact entered into by Virginia and the confederated States. Let the Senator so amend his amendment.

Mr. MASON. I prefer to have it in its present form.

Mr. PETTIT. He will not amend it. Then I move an amendment to this effect, to make it read:

Provided, That no compact entered into between the State of Virginia upon the one part, and the United States upon the other part, by deed of cession and acceptance, shall be violated.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President, I have but a few words to say upon this point, and then I shall leave the subject. That there was a disputed question as to the rights of the States under the Confederation to extend their charters indefinitely westward to the Pacific ocean, is a historical fact which we all know. It was a question which almost divided this Confederation. The States not possessed of any such claim contended, and I think very rightly, that this whole country belonged to the King of England, and that, as it had been conquered from him by the common blood and treasure of the United States, it belonged to this Union. But the States of New York, Connecticut, and Virginia, who contended that their charters ran indefinitely westward, said “it is ours, and we will have it.” For a long while that question threatened the dissolution of the Confederacy. Some of the best resolutions ever passed and drafted, on that subject, were by the Legislature of Maryland, and they serve to show the excited feelings which prevailed at that moment.

Now, with respect to the claim of Virginia, the Senator from Indiana calls on the Senator from Virginia to show where it was. No man can show where it was, nor is it settled, nor can it be settled; for the moment you attempt to settle it, you interfere with the claims of Connecticut, and with the other States who contended that they went indefinitely westward upon their parallels of latitude, to the Pacific ocean. Therefore, the cessions made were all made indefinitely. None were designated by fixed boundaries, and you cannot now point out the cessions.

Well, sir, it was maintained at first on this floor, and is yet by some gentlemen, though I perceive the honorable gentleman from Virginia does not now maintain it, that the clause in the deed of cession, that the lands ceded should be for the common benefit of the States, meant the common benefit of the States respectively and individually, and that, therefore, the lands should be distributed to them. I do not mean to go into that question; but to my mind, nothing is clearer than that the common benefit there meant was the common benefit of the confederated States, and not the common benefit of the individual States. If the cession was for the common benefit of the Confederation, it is a question for us to determine what is the common benefit in the application of the land? I believe it is for the common benefit of this Confederacy that the land should be settled, and that by providing for its settlement we violate no claim of Virginia at all.

I hold in my hand, Mr. President, three acts of Congress, approved by General Washington, carrying into effect this very principle of granting the public lands gratuitously to actual settlers; so that when the honorable Senator from Virginia says that our ancestors never dreamt of such a provision, I show him that our ancestors first set the precedent, and established the principle. The first to which I refer is an act approved March 3, 1791, “granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers at Vincennes, and the Illinois country, in the territory northwest of the Ohio, and for confirming them in their possession.” I have no doubt that there are many other similar acts, but I have had my attention called to these three within the last ten months. This act grants to settlers in Vincennes, who are heads of families, four hundred acres of land, if they lived there before 1783, and then it further provides:

“That the heads of families at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, in the year 1783, who afterwards removed without the limits of the said Territory, are, notwithstanding, entitled to the donation of four hundred acres of land made by the resolve of Congress of the 29th of August, 1788; and the Governor of the said territory, upon application to him for that purpose, is hereby directed to cause the same to be laid out.”

It contains a further provision:

“That the Governor of the said Territory be authorized to make a grant of land, not exceeding one hundred acres, to each person who hath not obtained any donation of land from the United States, and who, on the 1st day of August, 1790, was enrolled in the militia at Vincennes, or in the Illinois country, and has done militia duty.”

On the 21st of April, 1792, another act was passed and approved by the President, entitled "An act authorizing the grant and conveyance of certain lands to the Ohio Company of Associates." It will be recollected that this company purchased a large tract of land. They did not pay for the whole, or receive a patent for the whole, but they received a patent for what they did pay for; and besides that, they had included in their patent one hundred thousand acres for the express purpose of granting it to every real settler above the age of twenty-one years. Here is the provision:

"That the President be, and he hereby is, further authorized and empowered, by letters patent as aforesaid, to grant and convey to the said Rufus Putnam, Manasseh Cutler, Robert Oliver, and Griffin Green,"

Who were the agents and directors of the company, to my personal knowledge,

"and to their heirs and assigns, in fee-simple, in trust for the uses above expressed, a further quantity of one hundred thousand acres of land: Provided always, nevertheless, That the said grant of one hundred thousand acres shall be made on the express condition of becoming void for such part thereof as the said company shall not have, within five years from the passing of this act, conveyed in fee simple, as a bounty, and free of expense, in tracts of one hundred acres, to each male person not less than eighteen years of age, being an actual settler at the time of such conveyance."

This act was approved April 21, 1792. No principle can be more fully established than this principle by that act. General Washington knew all about this compact, and so did the men associated with him.

Mr. WALKER. And he was a Virginian.

Mr. CASS. Besides that, there is another act, and I have no doubt that there are half a dozen such, in the book which I have before me, containing the land laws. I have scarcely had time to look into it; but here I find this provision for the relief of the settlers at Gallipolis, passed in 1795:

"That the President of the United States shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to cause to be surveyed, laid off, and divided, the remaining twenty thousand acres of land, residue of the twenty-four thousand acres, into as many lots or parts as the actual settlers of Gallipolis shall, on the ascertainment aforesaid, amount to, and the same to be designated, marked, and numbered on a plat thereof, to be returned to the Secretary of the said Territory, together with a certificate of the courses of the said lots; the said lots, or parts of the aforesaid tract, to be assigned to the settlers aforesaid by lot. And the President of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to issue letters patent, as aforesaid, to the said actual settlers, and their heirs, for the said twenty thousand acres, to be held by them in severalty, in lots, to be designated and described by their numbers on the plat aforesaid, with condition, in the same letters patent, that, if one or more of the said grantees, his or her heirs or assigns, shall not, within five years from the date of the same letters, make, or cause and procure to be made, an actual settlement on the lot or lots assigned to him, her, or them, and the same continue for five years thereafter, that then the said letters patent, so far as concerns the said lot or lots not settled and continued to be settled as aforesaid, shall cease and determine, and the title thereof shall revert in the United States, in the same manner as if this law had not passed."

Now, Mr. President, nothing can be clearer than that. My belief, as a member of the United States Senate, is, that this measure will increase the prosperity of the country in which the United States are interested. I believe it is for the public benefit, for the benefit of Virginia as well as the rest of us.

The honorable Senator from Virginia has repeated an opinion of the honorable Senator from Louisiana, as I understand, to wit: that this is class legislation. Here is an act applying to every citizen of the United States. But, says the honorable gentleman, they will not all take advantage of it. To be sure they will not, but does that make it a class measure? You may say the same thing of the sale of the public lands. You may say that is a class measure, because all will not buy. So of voting; it may be said it is a class measure, because all the people will not vote. My idea is, that that is a class measure which the law confines to a particular class of persons. That is not a class measure which extends to all, and may be embraced by all, though all do not intend to take advantage of it. It is liable to no such reproach.

But the honorable Senator says it is agrarian. As I said yesterday, that is a reproach which has been handed down to us from early times; but I believe that now, since the researches of Niebuhr, Roman history has been pretty well redeemed from it. It is no agrarian law. It is a provision for the settlement of a world, a vast tract of land which we retain in a state of nature, which, in my opinion, we have no moral right to retain forever, or almost indefinitely, in a state of nature. We hold it upon the condition pointed out in the words of Scripture, that it shall be replenished and subdued. Our only excuse, the only excuse for civilized nations for going to an undiscovered region, and taking possession of a country roamed over by savages, is to carry into effect this very injunction that the world was given to produce, and that he who prevents its produce ought to be allowed to have no certain property in it; and yet we, for the sake of this paltry profit, are to hold our lands out of cultivation for centuries! I do not think it proper, and I hope the Senate will concur with me in this opinion.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, without going into the general question of this bill, I shall endeavor to put the Senator from Michigan right in one very important part of the history of these cessions, which he has not given very accurately. It is very true that it was contended by the State of Maryland, and other States in the United States who did not hold land, that all the unappropriated lands in the United States, having belonged to the Crown of Great Britain, ought to inure to the benefit of the Confederacy. That doctrine was steadily and uniformly denied, and the Confederation asserted no right over those lands. She could not have done it at any moment. She never did it. It is true, Maryland remained out of the Confederacy until 1781, during the war, because she would not acknowledge that those lands which were to be won from the British Crown by the common arms of all, should not inure to the general benefit of the General Government; but I say that doctrine was repudiated by the Confederacy.

The doctrine of Maryland was not, as stated by the Senator from Michigan, that the title was uncertain. She did not proceed upon the idea that the rights of the States claiming land did not extend to the Pacific ocean, but upon the idea that inasmuch as those lands had belonged to the Crown of Great Britain, the Confederation should succeed to the rights of the Crown; and this claim applied as well to lands within the settled, defined, and undisputed limits of the States, as to those where the claims and rights of the States conflicted and clashed. There was no conflict in Georgia. From the Atlantic ocean to the Mississippi river, her claims to land extended; and Maryland contended that she had a share in the lands there as well as anywhere else. It is true that in the Northwest Territory, New York and Connecticut, as well as Virginia, laid claim to it; but that was not the ground upon which Maryland and the other opponents of the separate ownership of the several States put their objection to it. The territory was not ceded upon that ground. But the other ground to which Maryland adhered with great tenacity, was, that as the lands were wrested by the common arms from the Sovereign of Great Britain, they ought to inure to the common benefit of those who won them. This argument was urged with a great deal of apparent justice, and real justice too. They said that as they had fought to dispossess the British Crown to those lands, they were therefore entitled to participate in them, as well as the States within whose legal limits they existed.

Hence, the idea of the Senator from Michigan on that subject is wholly erroneous. As my colleague [Mr. Dawson] remarked, the cession of the State of Georgia is clearly and indisputably in force. It was made after the Constitution; and the cessions made before the formation of the Constitution was recognized by that instrument. Georgia ceded to the General Government her lands upon certain terms and conditions. It is altogether a mistake, on the part of the Senator from Indiana, to suppose that the Constitution, as a subsequent contract, overruled and altered the compacts by which the States ceded their lands to the General Government. The Constitution could not have done it even if there had been no express clause upon the subject, but there is an express clause affirming the validity of every compact made by the Confederation. I am, therefore, much astonished that the Senator from Indiana, who is usually very accurate on these subjects, should present the view which he has done. I say that, under the power "to make all needful rules and regulations," Congress would be compelled, even without the clause of the Constitution affirming the validity of the contracts of the Confederation to administer the land according to the terms on which they received it from the original holders.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. TOOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTIT. I did not answer the Senator's colleague fully, in reference to the question which he put to me, and I do not know that I am entirely competent to do so; but I will make this remark to him, and to the Senator on the floor who has yielded it to me: Georgia, in ceding her lands to the United States, subsequent to the Constitution of the United States, which expressly, in so many words, authorized Congress "to dispose of" the public lands, could not make a compact or an agreement in violation of it. Congress could not accept a donation, or surrender of title that would violate the Constitution, or on any condition, or any terms, in violation or contravention of the Constitution itself. The Constitution was over us all, over Georgia as well as the other States; and it expressly provided that Congress might "dispose of" the public lands, and, therefore, if there is any seeming discrepancy between them, the one must give way to the paramount law.

Mr. TOOMBS. The gentleman will find himself in a much greater difficulty now than he was before. As to the cessions before the Constitution, the Constitution is express that the new Government took all the burdens and contracts of the old one; and, therefore, I suppose the gentleman would not attempt to reply to the argument on that point. It is unanswerable. The Constitution expressly confirmed all the existing engagements of the Government at the time; and, therefore, it is not necessary to say anything on that point.

But the gentleman's idea in respect to the cessions subsequent to the Constitution, is somewhat novel and equally untenable. According to his doctrine, this Government can go on and make contracts with the States, or any other Governments, against the Constitution of the United States, and hold the fund derived from those contracts discharged from the obligations of the trust imposed on it. That is the position in which he puts this Government by his argument. Suppose this Government makes a contract, undertakes to carry out certain conditions, to do certain things, to exercise a trust, which she has not a right to do. My idea is that she cannot receive it at all. The gentleman's idea is that she can receive the fund, but is discharged from the conditions; that she takes the fund absolutely because she had no right to make the bargain! The case is this: He makes a contract by which he undertakes a trust, but he says, "I cannot undertake this trust, because I have no authority, and, therefore, I will take the fund discharged from the trust!" That is the gentleman's position. It leaves no room for argument. It is unnecessary to refute such an idea, and hence I say the whole doctrine urged as to the lands ceded by the States as unanswered and unanswerable.

Sir, I do not attach to this measure the importance that many gentlemen do. I do not think with some that it is a great measure for this age or any other age. I do not believe, either, that as much good or as much evil will result from it as some imagine. I do not think it a wise thing; I regard it in the main as a very foolish thing; but I have not attached much importance to it. It is not a new proposition at all. But there would be much less difficulty in the argument of the Senator from Michigan if we had unlimited and uncontrolled powers; if, in other words, this Government was absolute, unchecked, and uncontrolled, and had the lands untrammelled by any conditions whatever; but that is not the case. In the first place, Congress must exercise all its powers, in conformity with the authority under which it acts; and in the second place, the conditions contained in the trusts under which the lands were obtained are not discharged by the Constitution, nor can they be discharged in any other way than by the performance of the trust itself. That is the whole difficulty.

The Senator from Michigan contends that this measure is for the common benefit of the United States. How can that be? The deeds of cession of Virginia and of Georgia state that the land ceded should be for the benefit of all the States in a certain proportion, in proportion to the general charge on each State for the support of the Government. They not only declare it a trust fund expressly, but a trust fund upon specific terms. What do you do with that clause of the deeds of cession? The Senator from Michigan says you are to divide the lands for the general benefit of all, and that this measure will do it; but the deeds say you shall divide it for the benefit of all the States in a certain ratio. You may strike at that; but how can you get rid of it? The Senator has given us three or four speeches upon this question, and I have watched his argument closely; but he has uniformly got around this point, and no gentleman in favor of this bill, unless the Senator from Indiana has attempted to meet it. He has met it by declaring that the provisions of the deeds of cession are void. That is the only way in which they can be got around. That Senator is in the habit of meeting questions directly. He saw the necessity of getting rid of the terms of the trust; and, therefore, he says the Constitution is in conflict with it, and these deeds are clearly void; and hence we take the land without the conditions! I humbly submit that, as to the first class of cases, such as the cession from Virginia, the Constitution is conclusive that the deed is a valid contract. As to the second class of cases, if you accept the trust, but are incapable of holding it, it reverts to the grantor, or you must carry out the trust.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, I never supposed that the honorable Senator from Indiana, who is certainly a gentleman of legal mind and legal attainments, could have ventured to say that a compact made with the State of Virginia in reference to this property had been superseded by a political engagement, entered into by the States in common, in reference to the dominion over that property; and yet that is exactly the argument, and the only argument which he has adduced, to show that this compact is not binding.

Virginia claimed that this land was her property, and, as a State, she had dominion over it. She ceded that property to the United States under the Confederation. She ceded it as property, and made stipulations with the United States for what purposes that property should be used—that it should be used as a fund for the common benefit of all the States, in proportion to the charges upon those States. Those charges were then regulated by Congress according to a certain ratio. Afterwards, all the States established a new form of government, and to this new Government reverted the property held by the old Government. In this political engagement a doubt might very well arise, the new Government being one of limited power, whether dominion of any kind could be exercised over that property—I mean dominion as distinguished from the right of property. This political engagement simply was that the United States might “dispose of, and make all needful rules and regulations respecting,” their territory or other property. Now, says the Senator, that merged the original engagement. I submit to him at once that the difference is between a compact prescribing the conditions or the terms to which that property should be put, and a political engagement vesting them with dominion to exercise political power over the territory of which the property consisted. If that then be the only reason why this compact with the State of Virginia should not be regarded, I submit to the Senate, at once, that the reason is invalid.

Now, sir, a few words as to what fell from the honorable Senator from Michigan. That honorable Senator undertook to deny the title of the State of Virginia to this property which the Federal Government accepted, thereby admitting her title. Oh, says the Senator, there was some shadowy claim of these States, we know, to extend their limits to the Pacific ocean, but it was never exactly defined. Therefore, although the Federal Government recognized it as the property of Virginia, submitted to the stipulations contained in the deed of cession, never claimed any dominion or right of property in it whatever, except through this cession, as to this particular property, at this day that honorable Senator feels himself at liberty to scout the right of Virginia in general terms, by saying it was a shadowy, vague, and undefined claim!

Sir, I had hoped that honorable Senator was too practiced an American statesman, accustomed to regard the rights of the States, accustomed to regard the sacred obligations of contracts and com-pacts, whether entered into with the States or with individuals, to avail himself, as he does here, a representative of one of the States, of that property, and then to deny the title of the party ceding it. Yet that is exactly what he has done, and in a most vague, general, and indefinite manner, on his part.

Why, Mr. President, the acceptance by the United States of this very deed of cession was a recognition of the right of property of Virginia; and in that deed of cession the State of Virginia was allowed to make reservation of a portion of that very property which she ceded. Virginia ceded her whole title; but she stipulated that, in consideration of this cession of property, certain expenses which she had incurred in defending the ceded territory should be reimbursed. She further reserved one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land lying northwest of the river Ohio, to be given to General George Rogers Clarke's regiment, who had conquered the country. That reservation, made in the deed of cession, was submitted to, on the part of the Federal Government, and yet, here the honorable Senator from Michigan, without distinctly declaring or defining why, denounces the title of the State of Virginia, accepted with this reservation on the part of that State, of a portion of the very property thus ceded. But there was more reserved. It was further provided that, in case certain land which had been reserved on the southeastern side of the Ohio for military purposes should be found insufficient, the deficiency should be made up in good lands between the Sciota and Little Miami, on the northwestern side of that river. All these reservations were contained in the deed of cession, and acceded to and submitted to by the Federal Government; and yet, the honorable Senator from Michigan denies the title of Virginia.

Mr. President, I do not design nor desire to go into the argument of this measure. I have said that this was the commencement, as I understand it, of an agrarian policy; I have said that, as I understand it, it is the design on the part of the Federal Government to go into an agrarian policy. The honorable Senator says this is the old cry of an agrarian policy. He shuffles that off, too, before the American people in a vague and general way, and he cites here some instances where the General Government, for specific objects, ceded specific portions of land in waste and uncultivated territory as a precedent to show that our ancestors had done what it is here proposed to do. Why, sir, I can very well understand that there may be occasions when you put this property to good use by ceding certain portions of your territory to a particular class of settlers who will go there and settle on it and cultivate it.

Mr. TOOMBS. Will the Senator from Virginia allow me to make a suggestion on that point?

Mr. MASON. With pleasure.

Mr. TOOMBS. I forgot, when I was up before, to allude to the fact that the settlers at Vincennes and Gallipolis, to whom grants were made as stated by the Senator from Michigan, and especially those at Vincennes, were brought there under the French title; and when they were dispossessed of that claim under an adversary title by the Virginia claim being made paramount, it was thought wise to give them a title from our Government. That is the fact.

Mr. MASON. I have not attempted to look into that fact; but I am obliged to the Senator for the explanation which he has given. I can very well understand that, in wild and unsettled territory, under the doctrine of prudent proprietorship which has been spoken of, it would, in some cases, be wise for a proprietor to invite settlers, to a certain extent, to induce men to come, in order to subdue the wilderness and bring into the market his land. I can imagine that very state of things to exist now in the Territory of Utah, which has been taken possession of by a lawless band of people with peculiar institutions and habits, which we consider immoral and demoralizing. They are at a great distance from the settled portions of our country, on both oceans. And I can very well imagine a policy to give a portion of that land to a different race of people, who would go there and reclaim it; and who, in good time, might bring a sufficient number around them to drive out the other set. But what is the policy here? It opens all the public lands everywhere. There is no pre-tension or profession that the object is to give value to the public lands in the adjacent country. It opens them everywhere, in every State and every Territory where the public lands have been brought into market. Sir, if I recollect aright a measure of this kind originated with the celebrated Industrial Congress, which was held, I think, in the State of New York. I do not mean to say that this bill originated there, but that the policy of this bill originated there, and they said it was to give land to the landless, and homes to the homeless. Sir, if you can give land to the landless out of the public property, can you not give money to the moneyless, and bread to the breadless, upon precisely the same ground? If the only plea is that they have no homes, and that, therefore, you must give them a home, I ask, why are you not, exactly to the same extent, called upon to build them a house? If this is a plea that is good, I would almost assent to what I understand the honorable Senator from Indiana says would be a favorite policy of his, that this Government should have power, not only to give a man land, but to compel him to live upon it. I understood the honorable Senator to state that.

Mr. PETTIT. Not to compel him to live upon it, but to own it.

Mr. MASON. Compel him to own it.

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. Then the honorable Senator must assert a right which I do not understand can be asserted under the limited power of the Federal Government—a right in the Government to substitute the wisdom of the Government for the wisdom of the people; to say to a man “whether you believe your welfare and happiness will be promoted or not, by purchasing land, the wisdom of the Government is superior to yours, and we will compel you to purchase it and own it, and of course make it inalienable.” This bill proposes to make it inalienable as to certain purposes. This is the pretension on the part of the Government. Least of all should it be exercised by a Government like ours, of limited powers; but it is a pretension on the part of the Government to substitute its wisdom in the private pursuits of the people, for the wisdom of the people in those pursuits. Sir, I cannot conceive a measure that will tend more to demoralize the people of the country than the policy prescribed by this bill.

Mr. PETTIT. Will the Senator allow me to ask him, does he deny the power of this Government to give bread to the breadless?

Mr. MASON. The power of the Federal Government?

Mr. PETTIT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MASON. Undoubtedly I do, or a home to the homeless. Why, sir, I am very certain that the honorable Senator voted against the famous bill for the benefit of the insane, that was passed here during this session.

Mr. PETTIT. I did. I held it to be entirely inexpedient; but I did not consider that it was beyond our constitutional power.

Mr. MASON. I can only say, then, that the Senator construes the powers of this Government by a very different scale from that which I do. Mr. President, if this Government could institute a policy which was to control the high moral tone of the American people, I should say it would be to teach them to become independent by their own labor and their own exertion, and yet the policy of the bill is to paralyze the arm of labor, to make the people dependent on the bounty of the Government. You may well put into this bill a provision preventing its beneficiaries from alienating the property which they will receive under it, because there is not one in ten who will receive this bounty at the hands of the Government who will be able to retain it after he gets it. The effect of it upon that population will be to make them improvident and worthless. There is no American citizen, no man with an American tone, with that feeling of independence which ought to belong, and I believe does belong, to our people, who would not feel himself humiliated in receiving this bounty at the hands of the Government. Who is to get it? Does anybody believe that either old or young from the old States will migrate to the West to receive this bounty? No, no. It will be taken only by those in the neighborhood who have immediate access to it, and who will say “if it rains mush and milk, we will hold out the spoon,” or it will be taken by the immense horde of foreign immigrants now coming into this country, who are seeking a home.

Why, sir, look to the character of that immigration. They are sent over here by contract, embarking from Bremen, or some other part of the continent of Europe, and to be landed by contract somewhere in Minnesota or Ohio. They are sent through with their tickets, treated like bales of merchandise on the way, and are now dying in large numbers in the railroad cars of cholera, without any hand to give them even a drink of water. And that is the class of people whom we are to invite over to our shores, suddenly to be converted into American citizens, by giving them a proprietary right in the soil.

I have no feeling of unkindness whatever towards the foreigner. I would pass no law in the world that would throw any difficulties in the way of his coming here. When they do come, I would admit them under the laws of naturalization, as speedily as their own good would prescribe, to all the rights of the American people. But to hold out a bounty to them in advance, to bring them here by an exodus, as it is now properly styled, depopulating the old countries, and generally of the worst part of their population, in order to populate ours, is a policy which, I for one, confess that I more than dislike. Be that, however, as it may, I ask the Senate to give to the State of Virginia the benefit of the contract which she entered into with the United States in 1784; and unless they do give her that benefit, I want the State of Virginia to know what sort of Government it is with which she is associated, and how her rights are disposed of.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I think an examination of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia will show that there is some very serious difficulty involved in the proposition which he submits, and which he thinks to be so simple and unembarrassed. I ask the attention of the Senate to it. In that amendment the Senator proposes to exempt from the operation of this pending bill all lands that were ceded to the United States by the State of Virginia; ceded under certain conditions, which he sets out in the amendment extracted from the deed of cession. Now, I desire to call attention to the language of that cession:

"To be considered as a common fund, for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become, or shall become, members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of the said States, Virginia inclusive."

How? As a common fund for the use and benefit of those States, Virginia inclusive. How? "According to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and to be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever." Mr. President, it is undeniable that if any part of that stipulation is binding upon the Government now, each and every part of it is equally binding. If the obligation to retain this as a common fund for the benefit of all the States, Virginia included, be obligatory upon the Government, it is equally obligatory to observe the rule by which the equal and common benefit is to be determined, which forms a portion of the same contract; that is to say, "according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure." Now, what is meant by their respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure? Where will you find it under this Constitution and this Government? And to what did that clause relate in the cession of Virginia? The Senator from Virginia said he supposed it related to a charge according to population.

Mr. MASON. I did not say that.

Mr. BADGER. I understood the Senator to say that, but I will understand him not to have said it.

Mr. MASON. The Senator, I am sure, does not desire to ascribe to me what I did not say.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly not.

Mr. MASON. I said, that according to the Articles of Confederation, the general charge among all the States was apportioned among them, and they were to raise the money required by that charge, and pay it into the Federal Treasury; and these conditions were in relief to the States, proportionate to their charges.

Mr. BADGER. Precisely; but I understood the Senator to say, in proportion to population. That, however, is a matter of no importance. This session took place in 1783, and was accepted in 1784. At that time these States were united under Articles of Confederation, and the eighth article gives us the key to, and the explanation of, the language in that cession which has been referred to. What is it?

"All charges of war, and all other expenses that shall be incurred for the common defense or general welfare, and allowed by the United States in Congress assembled, shall be defrayed out of a common Treasury."

How was it to be supplied?

"Which shall be supplied by the several States, in proportion to the value of all land within each State, granted to or surveyed for any person, as such land and the buildings and improvements thereon shall be estimated according to such mode as the United States in Congress assembled shall, from time to time, direct and appoint."

Now, sir, according to the terms of the deed of cession from the State of Virginia, the lands were to be applied for the common and equal benefit of the several States, according to the value of all lands which were held by private proprietors,—those lands which had been granted or surveyed with the view of being granted for individual owners in each State. How was that value to be ascertained. By the several States? No; but in such manner as the United States in Congress assembled should direct.

Sir, if that was the rule, as undeniably it was, if this was the meaning of the condition or stipulation contained in the deed of cession, as beyond all question it was, I ask you how you can now apply, according to that rule, the lands ceded by the State of Virginia? It has been said, it was said by the honorable Senator from Virginia, in my eye, [Mr. HUNTER,] that if you sell the lands and put the money into the Treasury, and pay it out in defraying the general expenses of the Government, you accomplish the purpose of the trust declared by this deed of session. But is it not manifest you do not?

At the time when our forefathers were united together under this Confederation, they raised supplies for general purposes—how? Not by levying duties, for the Confederation had no power to do it; not by direct taxation under the authority of one General Government which filled the Treasury from the people directly, irrespective of any consideration regarding their connections with the States, but by a rule established by the eighth of the Articles of Confederation, that for all purposes which the Congress might deem necessary for the common defense and general welfare, the sums deemed necessary should be collected in each State according to the value of the lands in that State which had private proprietors, that value to be ascertained in a method to be directed by the United States in Congress assembled. Now, I pray you, sir, to observe and see whether it is not clear, when the State of Virginia said: "for the equal and common benefit of all the States, herself included," she did not mean that the lands were to be sold, the money put into the Treasury, and appropriated as Congress might think proper. To say, "herself included," in such a case, would be an absurdity. Suppose Virginia were now in the possession of vast funds, and were to present to the Government of the United States $10,000,000 to go into the Treasury, to be expended in the ordinary disbursements of the Government, for building light-houses, erecting custom-houses, building fortifications, providing for the support of an Army and Navy, and other purposes within the power of this Government, would it not be a pure absurdity to say "for the equal and common benefit of all the States, herself included?" How could she be excluded, if the meaning was that Congress should apply the money just as Congress might think proper, under the Constitution, for the advancement of the common good, according to the plan laid down by Congress, in subordination to that instrument?

Therefore, sir, the very words upon their face show that they meant something else. When we recur to the Articles of Confederation then in force, then constituting the only rule by which the States were charged in the Government, the thing becomes as clear as daylight; and hence, if that portion of the deed of cession from Virginia be now in force and obligatory, according to its terms upon the Government of the United States, it is a violation of it to apply the proceeds of these lands, or the lands themselves, in any other way than among the several States, according to the value of the granted or occupied lands of individual proprietors, to be ascertained in such a manner as an act of Congress shall provide. Virginia has, in this very cession, made this clear beyond dispute.

And, Mr. President, we understand perfectly well, from the nature of the organization that united the States during that time, wherefore that provision was made. The United States, in Congress assembled, wanted a million of dollars. They had no power to levy it on the citizens of this country. They had no power to impose a tax on the citizen of any State in the Confederation. Then what did they do? Why, the sum to be levied was apportioned between the different States, according to the value of the landed estate belonging to individual proprietors, ascertained in such manner as Congress might prescribe; and the subsequent part of the article, which I did not read, directs that that portion which fell to each State should be collected by the State, and paid into the common Treasury. We understand the language of the deed of cession of the State of Virginia, when we refer to that state of things, with clearness and certainty. It has a definite and appropriate signification. It meant this: that the United States, in Congress assembled, should dispose of these lands, should apply them among the different States, in the first place, by discharging such calls as the United States, in Congress assembled, might have made, under that article, upon the several States for their contribution towards the common Treasury; and I submit, as an irresistible corollary from that first proposition, if there were no such demands to be made, they should pay the money in the same proportion to the States for whose benefit it had been granted.

But be that as it may, sir, and however desirable it might be, or may be, in the judgment of some Senators, or in my own judgment, to carry out literally, and strictly, and according to the terms, the conditions of that deed of cession, it is manifest that it can no longer be done. What, sir, would you have the Congress of the United States pass an act now, sending forth assessors and valuers through the whole extent of this continent, for the purpose of determining the value of real estate held in private hands; and having ascertained it, of what use would it be? We call for no contributions. The States make no contributions to the Treasury now. There is no levy made on the States now, as under the Confederation, for certain specific sums of money ascertained by any rule. This Government collects its revenue by laws applicable to the inhabitants, reaching the individual, drawing money from the several States, or rather from their citizens, according to the amount of importations, or according to the amount of consumption of imported articles, and not at all according to the value of any estate, real or personal, in those States. So that, if you had the value of all the real property ascertained, how would it guide you in disposing of the proceeds of the ceded lands? It could not guide you at all. You would have no charge made upon any State to which to apply her share of what had been produced by the sale of those lands, in order to settle it, and give her a clear discharge from the common Treasury; for there is no charge against her.

Then what are you to do with it? I admit, you might take the proceeds and divide them among the several States, according to the value of the real estate in each State, so ascertained; but I must say, I think the expenditure necessary for making the ascertainment and valuation, would absorb a great deal more than the proceeds of the lands for many years to come.

Hence it is apparent, as I think, that the state of things in regard to the connection between the States—the state of things which bind us together under our present constitutional Union—being so altered from what it was under the Articles of Confederation, we must suppose our forefathers as a set of reasonable, intelligent, practical men—as they undoubtedly were—intended that a corresponding change should take place in the manner of disposing of the national domain. And, therefore, Mr. President, strange as it seems to the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. TOOMBS,] and the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. MASON,] I think there is nothing unreasonable, or inappropriate, or inconsequence in what was laid down by the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PERRY,] that a state of things having arisen under this Constitution in which the States, as such, were no longer called upon to contribute to a common treasury, in which the United States collect a common treasury by their own direct action upon the citizens, and not through the States, there being no longer such a thing as the eighth article of the Confederation remaining in force; and the public lands still remaining, it is reasonable, in the highest degree, to suppose that, when the new Constitution was adopted, containing a provision that Congress should have power "to dispose of" the public lands, it meant this: That whereas, heretofore, we were able to furnish a rule, and to insist upon the application of a rule, which was reasonable and just, we, the members of the Union, being liable to be called upon for contributions to be raised by ourselves according to a fixed rule; and whereas, we have now established a government having direct operation upon the people, no longer finding it necessary to call upon the States for contributions, and having a complex Legislature, embracing representatives of the people and representatives of the States, we devolve upon that legislative body to make such dispositions of the public lands, as well as of the other property of the United States, as they may deem just and reasonable for the general benefit of all.

Now, Mr. President, what makes this more clear, and, to my understanding, more properly the just and rational interpretation of this provision, is this: Whatever power, under the Constitution, the Congress of the United States has over the public lands, it has over all the other property of the United States, and whatever authority the Congress of the United States has not over any other property of the United States, it has not over the land; for in the Constitution the authority is conferred in precisely the same general words, "to dispose of" one class of property as another. No notice is taken of any residuary provisions in the old deeds of cession. No exceptions are made from the general grant. It was not thought necessary to exempt by words from this provision a reservation or condition in the deeds of cession, which, from the very nature of the case, had become impracticable and inapplicable; but the same general authority is given in identically the same words with regard to the lands, and to every other portion of the public property.

What was said by the honorable Senator from Indiana is, I think, justly said, that when Virginia, New York, and Connecticut ratified this Constitution—for it took effect in no State without the ratification of that State—they agreed voluntarily to devolve upon the Congress of the United States the power to dispose of all the public lands, and all the public property; and if, therefore, before she made that agreement, Virginia had a right to insist upon any restriction as to the power of disposition, she, by that agreement, voluntarily surrendered it. But, sir, if we have no general power to dispose of the public lands, we have no general power to dispose of any other public property of the United States. We had no power to dispose of the brass cannon which we gave to an association here forming that statue of Jackson, which now adorns one of the public squares of this city. It is idle to talk about amounts. It was the property of the United States. If there was a restriction upon a thing worth half a million, there was the same restriction upon a thing worth a penny. We have exercised that power.

Why, sir, with regard to the territory which was ceded to the United States by the State of Virginia, and which once formed a part of the District of Columbia, the seat of Government, that, I take it, was property of the United States. I do not recollect any clause in the Constitution of the United States which authorizes Congress in terms to recede, to give away, to sell, or to dispose of, any part of the ten miles square which might be ceded to the Union for a seat of Government. Not at all, sir. The only article in the Constitution upon that subject is that "Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of Government of the United States."

Then, this being the state of the case, the only power being in the first place a direct one, expressly conferred, of exclusive legislation, and in the second place, an implied one to accept a cession of territory, I ask you where we got the power to retrocede a part of this District to the State of Virginia? It was the public property of the United States. If not, to whom did it belong? To Virginia? It had belonged to her, but was ceded to the United States; and after the cession, I suppose it belonged to us. Where did the Government of the United States get the power to cede that territory, but under its common authority and control, first over the property of the United States, and in the next place over the eminent domain and sovereignty which belonged to the United States over the territory so ceded. It seems to me, then, sir, very evident that the rule under which the State of Virginia intended, and everybody at that time understood that she intended, that this property should be applied, is not the rule of paying the money into our Treasury, as our Treasury is now formed. The Treasury of the Confederation was a common Treasury contributed by the States as States, not according to their population, not according to their wealth, not according to any property that they had in them, except the one item of lands owned by individuals, either granted to, or surveyed for individuals, with the view of being granted. There was therefore a propriety in it, and we can well understand the application of it. It was this. The United States in Congress assembled charged the State of Virginia with $100,000 for the common defense, and for carrying on the war. But they have sold lands ceded by Virginia, the share of Virginia to which, according to the rule here laid down, would amount to $100,000. Then the compact required that the $100,000 should be applied in extinguishing the demand upon Virginia for the $100,000 directed to be collected by the United States in Congress assembled. That was the application of it.

Then I submit to you, sir, that the moment these requisitions should have ceased under the Confederation, if we suppose such a thing as that the United States in Congress assembled had merely attained power, without breaking up the whole form of the Government under the Confederation, to levy duties, and had no longer any necessity for drawing upon the States, the necessary and unavoidable result would have been, that the money raised by the sales of those lands should be paid over to the States, according to the rule laid down in that instrument. It would have been the only possible method of disposing of them consistently with the terms of the deed of cession.

We cannot carry that out now. Nobody proposes to make a survey, and examination, and estimate of all the lands in the United States, in order that we may determine what is the value of the lands held in the States by private owners. But you say you discharge the obligation by putting the proceeds into the Treasury, and expending them in such manner, at such places, for such purposes, and in such amounts, as Congress may direct. Sir, you do no such thing, according to the rule given in the deed of cession. I say not but that that may be a very proper and allowable mode of applying them; because I hold that under this Constitution Congress has the power to dispose of these lands as Congress pleases—the right to dispose of them for all purposes of general utility to the whole nation. But if that be so, then Congress has a rightful power to dispose of them in such manner as Congress may deem best calculated to promote the harmony, the general interest, and the common welfare of our common country.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, this bill has already occupied a great deal of the time of the Senate. There are but about two weeks of the session remaining unexpired. I will not overrate the importance of the bills which have to be acted on during that time. All the appropriation bills have to be acted upon. I am anxious to dispose of this bill. If a majority of the Senate is in favor of the measure, I would not throw a straw in the way of its passage. If, on the other hand, there be a majority of the Senate against it, it is important that we should now know it, and that we should have an end of it. I propose, therefore, in view of the importance of the business which remains to be transacted, and which cannot be transacted if this bill be debated de die ad diem, to move that the bill be laid on the table. I move this as a test question, and on the motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not in order. The motion is to lie on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware, which is usual.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is not in order while a motion is pending to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Then I ask unanimous consent to make the suggestion. It is a privilege which has always been accorded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to make a statement or suggestion to the Senator from Delaware. Is there objection? ["None!" "None!"] The Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I suggest, then, to the Senator from Delaware, whether it would not be better to make a test question on the motion to postpone to December next.

Mr. CLAYTON. I prefer having a test question on the motion to lie on the table.

Mr. FISH. I merely wish to state that my colleague, [Mr. SEWARD,] who is absent, would have voted in favor of this bill on all motions tending to affect the main question, but he has paired off with the Senator from Pennsylvania; [Mr. COOPER.]

Mr. WADE. Upon the final vote on this bill, I agreed to pair off with the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MORRIS.]

Mr. BADGER. This is a final vote, a test vote.

Mr. WADE. I think I ought not to vote on this motion, and I shall not do so.

The question being taken by yeas and nays on the motion that the bill lie on the table, resulted—yeas 24, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Houston, Hunter, Mallory, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, and Toucey—24.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Atchison, Bell, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Geyer, Gillette, Gwin, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Pettit, Rockwell, Sebastian, Shields, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Walker, and Weller—27.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PEARCE. Some two days ago, when I was making some remarks to the Senate, I alluded to the case of Pollard's lessee vs. Hagan et al. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. CASS] pronounced the opinion which I read to be an obiter dictum, and of no value. Since that time I have been looking over the reports, and I find that a case was decided in 1850, in the opinion of which, given by Chief Justice Taney, I find this language:

"The whole question upon the ordinance of 1787, and the acts of Congress extending it to other territory afterwards acquired, was carefully considered in Pollard vs. Hagan 3d Howard, 212."

That is the case from which I quoted.

"The subject is fully examined in the opinion pronounced in that case, and with which we concur; and it is sufficient now to refer to the reasoning and principles by which that judgment is maintained, without entering again upon a full examination of the question."

It is very true that the point in dispute in this case was not the point in dispute in that; but the reasoning and arguments of the judge who delivered the opinion in that case are here referred to without objection, and with the statement that his opinion is fully concurred in. That is sufficient.

Mr. CASS. The case was not before the court, and was not argued before the court. It was not necessary to the point in contest, and what right, therefore, had the court to make a decision on so solemn a question as the exemption of the public property from taxation, when it was not before them?

Mr. BADGER. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Messrs. DOUGLAS, WALKER, and others, called for the yeas and nays.

They were ordered; and being taken, resulted as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Butler, Clay, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fessenden, Fish, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Geyer, Gillette, Houston, Hunter, Johnson, Mason, Norris, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, Toombs, Toucey, and Wade—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Allen, Bright, Brown, Cass, Chase, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Gwin, James, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pettit, Rockwell, Rusk, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, and Walker—21.

So the motion was agreed to; and
 The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 20, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF A PAPER.

Mr. COBB. I have a paper in my hand which relates to a case now pending in the Land Office. It is the petition of certain citizens of north Alabama. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw it from the files of the House, for the purpose of having it presented there.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

POSTAGE ON NEWSPAPERS.

The SPEAKER stated the first business in order to be the motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill to amend an act entitled an act to amend an act entitled "An act to reduce and modify the rates of postage," was laid upon the table; upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. Can I withdraw the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman's motion to reconsider was made yesterday, and it cannot be withdrawn after that day. There is a special rule on that point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken in this. The gentleman may withdraw his motion to reconsider the day it was made, or that succeeding, so that any other member may have the right, under the rule, to renew it. The gentleman can withdraw his motion to reconsider to-day.

Mr. WHEELER. Then I withdraw the motion to reconsider, as well as the one to lay that motion upon the table.

THOMAS C. NYE.

The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. JONES, of New York, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, reported back Senate bill (No. 307) entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas C. Nye, with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. OLDS. I would be glad if the gentleman would first allow me to report to the House the post route bill, of which I gave notice yesterday.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from New York submit in regard to the bill which he has reported?

Mr. JONES. I ask that it may now be put on its passage. That its object and extent may be fully explained, I ask that the Clerk may read the Senate report.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If I understand the bill, it proposes examination and ascertainment of the losses sustained by a particular individual in consequence of the passage of the law of 1845, for the reduction of the postages of the country. Prior to the passage of that law, when a bidder for a particular route obtained the contract and superseded the old contractor, he was, by law or custom, compelled to take the horses, harness, and stages of his predecessor at valuation. The law of 1845, reducing the postages, repealed that portion of the law, and left afterwards no obligation, on the part of the new contractor to take the stock of the old one.

This bill is to indemnify a contractor for the losses he is alleged to have sustained in consequence of his successor refusing to take his stock. It will open the door of the Treasury, if passed, to thousands, nay millions of dollars of claims. This is the pioneer bill, which will be made the precedent for all the others. On it all the others hang.

Those contractors who failed to get their contract extended, had all their property, horses, coaches, and stock, of every description, to dispose of, and I cannot see why the Government should be subjected to damages in all these cases in consequence of the law passed in 1845.

Again, it is proposed, when the amount of damages is ascertained, that it shall be paid, and makes an appropriation for that purpose; and the rules require that it shall be considered first in Committee of the Whole House. It is certainly at the head of a very large class of cases, which will be brought here if this is successful; and it should undergo a tolerably thorough examination before it is acted upon.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee as raising a question of order?

Mr. JONES. I do.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from New York what amount is involved in this bill?

The SPEAKER. A question of order has been raised, which it is the duty of the Chair to decide. If the Chair understands correctly the language employed, the bill does make an appropriation, and by the face of the act the money would be drawn from the Treasury and paid over to the parties, which brings it within the rules requiring bills making appropriations of money to be first considered in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I ask that it may be referred to the committee on the Private Calendar. If I could have the privilege, I should like to make that reference.

The SPEAKER. It being a private bill, it would go upon the Calendar. It would need no vote of the House, unless objection be made.

The bill was then referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

REFERENCE OF MEMORIALS.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I rise to change the reference of certain memorials and petitions, which I think have been referred to the wrong committee. I refer to the petition of the Hon. Mr. Maxwell, of Florida, a member of this House, for the construction of a railroad in the State of Florida, which has been referred to the Post Office Committee. I wish, further, to ask that the reference of the memorial of the Legislature of Iowa, which has been referred to the same committee, may be changed to that of the Committee on Public Lands.

I ask still further, that the reference of the petition for the construction of the Philadelphia, Fort Wayne, and Council Bluffs air-line railroad which has been referred to the same committee, may be changed to that of the appropriate committee. All petitions of this character have been heretofore referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I make this request of the Chair, as I understand it is the duty of the Speaker to see that the proper reference is given to all such petitions and memorials.

Mr. OLDS. I object to the motion of the gentleman at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York raises a question of privilege as to the duties of the Chair in reference to petitions and other matters referred under the rules of the House. From the character of the paper or papers sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the Chair would have no hesitation in deciding that if his attention had been given to them, it was his duty, under the rule, to have given them a different direction to that which they have taken. "It shall be the duty of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to take into consideration all such petitions, matters, and things touching post offices and post roads, as shall be presented, or as shall come in question and be referred to them by the House; and to report their opinion thereon, together with such proposition relative thereto, as to them shall seem expedient." "It shall be the duty of the Committee on Public Lands to take into consideration all such petitions, matters, and things respecting the lands of the United States," &c.

The duties of each of the standing committees of the House are prescribed by the rules of the House; and the Chair has referred to these two Committees on Public Lands and the Post Office and Post Roads, simply for the purpose of saying that the matters referred to by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JONES,] would have been, if the attention of the Chair had been drawn to them, referred to the Committee on Public Lands and to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Then again:

"Members having petitions and memorials to present, may hand them to the Clerk, indorsing the same with their names, and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and such petitions and memorials shall be entered thereon, subject to the control and direction of the Speaker."

Now, whether the Speaker, by this authority, may have a right to withdraw, by his own order, and change the direction of these misdirected papers, is the question. The Chair doubts that he is authorized to exercise such a power.

Mr. OLDS. Can I be heard a moment in relation to this question?

The SPEAKER. With pleasure.

Mr. JONES, of New York. The gentleman from Ohio will excuse me for one moment. I ask for the reading of the second rule, and the note appended thereto, showing that this proposition is a debatable one, unless the Chair so decides.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it would, to a limited extent, be a debatable proposition.

Mr. JONES. Well, I wish the 2d rule to be read, together with the note appended thereto, because I think it is the duty of this House to see that the business which comes before them be referred to the appropriate committees.

The rule was read, as follows:

"He (the Speaker) shall preserve order and decorum; may speak to points of order in preference to other members, rising from his seat for that purpose; and shall decide questions of order, subject to an appeal to the House by any two members—April 7, 1789; on which appeal no member shall speak more than once, unless by leave of the House."

Mr. JONES. Now, I ask that the note may be read, unless the Chair decides that this is a debatable question, because I wish to have the views of the House thereon.

The note was read, as follows:

"Difficulties have often arisen as to a supposed discrepancy between the appeal contemplated in this rule and that referred to in rule 35. There is no discrepancy. The question of order mentioned in the second rule relates to motions or propositions, their applicability or relevancy, or their admissibility on the score of time, or in the order of business, &c. The 'call to order' mentioned in rule 35, on which, in case of an appeal, there can be no debate, has reference only to 'transgressions of the rules in speaking,' or to indecorum of any kind. See also rule 51, in which debate on an appeal, pending a call for the previous question, is prohibited."

Mr. JONES. This is a proposition merely to change the direction of a memorial, and therefore I think it is a debatable proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly chooses to regard it as such, inasmuch as he was himself involved in the matter, the rules having made it his duty to superintend the distribution of the business presented under the rules, and therefore he was pleased to be heard thus far upon the subject.

It will be for the House to determine what disposition they will make of the matter, the memorials having been referred, and the attention of the Speaker not having been drawn to them, otherwise he would have given them another direction.

Mr. OLDS. I am not at all tenacious as to what course these papers shall be made to take. I only desire that the House shall pursue its customary policy in regard to any order which it may make in reference to them. It is a customary thing for a great many memorials, upon any particular subject, to be presented to the House, and it is a customary thing, under the rules of the House, for members of this House to give those memorials different directions.

Let me give an illustration directly in point. During the last session of Congress, while the present Speaker was the occupant of the chair, there were forty or fifty memorials presented to this House with reference to the Wheeling bridge. Now, what was the question involved in those memorials? The Supreme Court of the United States had ordered that bridge to be taken down. Some of those memorials were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; a portion of them were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and a portion of them went to the Committee on the Judiciary. They were all couched in precisely the same language; and they were all referred under the rules of the House, under the direction of the same Speaker who now occupies the chair.

Well, what did they ask? They all asked one thing, and that was, that the Congress of the United States should declare the Wheeling bridge a post route. Was that what they wanted in fact? Not at all. They wanted to legalize the structure of the Wheeling bridge. It was purely a judicial question. But it had been referred, under the rules of the House, to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and that committee, it is true, reported a bill declaring the Wheeling bridge a post route, although you had a post route already in existence from Washington to Columbus, Ohio, passing over this bridge. But in so doing they declared that bridge a legal structure. It involved a legal question—a decision of the Supreme Court.

Well, when the report of that committee was introduced into this House, the question was raised how the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads had come into possession of that question, as it was purely a judicial question, and more properly belonged to the Committee on the Judiciary. The Chair decided that, inasmuch as the subject was referred to that committee, through the memorials, they had the right to take cognizance of that subject-matter.

Now, here is a memorial sent to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. That the House may fully understand the matter, I will send it to the Clerk that it may be read.

The Clerk commenced the reading of the memorial, but was interrupted by Mr. HUNT. I have not been able to hear very well what has been going on; but I understand there is something wrong in the mode in which the business of the House has been transacted. I understand that it is now proposed to bring up certain matters that look for an appropriation of land, and to put those matters before the House irregularly, which, according to my view of parliamentary law, is an abuse of the parliamentary law of this House. For instance, the committees of this House have proper duties assigned to them.

Mr. OLDS. I rise to a question of order. I have the floor. I ask that the memorial may be read.

The memorial was read, and is as follows:

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, respectfully ask your honorable body to pass a law establishing a mail route by railroad, from Fort Wayne, Indiana, via Leon and New Boston, in Illinois, Westfield and Washington, in Iowa, to the city of Council Bluffs, in said State. That to facilitate the construction of said road, and the establishment of said route, and to secure the speedy and safe transportation of the mails and troops of the United States upon the same, there be granted to the States through which the same may pass, alternate sections of lands, in the same manner that grants have heretofore been made to the State of Illinois, and other States, upon such terms and conditions as Congress may direct.

Mr. OLDS. Now, Mr. Speaker, the point I wish to make is this: that in that memorial there were matters belonging appropriately to the Post Office Committee. Now, sir, although it may also contain matters appropriately belonging to another committee, yet I hold that the Post Office Committee had the right to act upon it.

Mr. PECKHAM. Will the gentleman tell me when that memorial was referred to this committee?

Mr. OLDS. Three or four days ago.

Mr. PECKHAM. Was it not yesterday?

Mr. OLDS. No, sir.

Mr. LETCHER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio if this railroad matter has not been before the Committee on Public Lands; whether they had not agreed to report a bill, but transferred the matter to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the purpose of getting it before the House at an earlier day?

Mr. OLDS. I can answer the gentleman so far as the facts are concerned; but I cannot answer him so far as the inference is concerned. I understand that this matter has been before the Committee on Public Lands, and that they have agreed to report a bill. But I do not understand that when the Committee on Public Lands, in their turn, ceased to occupy the floor, there was any understanding between that committee and the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads by which matters before one committee were to be transferred to the other committee. I do not know that there was any such understanding between any members of the two committees. So far as the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads is concerned, I can speak certainly, and I say there was no such understanding.

Mr. LETCHER. I did not assert that there was any such understanding between the two committees.

Mr. OLDS. Well, I assert that there was not.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not pretend to gainsay the gentleman at all. But I ask him if it was not true that this petition had been sent to the Post Office Committee within the last two or three days, for the purpose of allowing that committee to undertake to report a railroad bill?

Mr. OLDS. That is the very point I was endeavoring to illustrate. I had the memorial read that I might illustrate it.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to have the names signed to that petition read. The memorial has been got up in this city.

They were read, as follows: John Bell, Thomas Tiger, Silas Ramsey.

Mr. LETCHER. One other question and I shall not further embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. JONES, of New York. What is the date of the memorial?

The CLERK. July 17th, 1854.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. OLDS. I am willing to answer all questions put to me.

Mr. LETCHER. What I wish to inquire is this: Has the chairman of the committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, or any other member of that committee, notified beforehand that such a memorial would be presented?

Mr. OLDS. I can only answer for myself. I did have notice that a matter of that kind would be presented to the committee. Is the gentleman satisfied?

Mr. LETCHER. That will do.

Mr. MILLSON. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. OLDS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLSON. I should like to ask the gentleman what evidence, what documents and papers, were before the committee, and whether notice was given to the committee of the purpose to consider these various applications?

Mr. OLDS. I am happy to find, Mr. Speaker, that the Virginia members on this question are coming up on one side of it; and I want to put the question directly home to them; I want to know how it was that they, at the last session of Congress, voted to sustain a report from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads legalizing the Wheeling bridge structure? That was a purely judicial question. Virginia was a unit then, and raised her voice on the other side—and why? Because the Wheeling bridge was within the State of Virginia. It was a question affecting the interests of Virginia. And although I would not assail that State—for I have stood by her on all occasions—yet it does seem strange to me that she should so earnestly oppose the reference to the Post Office Committee of a proposition to make a post route through the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, couched in precisely the same language used in the memorial in reference to making a post route of the Wheeling bridge, where a post route already existed. I ask why it was that the gentlemen from Virginia did not rise on that occasion and say that it was the duty of the Speaker of the House to order that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads should be discharged from its further consideration, and that it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will beg the gentleman from Ohio to yield to him a moment. It will be recollected by the gentleman and the House, that the Chair did not undertake to decide that he had the power to withdraw papers from committees and give them different reference.

Mr. OLDS. I did not so understand the Chair at all.

The SPEAKER. Papers are referred under the rule. The Chair stated that, by the rule, it was made his duty to see that proper reference was made of papers. Every gentleman will at once see that it is scarcely possible for the Chair to look at each and every paper presented during the session, and also attend to his other duties. His attention, at all events, was not called to this matter.

Mr. OLDS. That is the point, and I was going on to say that the Chair acted correctly throughout.

The SPEAKER. The papers were referred, but they were not referred in open House by vote of the House, and cannot therefore be brought back here by a motion to reconsider. Under the circumstances, however, the Chair holds that it is proper in him to receive the motion which has been submitted by the gentleman from New York, for the withdrawal of these papers, or rather that the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be discharged from their further consideration, in order that they may be referred to another committee.

The Chair has made this statement that each member might know what was exactly before the body. He thinks, under the circumstances, that the committee may be discharged from the further consideration of the papers, in order to give the House an opportunity to give them the direction which seems to it most proper. The Chair thought some gentlemen did not understand the question before the House.

Mr. OLDS. I did not at all complain of the course pursued by the Chair. I think that the Chair has been perfectly fair. What I desired to illustrate, was what the parliamentary courtesy of the House should be in a case of this kind. Now, if a matter referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads contains a proposition properly belonging to that committee, have not they cognizance of it? And will anybody now undertake to deny that this memorial does not contain such a proposition, although it may also contain propositions which do not belong to that committee?

What should be the course which the House should pursue in regard to this matter? If the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads attempt to report to this House upon any matter which the House itself shall not deem as belonging appropriately to that committee, then will be the time for the House to check the committee. If the memorial contains matter that does belong to that committee, so much of that memorial should be left in the hands of the committee. Does the House suffer any detriment in pursuing a course of this kind? Not at all. You are not withholding from the Land Committee business which properly belongs to that committee, because you have hundreds of these petitions, and they are legitimately referred to that committee also. The House suffers no injury by permitting these memorials to remain in the hands of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, so long as they contain matter legitimately belonging to that committee; and it will be time for the House to act, and act understandingly and courteously, when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads shall undertake to make a report based upon memorials referred to them that do not legitimately belong to them.

Mr. MILLSON. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] without answering the inquiry put to him just now, has alluded to the course of the Virginia delegation in reference to the Wheeling bridge bill. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio if he thinks there was anything wrong in the course of the Virginia delegation in regard to that bill?

Mr. OLDS. I will answer the gentleman with great pleasure, by saying that I think their course was entirely right, fair, and honorable.

Mr. MILLSON. If the course of the Virginia delegation was right in the Wheeling bridge case, I shall not, until their course is impugned, undertake to defend it. Then the question recurs to the inquiry I first put to the gentleman from Ohio, and that is, whether there were any papers and documents before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads sustaining this memorial, dated the 17th of July; and if so, whether there was any special notice given to the members of the committee that the subject contained in the memorial would be investigated by that committee.

Mr. OLDS. I will answer the gentleman frankly. The reason why I have referred to Virginia upon this occasion, is, that with me Virginia is good authority. I have been taught to live and move and breathe under the resolutions of '98 coming from Virginia; and when I come into this House sustained by the authority of Virginia, I think I have good authority on my side. I have no complaint to make of Virginia with regard to the Wheeling bridge bill. I thought the act was right. I have only referred to this to show that I have the authority of Virginia, the mother of the resolutions of '98, to show that this memorial, referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, contains such matter that even Virginia, under the resolutions of '98, cannot object to that committee's acting on that portion of the memorial relative to the establishment of a post route.

Mr. MILLSON. I have not said a word yet in reference to the propriety of the reference of the memorial. I simply inquired whether any documents and papers were referred.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would inquire of the gentleman from Ohio if he understands that in the resolutions of 1798, there is a distinction made between structures in the air and those upon solid ground.

Mr. OLDS. I thought I was acting under the resolutions of '98 when I reported a bill to legalize the Wheeling bridge. That is a structure in the air. Is the gentleman answered? Now, one word with reference to the question propounded by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.] I cannot see the pertinency of that question. Was the Post Office Committee to refuse to act on the petition, because there were no papers accompanying it?

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLDS. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. The question I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio is this: whether it is not the custom of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to entertain petitions referred to them even with but one name subscribed, praying for the establishment of post routes throughout the country?

Mr. OLDS. Yes.

Mr. HOWE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question for information; will he permit me to do so?

Mr. OLDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOWE. I understand the gentleman from Ohio to take the ground that this memorial, or the subject-matter of it, is a pertinent subject for inquiry by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the reason that it proposes to declare these roads post routes, and hence it becomes an appropriate matter for the inquiry of that committee. Now, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to the fact which he surely must be familiar with, that there is already a law in existence which declares "that all railroads and parts of railroads which are now or hereafter may be in operation, be, and the same are hereby, declared to be post roads." I believe the gentleman himself reported the law.

Mr. OLDS. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio was well aware of all these facts. But that does not come to the point at all. The point is whether that memorial contains matter appropriately belonging to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Now, what do the signers of this memorial pray for? They pray for the establishment of a post route. Now, what is the duty of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? It is the duty of that committee to see whether a post route already exists over that very road. If a post route does already exist there, it is the duty of the committee to report the memorial back. But is it a reason why the matter should be referred to the committee on Public Lands, because a post route already exists over the same road? Not at all. The question is this, it is a naked, simple question: Does that memorial contain matter relative to the mail service of the United States, and to the post roads of the United States? If it does, then its appropriate reference, or at least the reference of so much of it as relates to this service and these roads, is the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It is for that committee to act upon it; it is for that committee to report upon it; and when it shall appear by the report made that the committee has gone outside of its legitimate duty, then it will be quite time enough to check them or to pass censure upon them.

Mr. DICKINSON. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. OLDS. Certainly.

Mr. DICKINSON. Is there any post route now over the road referred to in the memorial?

Mr. OLDS. I am glad the gentleman from Massachusetts has propounded this question; for the fact of his asking information on that point, shows the propriety of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads acting upon this very memorial. The gentleman admits, by the question, that he does not know whether there is a mail route there or not. And how is he to know that fact? Is he to go and investigate the matter for himself? No, sir. When a question of this kind comes before the House of Representatives, they refer it to its appropriate committee, and it is for that committee to report on it. This is one of the facts which the committee should look into and report upon to the House. The signers of this memorial pray for the establishment of a mail route between the points designated. Now, is it not the business of the committee to see whether there is a mail route there now, and report the fact to the House? The gentleman's question shows the propriety of such action in the matter.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield me the floor for one moment?

Mr. OLDS. For what purpose?

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to ask him a question.

Mr. OLDS. Very well.

Mr. JONES. Has not the gentleman reported a bill this morning for the establishment of post routes, or for the reestablishment of post routes throughout the country?

Mr. OLDS. I have not reported it yet.

Mr. JONES. Well, has not the gentleman asked to report it?

Mr. OLDS. There is such a bill lying on my desk.

Mr. JONES. Well, I ask the gentleman whether he does not provide in that bill for the establishment of post routes between the points specified in this memorial?

Mr. OLDS. No, sir.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps not directly from one point in Illinois to one point in Iowa, as designated in the memorial; but does not the gentleman propose to establish mail routes through all that country, which will connect these points?

Mr. OLDS. Most undoubtedly, the bill proposes the establishment of mail routes which will connect with the route specified in the memorial, if that route be established. Perhaps it may even provide for a mail route right over this very road. The committee has not looked into the matter yet; it is a matter for them to look into hereafter.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. I want the gentleman to answer the question I put to him, and that is, whether he knows that there is a road now upon this very route? and if there is any road, what kind of a road it is?

Mr. OLDS. That very question shows the propriety of this matter going before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, in order that they may make themselves more familiar with this very question.

Mr. DICKINSON. I wish the gentleman would answer my question, and not evade it in this way. I want him to answer my question.

Mr. OLDS. The gentleman might ask me if there was a route to the moon, but I could not answer him without going to the Post Office Committee room and consulting the post route book.

Mr. DICKINSON. Well, if the gentleman cannot answer such a question as that, he is not fit to be at the head of the committee, and he ought to resign and allow some one to be appointed in his place, who can answer such a question.

Mr. OLDS. If the gentleman will, under the rules of the House, refer to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads a memorial, asking for the establishment of a post route from here to the moon, the petition will receive the respectful consideration of that committee, and they will make a report upon it to the House. [Laughter.] It would be a matter for that committee to inquire into.

Mr. BRIDGES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio if it was not the intention of the signers of that petition to obtain a grant of land for railroad purposes, under the pretense of getting a grant of land to establish a post route?

Mr. OLDS. I do not know that we, as a committee, have any right to speak or judge of the intention of the petitioners. This House can judge of the intention as well as we can, and it will be time enough for this House to pass its judgment upon that matter when it shall receive the action of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, upon the memorial which has been referred to it.

Mr. BRIDGES. My question is, whether the gentleman thinks that that is the object of the petition? Will he answer my question?

Mr. OLDS. Will the Clerk do me the favor to read this memorial again, for the benefit of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have heard the memorial, and do not want to hear it again. I want the gentleman to answer my question whether, in his judgment, that is not the object of the petition?

Mr. OLDS. I know very well what belongs to parliamentary usage and propriety, and when the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads shall make a report upon the memorial which has been referred to them, in reference to the intention of the memorialists, it will be soon enough to consider that matter. At any rate, the chairman of that committee has no right to give any construction to that memorial, until he ascertains the views of the committee itself.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the gentleman decline to answer the question which I have put to him?

Mr. OLDS. I never decline to answer a question; but when the gentleman asks me to declare my opinion in relation to the intention of persons who petition this body, I am not authorized to say what their intention may be.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask only for the gentleman's own construction of their intention.

Mr. OLDS. The direct language of the memorial is, that they may have a grant of land.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is not a direct answer. I want to know what the gentleman's construction is of the intention of the memorialists in regard to the point which I have indicated?

Mr. OLDS. I am not a fool; I know what they mean.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. The gentleman from Pennsylvania puts a very pertinent question to the gentleman from Ohio, and one which, perhaps, he is not so well able to answer as I am, and I will answer the question most cheerfully.

I state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and to this House, that I myself drew up two of the memorials which have been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I felt it my duty to do so, as a representative of the State of Louisiana. I not only drew them up, but put my name to them; and I proclaim that I did it honestly, and I apprehend that no man will question the integrity of my motives.

And not only that, the Senators from the State of Louisiana, feeling as deep an interest in this matter as I did, in order to secure the establishment of these roads in the State of Louisiana, put their names to them—at least one of them did to one, and the other did to both of them. I did it without any hesitation, without supposing that I was practicing any cheat upon the House or the country. Why, how can the House or the country be cheated by the course that has been pursued? I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to the House, that I pursued this course because I knew the Committee on Public Lands could not report these bills, and I believed the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads could. It is for the House to determine whether they can so report or not. It is for the House to determine whether the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads may have jurisdiction over this matter or not.

What matters it to the House whether it comes from the Committee on Public Lands or from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? So long as a bill comes regularly before the House, what matter is it whether one committee or another report it? How is the House cheated because one committee assumes jurisdiction over a matter which has also been referred to another committee? So far as I am concerned, I speak frankly, and say that I pursued the course which I did because I did not believe the Committee on Public Lands could report upon the matter during the present session, and because I did believe the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads could report.

The question then is simply this: Shall the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be allowed to have jurisdiction over this matter, or not? I will not go into an argument upon the propriety of giving them that jurisdiction, because the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OLDS] has already discussed the matter fully. If, under the rules of the House, this matter may properly go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, is anybody cheated because the matter is presented by that committee? Is anybody cheated because the committee have properly assumed jurisdiction over this matter, when the Committee on Public Lands might also have assumed jurisdiction over it?

Let me say here, that I believe it is competent for the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads to report this bill, notwithstanding the fact that it has been considered in the Committee on Public Lands, and notwithstanding the fact that they may now be ready to report a bill. But, sir, I will not detain the House longer. I merely rose to state to the House what my motives were in the course I have pursued in this matter.

Mr. OLDS resumed the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask my colleague to allow me to say a word by way of explanation.

Mr. OLDS. I have but a word to say, and will yield the floor in a moment. It appears to me that this House has raised a tempest in a teapot in reference to this matter. Why, every gentleman knows that memorials of this kind are every day referred to the different committees of the House. Sir, is there any fraud perpetrated upon the House? I appeal to the members of the House if, during the time I have held a seat upon this floor, I have ever attempted to perpetrate a fraud upon the House? No, sir; I have been open and frank in all my dealings, and I shall be so now.

The question before us is simply this: Does the memorial contain matter that properly comes within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads? Not, does it contain matter that does not belong to that committee. Why, sir, memorials are referred here every day that contain matter belonging to more than one committee. Your President's annual messages always contain matter belonging to different committees, and are referred, one portion to one committee, and another portion to another committee. Well, suppose the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads will do what it has never yet done, and what this House has never censured it for, viz: report on matters not referred to it—it will be time enough then to raise this question; it will be time enough to pass censure on that committee when it undertakes to pursue such a course. When that report comes in is the time to raise the question. When that committee reports a railroad bill is the time for gentlemen to come in with their propositions. The present is not the time. Let gentlemen wait and see what will be the action of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads on these memorials. It has been seen and admitted that they contain matters properly belonging to that committee. I only ask the House to take that course which seems to be parliamentary. Wait for the action of that committee. If it undertakes to report what does not properly belong to it, then let this House do what is done every day, and discharge the committee, and make a reference to another committee. There is no fraud on the House, none in any way. These memorials all contain prayers for mail routes. Under the rule of the House, they were referred to the committee to which they properly belong.

Mr. CAMPBELL. With my colleague's permission, I shall occupy a moment of the time of the House. I rise for the purpose of saying that I filed one of these memorials, and gave it the reference complained of. I did it openly before the House, as I do everything else. I presented them in the same way that I have presented others.

Now I assert, with due deference to the Chair, and others, that the reference is correct. The memorials embody these distinct propositions:

1. That there shall be a mail route declared;
2. That terms shall be imposed by which the mail transportation shall be forever regulated on the road;

3. That our troops and munitions of war shall be transported on the road; and

4. That there shall be a grant of the public lands.

Now, sir, my position is this: That memorial was properly referable, under the rules of the House, to either of three of the standing committees:

1. The Committee on the Public Lands; because it involved the grant of a portion of the public domain.

2. To the Committee on Military Affairs; because it proposed the transportation of our troops and munitions of war; and

3. To the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; because it not only proposed the establishment of a mail route, but declared that this company shall be forever required to transport the mails of the United States on such terms as Congress may impose.

And it is no small consideration, and a matter of no little importance to the people of this country, that the mails of the United States shall be forever transported on that road on such terms as Congress may impose, and why?

Let me refer the House, Mr. Speaker, in connection with the importance of this proposition, to the condition of things now existing in reference to the mail service between this point and the city of New York. You have a railroad between these two points, and a railroad which is in the hands of a company that refuses—yes, sir, refuses—to transport your mails under contract. It only binds itself from day to day; and we have information before us from the Post Office Department, that although it pays that company higher rates for the transportation of the mails than it does to any other company in the United States, yet it will not enter into a contract to transport them for a year.

I hold that the memorial embodying this important provision, that the company will obligate themselves to transport the mails forever, upon such terms as may be imposed by Congress, is one of sufficient magnitude to carry the memorial as well to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads as to the Committee on Public Lands. I will say again, that I hold that the proposition that this company shall be required to transport to that far distant frontier troops and munitions of war, would have entitled it to consideration before the Military Committee.

In the present condition of things in this House, knowing that the people of the West were deeply interested in those internal improvements, I saw fit to make my election of the committee to which I should send the memorial. I had a right to make my election. I did make it, and I sent the memorial to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. If there is any sin in it, I rise for the purpose of taking my share of the responsibility in presenting a memorial embracing these three important propositions. I chose to send it to that committee, and it has taken that direction.

Mr. HUNT. There is nothing about this matter for the smartness of debate to expend itself on, nothing about which gentlemen should twit one another to show their wit in controversy. It is a plain matter of parliamentary law and usage. Sir, I was asked to sign a petition to bring before the Post Office Committee a matter which had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, asking an appropriation of lands for certain railroads to be constructed in Louisiana. I declined signing that petition, because I thought the proposed action was indirect and irregular, for it was openly and candidly avowed by my colleague that he wanted the question in regard to the appropriation of lands to be made through the report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. This did not appear to me to be regular. My colleague said the responsibility would rest upon the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I said, no, sir, because the proceedings looked to a reference which is through the clerk who files it, and passes the paper to the committee. I said if the object were avowed to this House, that the matter concerning a grant of land, was to be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, the House would say it was not the appropriate committee, and that it appeared to me it would be taking the House by surprise, and bringing up irregularly a matter which could not be brought up if the House knew the object.

Each committee has its appropriate business; its fixed and specific duties under the rules. A reference through the clerk to a committee, stands on the same footing as a reference to a committee by order of the House. It must be a reference of appropriate matter; of business falling within the prescribed and well understood duties of the committee. The reference through the clerk is allowed for the purpose of facilitating and expediting business, and the presumption is that no reference will be made of inappropriate matter. To refer inappropriate matter is irregular and unparliamentary. It tends to confound business; to do away with a proper investigation and consideration of the particular subjects committed to the several committees; to open the door to favoritism and undue preference; to put it in the power of one committee to engross to itself the entire business of the House.

It is not enough to say that there is no fraud in the matter, because these things are to be spoken of hereafter, to be weighed, discussed, and acted upon. But the question concerns the reference of the memorial in the first instance. It is as to the regularity and propriety of the reference; and the responsibility in this case rests upon him who makes the reference through the clerk. Is it not so, sir? And hence it is, Mr. Speaker, that you have defended yourself, and said that, under the arduous duties of your office, you could not look over all these petitions, and see them properly referred. Now, I am as anxious as any member of this House to have these questions of appropriations of land for railroad purposes acted upon. But I will not lend my sanction to any indirect, irregular, and unparliamentary course to effect that which I desire. I know that, if the particular measure in which I take a local interest were before the House, the House would not refuse its sanction to it. I make no charge of fraud upon honorable gentlemen around me. Gentlemen say that this matter is not the business of the committee to which it has been referred.

Sir, a petition having several objects, may be referred to a committee having jurisdiction clearly as to one of them; and in that case the committee would make a proper report, according to its conscience and judgment, as to the objects not within their appropriate jurisdiction. And thus I do not say, that if the real bona fide object of the petition referred to the Post Office Committee, is to fix a post route, the committee may not properly charge itself with the petition, although the petition may look at the same time to other objects. But I do say, that where there is no road in existence, a reference, under a fiction, for the purpose of bringing before the House, another object—such as a grant of lands for a railroad—is irregular and unparliamentary and wholly inadmissible.

A motion was made the other day to suspend the rules, in order that a bill granting lands for a railroad might be taken up. A friend of internal improvements, I voted to suspend the rules. But the gentlemen were foiled in that case, and now they resort, in their desperation, to this mode of effecting their object. It was only the other day—on the 17th—that the petition before the House was referred to the Post Office Committee. This fact, in itself, shows the character of the present proceeding.

Mr. HENN. I wish to correct the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUNT. I derived my information from the Clerk of the House.

Mr. HENN. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. HUNT. Certainly, sir. I speak only for the public good.

Mr. HENN. My motion the other day to suspend the rules was not for the purpose of introducing the present bill, but another bill, asking for lands in Iowa for a railroad.

Mr. HUNT. Well, then, it was for the establishment of a road which conflicts with this one. This shows how these things are. Here one company from Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, are asking for the establishment of a post route over lands in Iowa, which an Iowa company is praying you to grant to them, for a railroad in their State. Do you not see in these facts the benefit of having every matter referred to its appropriate committee?

Now, in what I have spoken, I may, perhaps, subject myself to injurious remarks from the mean and low-minded, who may misrepresent me as acting against a course which might have led to the taking up of the bill, in which I have a local interest. But that consideration never deters me one moment in my path of duty. We are here to discharge the public duties confided to us, and we ought to do so in a regular and parliamentary manner.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. TAYLOR. Then I move to go to the business on the Speaker's table.

[Cries of "Oh, no."]

Mr. LETCHER. Will not the business come up in the morning hour to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It will come up the first thing in the morning hour.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to submit a motion, that the House proceed to take up those private bills which a Committee of the Whole House on Saturday last laid aside, and reported to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Objection being made, the motion was not entertained.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR] to withdraw his motion to go to the business upon the Speaker's table, in order to enable me to ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a personal explanation in relation to this memorial. It will be better for me to do it now than at any other time. I presented the memorial myself, and I think it is due to me to have the opportunity to make the explanation.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. EDGERTON. I wish to say to the House that I was not in the Hall this morning, when this question came up, and I desire to make an explanation—

Mr. WALSH, (interrupting.) I object to any explanation.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the gentleman cannot proceed.

Mr. TAYLOR. I renew my motion.

Mr. EDGERTON. Will this matter come up to-morrow, in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It will not, that being private bill day. It will come up in the morning hour, except upon private bill days.

Mr. EDGERTON. Whenever it does come up I desire to speak upon the propriety of the reference of the memorials.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing was here received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to ask the consent of the House that that message may be taken up, referred, and printed.

There being no objection, the following communication was laid before the House:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith transmit a report of the Secretary of State, and accompanying papers, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 6th of February last.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

Mr. BAYLY. I move that the communication, with the accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

The question recurred on Mr. TAYLOR's motion to proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. OLDS. I ask my colleague [Mr. TAYLOR] to withdraw his motion, to enable me to report the post route bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

Mr. LETCHER. I inquire of the gentleman from Ohio whether there is any section in this bill in relation to this route which has been under discussion this morning. Until I know that fact, I object.

Mr. OLDS. It contains nothing of that kind. It only contains the post office routes which are in existence now.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well; I withdraw the objection.

No objection being made, the bill was then read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A bill to establish certain post routes.

Mr. OLDS. I move to dispense with the reading of the bill through.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the reading of it.

Mr. OLDS. The bill will occupy seventy columns of the Globe, and it will take the Clerk two days to read it through.

Mr. JONES. I call for the reading.

Mr. OLDS. Then I withdraw the bill.

Mr. JONES. I object to that.

Mr. OLDS. Then I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to lay it upon the table; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York must be first put.

Mr. JONES. Before the question is put upon the motion of the gentleman from New York, I demand that the bill be read.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to know if it is the purpose of the gentleman from Ohio to put this bill upon its passage now?

Mr. JONES. Certainly that is the object.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I hope the motion to lay upon the table will prevail.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EASTMAN. Before that motion is put, will it be in order to move to recommit the post route bill?

The SPEAKER. It will not be in order, the previous question having been demanded.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. Is there not a motion pending to go to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table?

Mr. CLINGMAN. That motion was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair believes the motion is still pending. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR], who made the motion, indicated his willingness to withdraw it, to allow his colleague [Mr. EDGERTON] to make a personal explanation; but objection being made to the explanation being made, the gentleman from Ohio did not withdraw the motion. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS], then, by unanimous consent of the House, reported the post route bill, and demanded the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. Will the demand for the previous question bring up the bill in the morning?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. OLDS. Then the bill will be lost, will it not?

The SPEAKER. The bill will go to the Speaker's table, or somewhere else. The Chair will decide where it goes when the matter comes up.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been ordered to be engrossed. No question whatever has been taken upon it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I move to recommit the bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order while the demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. I will withdraw it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I now move to recommit the bill; and upon that motion demand the previous question. That will keep the bill before the House.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order, if the motion to lay the bill upon the table be withdrawn.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw the motion to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I submit the motion I have indicated.

The question was taken on Mr. CLINGMAN's motion, and it was agreed to; there being, on a division—ayes 95, noes not counted.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the Army appropriation bill. The pending question was on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] to increase the amount proposed in the following amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] to $400,000.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to sell and convey to the city of St. Louis, the ground on which the St. Louis arsenal now stands, with the permanent and fixed improvements: Provided, The city shall first pay into the Treasury of the United States the sum of $250,000, which sum, when so paid, shall be immediately applicable, and hereby is appropriated, to the construction of another arsenal, and the removal thereto of the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools, now in the St. Louis arsenal: And provided also, That possession of the said arsenal and ground shall not be delivered to the said city until after the new arsenal is built, and the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools aforesaid removed thereto: And provided further, That the cession, when made, and possession thereof delivered, shall remain forever a public park.

Mr. McMULLIN. I modify my amendment so that it shall propose an increase of the amount specified in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri to $300,000.

Mr. Chairman, since yesterday's discussion I have become more firmly convinced of the importance of this matter. If this public property is to be transferred to the city of St. Louis, I, for one, desire that the Government shall receive a fair equivalent. I should be willing that three disinterested commissioners should be appointed to negotiate a sale to that city. In my judgment, and if gentlemen will give the matter their attention they will concur with me, this property will turn out to be worth more than $500,000. I grant that the gentleman from Missouri is no more anxious to secure advantages to his constituents than the other members are for theirs, but I put the question to him, whether he, in his representative capacity, will vote to give away public property for $250,000 which the Secretary of War estimates to be at least worth $393,000?

I hold that, if this transfer should be made at all, the Government should at least receive something like a fair equivalent for the property. I beg the committee to bear in mind that, according to the showing of the Secretary of War, this property is worth not only $390,000, but that the Government must incur the expense of transporting the Government stores from that point to the place at which the new arsenal is to be erected. The expense required for this transportation should be taken into the estimate. It is not my purpose here to do anything which shall at all interfere either with the healthful condition of St. Louis, or retard its rapid progress. I desire to see that city continue in its prosperity. If gentlemen of this committee think it is right and proper to make this transfer, all I ask, as one of the Representatives of the people is, that the Government shall receive something like a fair equivalent for the property. It strikes me that $500,000 is not too much. I should be perfectly willing, as I before remarked, to have the value of the property settled by competent and disinterested commissioners, according to the best information in their power. I think that my amendment will place the mark too low. If it is the object of the gentleman from Missouri to have this transfer made, I ask him to come forward and accept the amendment, or if he or any other gentleman, feeling a direct interest in this matter, will submit a proposition to have the property valued by competent and disinterested commissioners, I will support it, and withdraw my amendment. I do not desire to embarrass unnecessarily or improperly the amendment of the honorable gentleman from St. Louis. It is my deliberate judgment that, if he shall succeed in carrying this amendment in the committee, he will fail to carry it in the House. In my humble judgment, it becomes those gentlemen who have been so pertinacious heretofore in carrying out the estimates of the Secretaries to adhere faithfully to that course now, and carry them out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Of course it is impossible for me to form any opinion other than that indicated by the report of the officers as to the value of this property proposed to be given to the city of St. Louis. It might be fairly assumed and acted upon by this House, that the public officers have given the fair value of this property.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 115.

But for the object which I have in view, and for the purposes of the argument which I am about to make, I will concede that this property is worth $500,000. Now, here is a proposition to sell a property worth either $250,000 or $500,000 to the city of St. Louis, and that proposition is opposed on the ground that it does not provide for the Government obtaining a fair equivalent value for that property. I concede that we are not receiving the full worth of it. But, I ask, what are we doing here day by day in respect to the disposition of the public property? Are we not squandering it in immense quantities, as compared with this proposition of the public property at St. Louis? There are now in the city of St. Louis, as I understand, one hundred thousand inhabitants, and it requires no great stretch of the imagination to believe that, within half a century from this time, there will be from five hundred thousand to one million of inhabitants in that city, surrounding this property. Now, sir, the argument I make is this: that while we are giving away public lands to foreigners, who are now here or are yet to arrive in this country; while we are throwing money away to build custom-houses, costing twice as much as we can collect in them; while we are giving away swamp lands to the States in which they are located; while we see, in the other end of the Capitol, a proposition to sell the public lands at twenty-five cents an acre, which everybody knows to be worth $1 25, or more; while we are doing all this, I do not see why the one hundred thousand inhabitants of St. Louis may not be entitled to have property which they wish to possess at half price. Why should they not have it at half price, as well as people traveling through the unsettled portions of the country? Here are one hundred thousand inhabitants in St. Louis, and prospectively, and not long hence, five hundred thousand; and I do not see why we should not treat with them, in the disposal of public lands, as liberally as we treat with all other persons for the public property of the United States, or, at least, for the landed estate of the Government.

Now, we have been referred to the arsenals which have been sold in other portions of the country.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. BRIDGES. The question I put to him is this, whether he is willing to have the public property of the United States sold at half price?

Mr. PERKINS. We are giving it away every day.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is not the question. I want to know whether the gentleman from New York is willing to have the public property sold at half price?

Mr. PERKINS. I will answer that question directly. In this particular case you have got a statement from one of the public officers as to its value, and you propose to sell this arsenal property at half its value, if you choose, to the one hundred thousand inhabitants of St. Louis, situated as they are, with the object of promoting their health and comfort. Now, I say this is a glorious and creditable gift compared with those which you are making every day. And I should support the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] even though I knew that the property was worth $500,000. Now, is the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRIDGES] answered? I repeat, sir, you are daily giving away the public lands to railroad companies and others. You are giving them away to a vastly less number of people than are to be accommodated by this particular favor, either at present or prospectively.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will it be in order for me now further to modify my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then I will modify it so as to make the amount $500,000.

The question being on Mr. McMULLIN's amendment, tellers were called for, and ordered; and Messrs. KERR and WHEELER appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 72.

So the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. PRESTON. I move the following as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON:]

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to cause to be sold to the highest bidder, for ready money, in a body, on a notice of thirty days in the St. Louis newspapers, the tract of land, 3 767-100 acres, on which the St. Louis arsenal now stands, together with the fixtures and permanent improvements thereon, and deposit the money received for the same in the United States Treasury; and the said money so paid in shall be, and the same hereby is, appropriated to the purpose of building another arsenal on the barracks tract: Provided, That the possession of said tract shall not be given to the purchaser thereof until after the new arsenal shall be built, and the arms, munitions, and tools now in the said St. Louis arsenal removed thereto, for which purpose a period of two years is allowed from the passage of this act: And provided further, That no sale shall be made for any sum less than the original cost of the land, building, and the permanent improvements thereon, which shall be stated by the Secretary of War, and published at the sale.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I would suggest to the gentleman that he modify his amendment so as to appropriate for the new arsenal so much of the money received from the sale of the old one as may be necessary.

Mr. PRESTON. I have no objection to that modification, but I desire first to address the committee upon the subject of the amendment. The reason why the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri did not meet with favor from the House yesterday, was because there was no evidence before the House as to the value of the grounds and improvements to be sold.

Now, sir, the Secretary of War, and everybody who knows anything about the locality of the present site of the arsenal, knows that it ought not to remain where it is. It is difficult to impose the proper discipline upon the soldiers there. It would be much better to have it removed to the Jefferson barracks tract, which is ten miles below the city, and five or six below the present arsenal.

Mr. BENTON. Ten miles below.

Mr. PRESTON. Very well, ten miles below. Now, sir, this amendment proposes that the grounds and permanent improvements shall be put up at auction and sold to the highest bidder, which I think is a fair way to dispose of it. The amendment also provides that the grounds shall not go into the possession of the purchaser until the arms, munitions, tools, &c., shall have been removed to the new arsenal, and reserves two years in which to build the new arsenal. Then it provides further, that the sale shall not be for a sum less than the cost of the grounds, and permanent improvements to be ascertained by the Secretary of War.

The Secretary of War is as anxious to remove the arsenal as the gentleman who represents St. Louis is to obtain a public park. Now, sir, I am willing to go just this far and no further: to sell these grounds to the city of St. Louis for the same price that they are worth to anybody else, and that the sale shall be in solido—in a body; and that is just what the amendment provides.

This proposition, it seems to me, is much better than that proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, to appoint a commission to ascertain the value of the lands; for commissions are very likely to give a favorable construction to the purchasing parties. It also requires the money to be paid down at the time of the sale. I prefer the public vendue, which requires the money to be paid down at the time of the sale. There is then perfect guarantee against any difficulty. Adopting the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana, I propose that the result of the sale shall go to the removal of the only arsenal which we have west of the Mississippi river to the Jefferson barracks tract, where there are now extensive buildings belonging to the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. My suggestion was not that the whole amount realized shall be appropriated to the building of another arsenal, but so much thereof as shall be necessary.

Mr. PRESTON. So I understand, though I know enough of the wants of the West in this respect, to know that all to be realized from this sale will not be more than enough to construct a proper arsenal at that place.

Another misapprehension exists as to the gentleman's amendment. Colonel Craig, of the Ordnance Corps, states the land to be worth $200,000, and the property now upon it $193,000, in all $393,000. In consequence of the growth of the city the arsenal is not now in a proper position. The money to result from the sale will go to the building of a better arsenal at a more proper place; and at the same time the city of St. Louis will be accommodated. It is not usual in auction sales to put limits as to price; but, inasmuch as we are about to do this at the invitation of St. Louis, I have put in the proviso that the auctioneer shall not let the property go until he receives a bid equal in amount to the precise cost of the ground and buildings as estimated by the Secretary of War. Unless the bidders go beyond that there is no sale at all.

The provision I regard to be right. It fixes a minimum by which the Government cannot possibly lose, while, at the same time, it carries out the wishes of the Department for the removal of the arsenal from its present location. It allows two years in which to remove the armory, and accommodate the city of St. Louis by converting those arsenal lands, no longer proper for the purpose for which they are now used, into a public park, provided she is willing to bid as much for them as anybody else at public outcry. I think the amendment is a just and proper one, and offer it in lieu of the one which was submitted by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. CRAIGE. I do not think that the amendment meets the objections which have been urged against that of the gentleman from Missouri. The objection to that was, that by it he proposed to give this public property, worth from $500,000 to $1,000,000, to the city of St. Louis for $250,000. The gentleman proposes to amend so that the property shall be put up at public vendue. If it were proposed to be put up at public auction in small tracts it might be sold; but what individuals will be able to go there and bid for it when it is worth $500,000 or $1,000,000. The amendment does not answer the objections made to the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PRESTON. The Colonel of Ordnance uses this language in regard to the value of the property:

"The site selected, and on which the arsenal now stands, contains 37 64-100 acres, and is estimated to be now worth at least $200,000, exclusive of the inclosing walls, interior fences, drains, culverts, and roads, which are valued at $30,000. The buildings which are constructed in the most permanent manner, are valued at $163,010. The arms and munitions of war of all kinds, together with the machinery, and tools in store and in use, are valued at $1,275,773. The proposed cession to the city of St. Louis, for the purpose stated in the resolution, will require the abandonment of the land, with its permanent and fixed improvements, and of the buildings, the value of which amounts to $393,010, and the removal of the rest of the public property."

Mr. CRAIGE. I was coming to that point. The committee has been misled, not only by the gentleman from Kentucky, but by remarks made yesterday in regard to this matter. The Colonel of Ordnance does not say that it is not worth more than $200,000. He says that it is at least worth $200,000, and the improvements $193,000. He does not say that the property may not be worth $500,000 or $1,000,000. Although worth more than $1,000,000; he might say that it was worth at least $200,000.

The property itself is worth, they say, at least $200,000. They do not say it is worth more than that—$500,000 or $1,000,000. I have no doubt, from the information I have received upon the subject, that the property, consisting, as it does, of thirty-seven acres of land, and surrounded by buildings, is worth at least $1,000,000.

The question being on Mr. Preston's amendment,

Mr. PRESTON demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. STUART, of Michigan, and PRINGLE, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 92, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I offer the following amendment: to strike out the words "in a body."

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order. The gentleman cannot strike out what has been already incorporated into the bill as an amendment.

Mr. SMITH. I will say to the Chair that—[Loud cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question pending.

Mr. FAULKNER. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know from the Chair whether we are to regard the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] as having been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been adopted.

Mr. FAULKNER. Then I suppose the bill is open for additional amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to have the ruling of the Chair understood by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that it is not in order to move to strike out what the committee has inserted in the bill. For if you could strike out one word, you might also move to strike out the whole section. Therefore it is clearly out of order to make such a motion.

Mr. CRAIGE. I rise to a point of order. I do not understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENTON] has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has not been taken on the amendment, as amended.

Mr. CRAIGE. Well, if not adopted, it is in order to move to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment, as amended.

The question was taken; and Mr. BENTON's amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I desire to move an amendment to that amendment.

Several MEMBERS. The amendment has been adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition of the gentleman from Virginia is not in order.

Mr. McMULLIN. Is it in order to move to add a proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to move to add a new section to the bill.

Mr. FAULKNER. I now move to amend the bill by inserting an independent section, succeeding that already acted upon.

Mr. McMULLIN. The gentleman will excuse me for a moment. I want to ascertain the facts in this matter. Do I understand the Chair as having decided that the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, as amended, has been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been adopted.

Mr. McMULLIN. Well, sir, I desire to correct the Chair in the matter.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

I was on the floor before the decision of the question was announced, and addressed the Chair with a view to offer an amendment to the amendment.

[Cries of "You were too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was not in order.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. Is there not an amendment already before the committee, offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER?]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia was about to move such an amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Then that is the question, I believe, before the committee.

Mr. McMULLIN. I beg to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Several MEMBERS. It is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. In what particular matter does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. McMULLIN. I will submit the question to the Chair. There are a dozen gentlemen around me who are prepared to state the fact to the Chair that I was on the floor and addressed the Chair before the vote on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri was announced.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. McMULLIN. Did I understand the Chair to say that I was not upon the floor, and that I was out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Virginia until after the question had been put to the committee, and the committee had decided it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I say that I was upon the floor before the question was put.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair did not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. FAULKNER offered the following amendment, to come in at the end of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates: a major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel, $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33; a sergeant-major, quartermaster-sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance-sergeant, $33; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, $21; to all other sergeants of those arms, $18; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $14; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, $13; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, $15; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $12; to a musician of artillery and infantry, $11; and to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $11; and to a private of artillery and infantry, $10: Provided, That the existing allowances shall be confined to officers when on duty, or who shall have left their posts by reason of wounds received in the line of their duty, and that officers absent from duty under any other circumstances shall only be entitled to the pay proper of their respective grades.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the surgeon general and paymaster general of the Army shall be allowed the pay and emoluments of a colonel.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That every soldier, who, having been honorably discharged from the service of the United States, shall, within one month thereafter, re-enlist, shall be entitled to two dollars per month in addition to the ordinary pay of his grade, for the first period of five years after the expiration of his previous enlistment, and a further sum of one dollar per month for each successive period of five years, so long as he shall remain continuously in the Army; and that soldiers now in the Army, who have served one or more enlistments, and been honorably discharged, shall be entitled to the benefits herein provided for a second enlistment.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That soldiers who served in the war with Mexico, and received a certificate of merit for distinguished services, as well those now in the Army as those that may hereafter enlist, shall receive the two dollars per month to which that certificate would have entitled them had they remained continuously in the service.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That non-commissioned officers, who, under the authority of the seventeenth section of the act approved March 3, 1847, were recommended for promotion by brevet to the lowest grade of commissioned officer, but did not receive the benefit of that provision, shall be entitled, under the condition recited in the foregoing section, to the additional pay authorized to be given to such privates as received certificates of merit.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to confer the brevet of second lieutenant upon such meritorious non-commissioned officers as may, under regulations to be established, be brought before an army board, composed of four officers of rank, specially convened for the purpose, and be found qualified for the duties of commissioned officers; and to attach them to regiments as supernumerary officers, according to the provisions of the fourth section of the act approved April 29, 1812, entitled "An act making further provision for the Corps of Engineers."

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the allowance to soldiers employed at work on fortifications, in surveys, in cutting roads, and other constant labor, of not less than ten days, authorized by the act approved March 2, 1819, entitled "An act to regulate the pay of the Army when employed on fatigue duty," be increased to twenty five cents per day, for men employed as laborers and teamsters, and forty cents per day when employed as mechanics, at all stations east of the Rocky Mountains, and to thirty five cents and fifty cents per day, respectively, when the men are employed at stations west of those mountains.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act granting pensions to widows and orphans of persons dying in the naval service, approved August 11, 1838, be extended to the widows and orphans of officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and soldiers of the Army of the United States, including volunteers and militia, mustered into the service of the United States.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. I understand that amendment is a regular bill, reported by a committee other than the one which reported the bill before this committee. I ask whether that bill contains an appropriation, or whether it is not to regulate the Army?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is to regulate military allowances, and clearly in order.

Mr. SMITH. But does it contain an appropriation? I ask that the 81st rule may be read.

Mr. PECKHAM. Before this matter is disposed of, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of order must be first disposed of.

Mr. PECKHAM. But this is offered as an additional section to the bill. I propose to offer an amendment to the bill itself, which, as I understand it, will take precedence of the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question of order must be first disposed of. The 81st rule will be read.

The rule was read, as follows:

"81. No appropriation shall be reported in such general appropriation bills, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law—unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several departments of the Government."

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the question before the committee. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia, as I understand it, is upon the ground that the amendment is not germane to the bill, this being an appropriation bill.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. The question of order is not debatable.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am not debating it. I am merely stating the ground upon which the amendment is not in order. The second ground is, that there is no law for the proceedings proposed by the gentleman from Virginia. And, in the third place, because the amendment proposes to regulate a certain class of pensions, which it certainly is not in order to do as an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the gentleman from Alabama to order. The question is not debatable.

Mr. FAULKNER. Do I understand the Chair to decide the amendment to be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides it to be in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose the Chair has reasons for his decision. I hope he will state them to the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I rise to a question of privilege. Before the question is taken upon the appeal, I move that the argument of the gentleman from Alabama be stricken out. [Laughter.]

Mr. SEWARD. I ask that the question may be stated by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is in order. From this decision the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] takes an appeal; and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I demand tellers upon that question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS, of Alabama, and PENNINGTON, were appointed.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was overruled, the tellers having reported—ayes 56, noes 65.

Mr. PECKHAM. I offer the following amendment:

And be it further enacted, That of the $340,000 hereby appropriated for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, only $40,000 be expended until otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HOUSTON. We have passed the paragraph to which this amendment has reference, and there is nothing to which it can attach properly; and therefore it is out of order.

Mr. PECKHAM. This is a regulation as to the time the appropriation should be made, and therefore it is not inconsistent at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. We have already passed upon the paragraph to which it relates, and the amendment is not in order.

Mr. PECKHAM. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. It is precisely like the case of yesterday, which was simply to reduce the amount.

The question was taken on the appeal; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. FLORENCE. I offer the following amendment:

And further, to pay such amount of arrearages as may be found to exist by an increase of the per diem, monthly, or annual compensation, or for work by the piece, or however it may have been or is executed, of all persons employed in the arsenals of the United States at Philadelphia and elsewhere, twenty five per cent. upon the amount heretofore paid them—commencing with the fiscal year July 1st, 1853; and such increase of twenty five per cent. compensation is hereby allowed to all the operatives, workmen, sewing-women, laborers, superintendents, and clerks, and is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Nobody can understand it.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order, that the amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. FLORENCE. Why is it not germane to the bill? Of course it is out of order, and simply because it awards justice to a meritorious and industrious class of citizens.

Mr. LETCHER. I raise the question of order; and if the gentleman is disposed, let him take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, if he decides the amendment out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the amendment out of order. Does the gentleman appeal?

Mr. FLORENCE. Oh, no, sir, I am not disposed to be obstreperous. I have had some experience in appealing from decisions of the Chair. If my amendment involved the expenditure of $500,000, I would probably succeed in overruling the Chair; as it is, I'll let it go, hoping at some future time to succeed in accomplishing the purpose I had in view in offering it. There are hundreds of persons in the employ of the Government in all branches of the public service; revenue, post office, and for supplies to the Army and Navy round and about Philadelphia, who ought to have the compensation now paid them largely increased. But the present, it seems, is not the time. Never mind. I trust, ay, confidently hope,

"There is a better day coming,
Only wait a little longer;"

I do not appeal from your decision, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I propose to amend the bill by offering as an additional section, the first section of Senate bill No. 119, to increase the pay of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and rank and file of the Army.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order. This amendment is not in order to the bill. The gentleman proposes to increase the pay of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot decide whether or not the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon is in order until it be read. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed.

The Clerk reported the amendment, as follows:

Be it further enacted, That the monthly pay proper of the several grades of the Army, hereinafter enumerated, shall be at the following rates: a major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel, $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33; a sergeant-major, quartermaster-sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance-sergeant, $23; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, $21; to all other sergeants of those arms, $18; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $14; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, $13; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, $15; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $12; to a musician of artillery and infantry, $11; to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $11; and to a private of artillery and infantry, $10. Provided, That the existing allowances shall be confined to officers when on duty, or who shall have left their posts by reason of wounds received in the line of their duty, and that officers absent from duty under any other circumstances shall only be entitled to the pay proper of their respective grades.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order on that amendment. It is in many respects the same as one which was decided out of order. This is out of order, because the bill under consideration is an appropriation bill proper, while the amendment is one to increase the pay and alter the organization of the Army.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I think it is in order. It is for contingencies to carry on one of the departments of the Government. I refer the Chairman to the 81st rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain the amendment, because it is in substance the same as that offered by the gentleman from Virginia, which was admitted by the Chair, but which decision of the Chair was overruled by the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PECKHAM. On what grounds does the Chair rule that amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Because the substance of it was contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, which the committee decided out of order.

Mr. LANE. Allow me to make an inquiry of the gentleman who has raised the point of order. I want to make an explanation.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman from Oregon permit me—

Mr. LETCHER. I object to this—we will all be wanting to make explanations.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask the gentleman from Oregon to withhold his amendment, and I will submit one for the same purpose in different terms.

Mr. LANE. Well, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER. I offer the amendment in this form:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $884,220 be appropriated for the support of the Army, as follows: A major general, $265; a brigadier general, $165; a colonel, $135; a lieutenant colonel, $115; a major, $95; a captain of cavalry, $85; a captain of artillery and infantry, $75; a first lieutenant of cavalry, $65; a first lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $57; a second lieutenant of cavalry, $55; a second lieutenant of artillery and infantry, $47; a cadet, $33; a sergeant-major, quartermaster-sergeant, principal musician, chief bugler, principal farrier, and ordnance-sergeant, $23; to each first sergeant of a company of dragoons, mounted riflemen, artillery, and infantry, $21; to all other sergeants of those arms, $18; to a corporal of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $14; to a corporal of artillery and infantry, $13; to a farrier, blacksmith, saddler, and artificer of dragoons, mounted riflemen, and artillery, $15; to a bugler of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $12; to a musician of artillery and infantry, $11; to a private of dragoons and mounted riflemen, $11; and to a private of artillery and infantry, $10; Provided, That the existing allowances shall be confined to officers when on duty, or who shall have left their posts by reason of wounds received in the line of their duty, and that officers absent from duty under any other circumstances shall only be entitled to the pay proper of their respective grades.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. We have passed over that part of the bill which makes the appropriation, and it is not in order now to direct how it shall be disposed of. The amendment is also a bill for the reorganization of the Army, and it is not in order to offer such an amendment to this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR. The gentleman is not in order, in debating the question of order.

Mr. JONES. I am only stating the question of order, and not debating it.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, we want to state questions of order too.

Mr. JONES. I say the amendment is out of order, because it provides for a reorganization of the Army.

Mr. FAULKNER. I want the gentleman from Tennessee to look at the amendment, and see whether it is not an appropriation, and, as such, strictly in order, according to the rules of the House.

Mr. JONES. We have passed that portion of the bill which makes the appropriation.

Mr. HOUSTON. And it is not provided for by law, and on that ground it is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I take an appeal from that decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order now, because, when he admitted it before, the committee overruled his decision.

The question being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was then put; and there were, on a division—ayes 77, noes not counted.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. PECKHAM offered the following amendment as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That of the $250,000 hereby appropriated for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, only $40,000 shall be expended until otherwise ordered by the Secretary of War.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order upon that amendment. We have passed the part of the bill containing that appropriation, and I submit that it is not in order to go back upon the bill.

Mr. PECKHAM. I offer it as an additional section to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order, upon the ground that it provides for an appropriation of money in reference to a matter which has already been passed upon by the committee.

Mr. PECKHAM. This amendment is offered in precise accordance with a decision made by the Chair yesterday, on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH] qualifying what the committee had before voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rejects the amendment upon the ground that it provides for the disposition of money which has been appropriated in a part of the bill which has been passed.

Mr. PECKHAM. Well, sir, I most respectfully take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. KERR. I would inquire if the amendment proposes to appropriate any money?

The CHAIRMAN. It provides for the disbursement of money.

Mr. PECKHAM. It merely provides for the disposition of money already appropriated.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes; and if members are allowed to go back in this way, we shall never get through with the bill.

The question now being, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. WHEELER demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was put; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 70, noes 30; no quorum voting.

[Cries of "Call the roll."]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit that the Chair has the right to count the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is not in order; the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called.

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly the bill of the House, (No. 95,) it being the Army appropriation bill, and having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called; and had directed him to report the facts to the House, with the names of the absentees.

The names of the absentees are as follows:

Messrs. Abernethy, Banks, Bennett, Bissell, Bliss, Bocock, Brooks, Bugg, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chase, Colquitt, Craig, Cumming, Cutting, Dawson, De Witt, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Edgerton, John M. Elliott, Engleth, Etheridge, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Gamble, Green, Grey, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hiesier, Hillyer, Johnson, J. Glancy Jones, Kidwell, Kirtledge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, Mace, May, Meacham, Smith Miller, Mordecai Oliver, Phillips, Reese, Richardson, Robbins, Rogers, Sage, Seymour, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, Alexander H. Stephens, John J. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Walker, Warren, John Wentworth, and Westbrook.

One hundred and seventy-three gentleman—a quorum—having answered to their names, the committee again resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee found itself without a quorum, the question was on the appeal taken from the decision of the Chair. There will be a recount.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I ask that the Chair will state the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PECKHAM] submitted an amendment, which the Chair decided out of order. From that decision the gentleman takes an appeal, and the question now is, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

Mr. ORR. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. Bocock and Cox were appointed.

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained, the tellers having reported—ayes 88, noes 36.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I rise to inquire whether an amendment, like the one I send up to the Clerk's desk, is in order? If it is in order, I would be glad to offer it; but if it is ruled out of order, I shall not take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The amendment was read, as follows:

And to a private of the dragoons and mounted riflemen eleven dollars, and to a private of the artillery and infantry eleven dollars per month.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am willing to waive the question of order, and allow that amendment to come in by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I cannot agree to it. Adhere to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair having been overruled by the committee with regard to what seemed to him to be a reasonable construction of the rules, cannot entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. FAULKNER. I have some further amendments to offer to the bill. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the following amendment:

That from and after the passage of this act, no officer of the Army or Navy, or person employed as agent by a disbursing officer of the Army or Navy, shall be a party to, or directly or indirectly have an interest in, any contract or agreement for the supply of any article, or for the execution of any work for any branch of the service in which such officer or agent belongs. And any officer of the Army or Navy who shall offend against the provisions of this act, shall, on conviction thereof before a court-martial, be cashiered.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no officer or agent of the United States shall pay for any article sold or work done contrary to the provisions of this act, and any contract or agreement made in violation thereof shall be null and void, and all articles delivered or work done in pursuance of any such contract or agreement, shall be forfeited to the use of the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That amendment, I think, is not in order. This is a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army, and the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia provides for officers of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. FAULKNER. From that decision I appeal.

The question was taken on the appeal, viz: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" and it was decided in the affirmative—ayes 90, noes not counted.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. FAULKNER. I offer the following as an independent section:

Be it further enacted, That the provisions of the first section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army, ending the 30th of June, 1851," approved September 28, 1850, granting extra pay to the officers and enlisted men of the Army serving in Oregon and California, be extended to the officers and men composing the garrison of the post of Fort Laramie, on the Oregon route, during the time they occupied said post; and that the amount which may be found due them under this act shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot receive the amendment, for the same reasons for which the other similar amendments were rejected.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman of the committee reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly House bill (No. 95,) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855; and had instructed him to report the same back to the House, with various amendments, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union must first be disposed of. They will be read.

First amendment:

Page two, line twenty-three, strike out the following words: "and horse equipments, $555,727 70," and insert: "Four hundred and eighty thousand three hundred and fifty-nine dollars and thirty-eight cents."

The paragraph, as amended, reads as follows:

For clothing for the Army, camp and garrison equipage, $480,359 38.

The amendment was agreed to.

Second amendment:

Page four, line sixty-five, after the word viz., insert the words "horse equipments," and in line seventy, strike out the word "thousand," and insert the words "and seventy-five thousand three hundred and sixty-eight dollars and thirty-two cents."

The paragraph, as amended, will read:

Horse equipments, the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, purchase of medicines for horses and mules, shoeing horses of mounted corps and repairing dragoon and rifle equipments, $375,368 32.

The amendment was agreed to.

Third amendment:

Page six, at the end of line one hundred and twenty-two, add the following proviso:

Provided, So much of all laws heretofore passed as authorizes the appointment of military officers to superintend operations at the national armories be, and the same are hereby, repealed; and from and after the passage of this act it shall be the duty of the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint a competent and well-qualified civilian as superintendent at each of said armories.

Mr. PECKHAM. I call for the yeas and nays upon that question, as I want to see how many there are in the House who will vote a direct want of confidence in the President.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Bliss, Bridges, Carcenter, Caruthers, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cullom, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dick, Disney, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Ewing, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsley, Macdonald, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, Mayall, Middleswarth, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shaanon, Shower, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—117.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Benson, Benton, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bugg, Campbell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Curtis, Dawson, Dickinson, Dowdell, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Farley, Hastings, Haven, Hill, Hunt, Roland Jones, Keitt, Knox, McQueen, Norton, Peckham, Pennington, Phillips, Preston, Riddle, David Ritchie, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, William R. Smith, David Stuart, Walley, and Israel Washburn—47.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Fourth amendment:

In line one hundred and twenty-four strike out the word "nine;" and insert "five," and strike out the word "two" and insert "one," so as to make the clause read:

For repairs and improvements and new machinery at Harper's Ferry, $35,100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Fifth amendment:

After line one hundred and twenty-eight insert: For military and geographical surveys west of the Mississippi river, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sixth amendment:

After the one hundred and thirty-fourth line, add: For the purchase of Barlow's planetarium, for the use of the Military Academy at West Point, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Seventh amendment:

After line one hundred and thirty-eight, insert: For continuing the explorations and survey to ascertain the best route for a railroad to the Pacific, and for completing the reports of surveys already made, the sum of $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Eighth amendment:

Add at the end of the bill: Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That of the appropriation of $50,000 for continuing the topographical and hydrographical survey of the delta of the Mississippi, with such investigation as may lead to determine the most practical plan for securing it from inundations, approved August 31, 1852, the sum of $5,000 may be applied, under the special direction of the Secretary of War, to the payment of any expenses connected with said survey and investigation incurred prior to the first day of July, 1852.

The amendment was agreed to.

Ninth amendment:

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine into and ascertain the amount of expenses incurred and actually paid by the State of California, in the suppression of Indian hostilities within the said State, prior to the first of January, Anno Domini 1854, and that the amount of such expenses, when so ascertained, be paid into the treasury of the said State: Provided, That the sum so paid shall not exceed in amount the sum of $924,259 65; which amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Tenth amendment:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to cause to be sold to the highest bidder for ready money, in one body, on a notice of thirty days in the St. Louis papers, the tract of land of 37 67-100 acres, on which the St. Louis arsenal now stands, together with the fixtures and permanent improvements thereon, and deposit the money received for the same in the United States Treasury; and the sum of money so paid in shall be, or so much thereof as may be necessary, hereby is appropriated to the purpose of completing another arsenal on the barracks tract: Provided, That possession of said tract shall not be given to the purchaser thereof until after the new arsenal shall be built, and the arms, munitions, machinery, and tools now in the said St. Louis arsenal removed therefrom, for which purpose the period of two years is allowed from the passing of this act: Provided, That no sale shall be made for any sum less than the original cost of the lands, buildings, and permanent improvements thereon, which shall be stated by the Secretary of War, and published at said sale.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to ascertain what I deem important in connection with that amendment. Is it in order?

The SPEAKER. The amendment is in order, having been reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SMITH. I just desire to know if, when the committees have incorporated an amendment into the bill inconsistent with the bill itself, the House have not the power to reject it as out of order?

The SPEAKER. The House has no such power.

Mr. SMITH. Cannot the House control the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Virginia rises to a question of order, and submits that the amendment now pending, reported from the Committee of the Whole, is not in order, upon the ground that it is not consistent with the bill. That may have been a good reason why it should not have been received in committee; but the Committee of the Whole must be its own judge of its own rules of order. This amendment having been reported by the committee, the Chair decides that it is properly before the House, and must be acted upon by the House as an amendment. The Chair thinks there can be no question as to the rule. The Chair, therefore, overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SMITH. Well, sir, I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair, but I think the House have the right to correct any error made by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is not competent for the House to correct errors that have taken place in committee. It is competent for the committee to judge of its own rules, and it must correct its own errors.

Mr. SMITH. Well, sir, I will call for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PECKHAM. Is there any amount fixed below which the property shall not be sold?

Mr. PRESTON. Yes, sir. The amendment provides that the property shall not be sold below its prime cost.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 77, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bliss, Boyce, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Cook, Corwin, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Edmunds, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Ewing, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Goodrich, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Knox, Lindley, McNair, Macy, Matteson, Mayall, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Norton, Parker, Peck, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Preston, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—77.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Booneck, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskey, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, John G. Davis, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, English, Florence, Fuller, Goode, Greenwood, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McQueen, Maurice, Maxwell, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peckham, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Walsh, and Hendrick B. Wright—81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PRESTON. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. ROBBINS and PRESTON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table, the tellers having reported—yeas 82, noes 74.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question then being "Shall the bill pass?"

Mr. BRIDGES demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. PRESTON demanded tellers on the yeas and nays; which were ordered; and Messrs. LILLY and WHEELER were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported thirty-three in the affirmative.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 93, nays 62; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Dawson, Eliot, Ellison, English, Farley, Faulkner, Flager, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Goodrich, Greenwood, Groh, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Houston, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Kurtz, Latham, Lindley, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Ready, Reese, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Sabin, Shower, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walley, Tappan Wentworth, and Hendrick B. Wright—93.

NAYS—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Ball, Bennett, Benson, Bocoock, Boyce, Bridges, Campbell, Caskie, Cobb, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmundson, Giddings, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hill, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Milson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, John Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, David Ritchey, Ruffin, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Trout, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wheeler, Witte, Yates, and Zollicoffer—62.

So the bill was passed.

The title of the bill was then agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to amend the title of the bill by adding "and to provide for railroad surveys."

Mr. HOUSTON. It is too late to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill has been agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the title of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Alabama will wait till he gets the floor to make his motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES. Yes; debate is in order; because the previous question does not operate on the title of the bill. Gentlemen should know what they are making questions about.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the proposition to amend the title is debatable, but in a very limited sense.

Mr. JONES. Certainly, sir. I merely wish to state my object in moving to reconsider that vote. My object is, as I was cut off from making a proposition to amend the title, that I may move to amend that title so as to make it indicate what the bill really is, to make it indicate that it is a bill to make appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year terminating 30th June, 1855, and to provide for certain railroad surveys.

The reason why I voted against the bill is, that as there is a provision in it appropriating money to make surveys of railroads throughout the country; and holding, as I do, that the Government has no power to make internal improvements—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I rise to a point of order. The remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee are not in order.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to debate the character of the bill itself, except in so far as the title is to be considered in that connection.

Mr. JONES. Exactly, sir.

The SPEAKER. The reasons why the gentleman voted against the bill are not in order.

Mr. JONES. Except that I may have an opportunity of making the title indicate what the bill is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the latter remarks of the gentleman to go to show that he voted against the bill because he thought certain provisions improper.

Mr. JONES. Exactly; because that appropriation for making railroad surveys is in it, and, in my opinion, improperly in it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will accept an amendment which I wish to offer to the title, if it is to cover everything, "and to pay California her expenditures for the Indian war."

Mr. JONES. I am perfectly willing to have that added.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. LETCHER. And on that I ask the yeas and nays.

On the call for the yeas and nays, the House was divided, and the Speaker announced 27 voting in the affirmative, and 123 in the negative.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers upon the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; and it was decided in the affirmative.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, notifying the House that the Senate had passed a resolution of the following title:

Senate resolution (No. 29) "for the confirmation of certain entries and locations of military warrants made in the State of Michigan."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented additional documents in relation to the claim of the heirs of Captain Thomas Dinsmore; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PATENT LAWS.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, the bill "to amend the several acts now in force relating to the Patent Office," was recommitted to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

LAND ENTRIES IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. STUART. I wish to ask the attention of the Senate this morning to enable me to introduce a joint resolution, the object of which is to correct a difficulty that has arisen out of a law which was passed at this session, creating a new land district in the State of Michigan. Prior to the knowledge of the change reaching the officers and persons in the neighborhood, certain military land warrants were located in the offices, to which the tract of country was, previously to the passage of that bill, attached. Those locations, without some future legislation, are not valid. I propose, therefore, now to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow me to introduce a joint resolution, proposing to confirm those purchases of land in all cases where the purchases are otherwise regular.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution "for the confirmation of certain entries and locations of military warrants made in the State of Michigan," and it was read a first and second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to resolve that the entries and locations of military land warrants made at the Ionia, Sault Ste. Marie, and Genesee land offices in Michigan, on or subsequent to the 20th of April last, of land which prior to that time, was situated in those land districts, but by the law of later date, was attached to a new land district, be confirmed, and that patents shall issue for them as in other cases, if those entries and locations are in every other respect regular and valid.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and the question was stated to be, "Shall it be engrossed for a third reading?"

Mr. DAWSON. I dislike very much to vote upon a proposition which I do not comprehend. This is presented to us without a report, or without a particle of explanation, so far as I have heard. I should be glad to understand it.

Mr. STUART. The Senator will pardon me. I did explain it to the Senate, but probably in the confusion which existed at the time the Senator did not hear me. I stated that, at this session of Congress, a bill had been passed creating a new land district in the State of Michigan, taking it from three original districts, and since the passage of that law certain purchases of land were made at the old districts by land warrants. These purchases are invalid by the law in consequence of the change of the land districts. The effect of this joint resolution is simply to make these purchases valid, provided they are in other respects so, and to save the difficulty of their having been entered at the old offices after the creation of the new districts. That is all.

Mr. DAWSON. That is satisfactory.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PRIVATE BILL DAY.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by him on the 15th instant:

Resolved, That the resolution of the 24th of January last, setting apart every Friday for the residue of the present session for the consideration of private bills, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not desire to interpose any objection to that resolution, but rise for the purpose of giving notice to the Senate that I shall to-morrow, during the morning hour, ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill to authorize the payment of certain claims for depredations and spoiliations during the hostilities with the Creek and Seminole Indians in 1836 and 1837. The resolution was agreed to.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. SUMNER and Mr. WADE. Let us get through with petitions.

Mr. HUNTER. I am afraid if I withdraw the motion we shall have some controverted petitions which will lead to a long debate; so that we may not be able to get at the bill. I hope the Senators will not press me to yield.

Mr. GWIN. I do hope, Mr. President, that we shall now determine whether we will consider the homestead bill any further during this session. If we are not going to consider it any further, it had better be postponed until the next session. If we do not intend to postpone it until the next session we ought to go on with it this morning. I hope that matter will be decided now, and for that purpose I wish to controvert the motion of the Senator from Virginia, although I should not otherwise desire to oppose it. I want the friends of the homestead bill either to pass it now, or to postpone it until the next session. If we determine to progress with it now, of course the motion of the Senator from Virginia ought to be voted down. If we do not intend to progress with it, the motion ought to be agreed to, and its adoption ought to be equivalent to postponing the homestead bill until the next session.

Mr. WALKER. I have a proposition which I desire to make this morning, not only to the friends of the homestead bill, but to the Senate generally. It is that we should take up the bill, that we should then postpone the further consideration of amendments in detail, let the bill rest as it is, and receive as a counter proposition, and take the sense of the Senate upon either one or the other of the measures which stand in antagonism to it—either that proposed by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BROWN,] or that by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER.] Let us take up the bill, and ascertain the sense of the Senate upon one or the other of these as a counter proposition to it.

As one of the earliest friends of the homestead bill in the Congress of the United States, I must say that, after what I have seen, I am satisfied, and I feel bound so to express myself, that it is not the sense of the Senate that the bill from the House of Representatives should pass. This is my conviction. If that be the sense of the Senate, it can easily express itself upon one of these other propositions. I think that we should take up the bill, and receive one of them as a counter proposition, take the sense of the Senate upon it, and abide by the result. For one, as a friend of the homestead bill, I am willing to do so.

Mr. GWIN. I hope, then, that we shall proceed with the consideration of the homestead bill, and that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] will withdraw the amendment which he offered yesterday, and which led to debate, and after that, that we shall have a direct vote on a substitute for the homestead bill, and see which has the greatest strength.

Mr. CLAY. I trust that that motion may prevail; and I pledge myself to that understanding. I shall withhold all the amendments which I intended to offer to the bill.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I appeal to the Senator from Virginia not to press his motion on this occasion. If he does, I shall be compelled to vote against it, and it would be with regret that I should be compelled to do so. I know the gentleman from Virginia has a high public duty to discharge, and that he has no motive to gratify but by the dispatch of the public business; but in this case, I regard it as a duty to proceed with the consideration of the homestead bill. We have now reached such a point that we must come to a result upon it to-day. I hope, therefore, we shall proceed to the consideration of the homestead bill, and either pass it or reject it.

Mr. HUNTER. If it be the understanding that the question shall be closed to-day, I withdraw my motion.

TEXAS DEBT.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have said that I should make no motion, nor vote upon a motion in any way tending to embarrass the homestead bill, and I shall not do so; but I made that remark in connection with the understanding that the bill reported from the Committee on Finance, in reference to the debt of Texas, should be disposed of. It was taken up yesterday morning and was debated. I hope it will be taken up again this morning, and I say now, as I said yesterday, if it occupies more than an hour, I will move to postpone it until tomorrow.

Mr. GWIN. I hope that the Senate will take up the homestead bill. I think we can get through with that in an hour, and get a vote upon it. I do not say this because I am opposed to the proposition of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not think we can dispose of the homestead bill in an hour; but if the Texas debt bill takes more than that time, I will move to postpone it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Say half an hour.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will say half an hour. I think we can dispose of it in that time, and if we do not, I shall be willing to let it go over.

Mr. GWIN. I made a motion distinctly to take up the homestead bill, to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking it up. What has become of it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) The Chair did not hear that motion.

Mr. WALKER. Certainly the Senator made it distinctly.

Mr. BADGER. There was another motion pending.

Mr. GWIN. I made that distinct motion.

Mr. BRIGHT. I hope the honorable Senator will withdraw it. I will say to him that if the Texas debt bill occupies over half an hour I will move to postpone it.

Mr. GWIN. We can vote upon the homestead bill in half an hour.

Mr. BADGER. The Senator from California is mistaken in supposing that we can vote upon the homestead bill in half an hour. I have already said, and I repeat, I shall adopt no course which will lead to the laying aside of the homestead bill, though I am opposed to it. I think the friends of the measure have a right to have it disposed of, but surely the motion of the Senator from Indiana is very reasonable.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill "to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850;" the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BRIGHT, to add to the first section of the bill as amended, on the recommendation of the Committee on Finance, the following:

Provided, That the interest on the debt embraced in this act shall be calculated and regulated by the existing laws of the State of Texas.

Mr. BELL. I do not propose to debate this subject, nor have I considered it with any care since about two years ago; but I wish to be informed with regard to certain facts, so as to be assured as to the grounds upon which I propose to give my own vote, and I will do it pretty much by way of inquiry of gentlemen who are better acquainted than I am with the foundation of this bill, as it is now presented to the Senate.

A number of gentlemen yesterday stated that this Government was under no obligation to pay the Texas creditors proposed to be provided for by this bill, except to the extent of the $5,000,000 which were appropriated by the compromise act of 1850.

If that were true, it would change the opinions and the impressions which I have entertained in regard to this subject; but I understand that there were, two years ago, when this question was presented, bond-holders, creditors of Texas, who had a mortgage upon the customs revenues of that Republic, before its annexation to the United States, to the amount of $8,000,000, or thereabouts. If I am mistaken in this, I wish those honorable gentlemen who yesterday took the position to which I have adverted, would put me right. Now, how is the fact with regard to the amount of the debts of Texas having a lien upon the customs revenues of Texas at the time she was annexed to the United States? And upon what ground do gentlemen say that this Government is under no obligation to pay those debts?

The amount of those debts in 1852 was what I have stated; but since that time I understand that the Attorney General of the United States has given his opinion in reference to another class of Texas creditors, amounting to some three or four millions of dollars; and he has decided that they come within the same category precisely—that is, that they were creditors of Texas, with a mortgage on the whole revenues of that Republic. This would swell the amount to eleven or twelve millions of dollars; and the interest upon these respective classes at this day would, added to the principal, make between twelve and thirteen millions.

Mr. PEARCE. I wish to correct the Senator. He is in error as to the amount of that class of claims. There was a class of claims not included in the opinion of Mr. Corwin, but which Mr. Cushing thinks are included in the provisions of the act of 1850. These bonds do not bear upon their face any pledge of the revenue. They were issued under a law passed in February, 1840. Early in February, 1840, the Legislature of Texas had passed an act pledging their revenues for the payment of the debts of the Republic. The late Secretary of the Treasury construed that to have a retrospective operation, and not to apply to bonds that were issued after the date of that act. Mr. Cushing thinks it is prospective as well as retrospective, and the amount of claims that will be subject, in that opinion of Mr. Cushing, is not $3,000,000, or $4,000,000, as the Senator supposes, but was in January, 1851, $1,600,000.

Mr. BELL. Adding to that the interest since that time, I suppose the amount would be about $2,000,000. That sum, added to the $8,000,000 ascertained in 1852, would amount to $10,000,000 at this day, for which we may be considered, perhaps, liable. Sir, honorable Senators stated yesterday, it having been agreed by compact with Texas, when she was annexed to the United States, that Texas should pay her own debts, and the public lands in her limits having been put under her own control for that purpose, we were under no obligation to pay these debts. Then, they say, in 1850, under some idea that we might be held justly responsible, according to public law, for that portion of her debt for the payment of the principal or interest of which the revenues from customs were perpetually pledged, we agreed to give to her what at that time was supposed would be the whole amount of debt subject to this lien on the revenues derived from customs. But that was a conjectural estimate. It turns out since that, that there was a much larger amount than the $5,000,000 agreed to be appropriated by the compromise act of 1850, belonging to the same class of claimants, which would stand upon the same footing in regard to their equitable claim upon the Government of the United States.

Now, sir, I should like to hear from some gentlemen on what principle it is, if we were under no obligation to pay the national debt of Texas contracted either in her war of independence, or for the support of her Army and Navy after she was independent, and which had liens upon the revenues which vested in the Government of the United States by the compact of annexation, that our agreement to pay the $5,000,000 discharged us from all obligation to the creditors even for those $5,000,000, unless we paid that sum pro tanto, leaving a large proportion of the creditors unpaid and unsatisfied?

That, however, is not the material question. I should like to know whether, by the compact, the United States were discharged from their obligation to pay these debts under public law—I mean those debts which had a lien upon the revenue which was vested by compact in the Government of the United States—her customs revenue? We know that is the great mode, by indirect taxation, of taxing the people of the country to whatever extent we find it expedient in this Government to tax them, just as Texas did then. We know that the people of this country, except for their local, and municipal, and State purposes, are not willing to submit to direct taxation. But, sir, I lay the principle of public law to be that wherever, either by agreement, by arrangement, or by conquest, a province is annexed to a superior government, and becomes a province or dependency or integral part of that government, we take the country with the burden upon it. The fact that, according to the Constitution, the country so ceded retains local sovereignty to a certain extent, and for certain purposes, does not, I conceive, make the least difference. Whatever obligations or liabilities they are under by a public act of theirs when they were an independent nation, we, the country into which they became merged, must assume the responsibility of the payment of those debts.

I do not propose to go into the argument, or even to state the authorities in reference to that point; but now, take that in connection with the other proposition, that in 1852 there were $8,000,000 of those debts having a lien or mortgage upon those revenues at that time; and then there has been the accruing interest since 1852, up to this period. Then, leaving out of view the validity of the decision of the Attorney General made since 1852, there will be an amount of $9,000,000, which we are under some sort of obligation, in public law, public honor, and honesty, to pay; unless the State of Texas complies with her obligation. She has assumed to pay those debts, either under the compact, or under her agreement to the act of 1850, by which we appropriated $5,000,000 for the purpose of paying that class of creditors; but we know that Texas has refused to do it. I understand that the argument of the honorable Senator from Texas [Mr. Rusk] yesterday, was made mainly with reference to vindicating the course, the character, and the honor of his State for her refusal to comply with her stipulations. I will not go into that. I dare say the honorable Senator is perfectly right in supposing that this Government, in the circumstances in which we were placed, and from various causes, did not comply with treaty stipulations in regard to freeing the territory of Texas from the depredations of certain Indians. I believe the gravamen of his complaint was, that we sent down the Caddo Indians into the Texas territory in violation of treaty; but that is neither here nor there, in regard to this question.

The point which I wish to reach is, as to the amount we should pay; whether we are restricted to $5,000,000 and interest upon it, or not? The question is, whether that is the only obligation we acknowledge, or choose to acknowledge; because, as I view this subject, it will be an assumption entirely; for we have the power to do as we please, and there is no tribunal on earth to bring us to account. We cannot be brought into a court of chancery, or any tribunal whatever, to say whether we are bound. We assume that we are bound. Some of the gentlemen who spoke yesterday, as I understand, contended that we were bound for no greater sum than the $5,000,000 and interest upon it. Some gentlemen, more liberal than others, perhaps, were willing to pay interest up to the 1st of January next. But I say, here are $8,000,000, for which we are bound just as much as we were for the original $5,000,000, unless Texas chooses to pay the amount, and that at this date it reaches about $9,000,000, independently of that class of claims which the Attorney General has decided comes within the same principle, and which, if included, would make the amount for which we are liable at this time, $10,000,000.

Now, the proposition of this bill is to appropriate $8,500,000. That will not pay all the claims of that class of creditors whom you are bound, I think, according to public law, to pay. You do not propose to pay the whole amount of their debts, but to appropriate only these $8,500,000, which will pay them about seventy cents in the dollar of their claims, as I understand. I should like honorable Senators, who have investigated the subject, to tell me how that is?

Mr. CHASE. The sum appropriated by the bill is to be divided pro rata among all the creditors.

Mr. BELL. That is what I supposed. That amount, as I understand, will give them about seventy cents on the dollar. What sort of equity or justice is there in it? You do not pay the whole amount. You choose to adopt, in part, the scale assumed by the State of Texas herself. Why, sir, that does not discharge us. We are not discharged, either by the compact or by the creditors from any original obligation which we came under by public law when that country was annexed to this Union under our Constitution. We were not discharged in either event, but we trusted to the good faith of Texas to pay that debt. We supposed there was a sufficient fund provided for the purpose, but we have, since that time, agreed to appropriate $5,000,000 from other considerations; but that does not discharge us any more than the other, for these creditors were not parties either to the compact by which Texas was ceded to the United States, or to the agreement made in 1850, by which we appropriated $5,000,000. On what principle, then, is it assumed, as several honorable Senators did yesterday, that we are under no obligation to pay more than the $5,000,000? It can be on no other ground but on the assumption that as we agreed to pay $5,000,000, and to relieve Texas of that amount of her obligations under her compact of annexation, that discharged us from any obligation to the creditors. Surely, there is no ground to say that if we were under any obligation whatever, the payment of these $5,000,000 discharged us from the obligation to pay any other creditors who existed, of the same class, over and above the $5,000,000.

Now, sir, these are the propositions: In 1852 there were $8,000,000 of these debts, and now there are $9,000,000, independently of the recent class of cases included by the late opinion of the Attorney General; and if you appropriate this amount of money, you do not pay those claims; you do not even pay the principal, to say nothing of the premium talked of yesterday, of fourteen per cent. on the stocks proposed to be issued. It is not a gratuity, in any sense of the word, if you pay the whole amount; but this will not pay the interest from this time forward, and will not anticipate the interest until the expiration of the fourteen years; but it will only pay seventy cents on the dollar. Suppose they do not agree to take this, and release us, what then? They have not released us. It is now four years since this question has been presented to Congress, and we have not been released. I do not know that there is one man whom I represent upon this floor directly interested in these claims at all, certainly no agent for these claims has made application to me upon the subject, except upon my own interrogatory when I yesterday met a gentleman in the lobby, and he gave me no details. The inquiry was merely accidental. I have gone into no investigation of it myself at any time; but the debate yesterday somewhat surprised me; for I was not informed of some particulars which were then produced. I did not remember that in 1852 it was only proposed to pay seventy cents on the dollar in any proposition that was then made.

Now, sir, I wish to have light on this subject. The Senator from Maryland says, the whole amount paid will be only seventy cents on the dollar, and that in 1852, it was $8,000,000, principal and interest; now it nearly amounts to $9,000,000 upon the claims as they existed then. Why, sir, I have heard it said, though I cannot vouch for it, that $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 was the amount. If I am wrong in the statement which I have made, I should be glad to be corrected.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not desire sir, to discuss this question, but simply to state, in a few words, the legal propositions which, in my judgment, are involved in it, and which will control my vote. I shall not argue them, but simply state them. The people of Texas were struggling for their freedom. It became necessary that the State should raise money. They borrowed from citizens of the United States principally, and for the repayment of that money, they pledged their revenues and all their public property. By the use of that money they acquired their independence. After annexing their independence by treaty, they were annexed to the United States by the agreement of annexation. The United States took from Texas the right to these revenues, which had been previously pledged to the creditors, and left to Texas the public lands alone as the fund out of which the debt should be paid. The United States contracted with Texas that Texas should pay the debt, but the creditors never consented to that agreement.

At a subsequent period the United States bought from Texas a portion of the land, (which, by the terms of the contract remained pledged for the debt,) for $10,000,000. The United States have paid out of that money $5,000,000 to Texas, but have reserved $5,000,000 to be paid over to Texas when the creditors of Texas shall release this Government from the obligation, which it was supposed rested on it, to pay the debts for which the revenues were pledged, because the revenues had been taken from Texas by this Government. It turns out that the $5,000,000 are insufficient. The United States, therefore, took away the public revenues which were pledged for the debt, and also the land which was bound for the debt, and paid one half the price to Texas, and appropriated none of it to the creditors. In other words, they have taken both funds. Under these circumstances the proposition is made by the creditors of Texas, that in order to get something for the debt, which has been running so many years without payment, they will promise a release to the United States on the payment of seventy cents on the dollar.

Mr. MASON. The facts stated by the Senator from Louisiana are very true; but I differ from him totally in the conclusions which he has drawn from those facts. Now, sir, I apprehend none will deny that the State of Texas and the State of Texas alone, is competent to settle with its creditors, to determine its own debt. As an incident to its sovereign power, the State of Texas alone is competent to determine its own debt, and in making an arrangement for the payment of that debt, or any disposition of it, the State of Texas alone is competent. What has Texas done? She has entered into a compact with the United States by which, whether the United States were or were not liable in equity, they certainly were not liable at law for any portion of this debt. Texas has entered into a compact with the United States by which it is stipulated that upon the payment of these reserved $5,000,000, those creditors who claim that they have an obligation of some sort upon the United States, will release the United States from its compact with the State of Texas. Whenever the creditors, who claim that the United States is under obligation to pay them, will release the United States, the United States has engaged to Texas to pay her that $5,000,000, with interest at five per cent. upon it. The fund is ready to be paid in a moment, and has been ready for four years and a half.

What is the objection to the payment to the State of Texas, who alone, under the compact, could receive it? The objection is, that Texas has not furnished from her creditors the previous condition. The only obligation made in the world is on the part of the United States to pay to Texas $5,000,000, with five per cent. interest upon it whenever the condition is complied with by the release of the United States. What is the proposition made by this bill? It is proposed that in lieu of paying that $5,000,000 with interest, we shall pay $5,000,000 with the interest that has accrued to it, which, I understand from the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT,] will, on the first of January next, amount to $6,500,000. I have a clear conviction that on the first of January next we are bound to pay $6,500,000 to Texas. We are bound to pay the principal of the debt with the accrued interest upon it, whatever it may be; but we are asked further not only to pay that, but, inasmuch as we are now redeeming our public stock at a premium, that in paying the $5,000,000 with interest, we shall pay the premium upon it which that stock will command in the market.

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator allow me to correct him? The bill does not propose to give any premium at all. The Senator from Indiana, in his argument, said that the amount of our liability now was so much for principal and interest, and that if we now redeemed the stock at the premium which the Secretary of the Treasury allows, we should have to pay so much more. He did not say it was proposed to pay the premium. We propose to pay the principal and interest for the whole time the bonds have to run.

Mr. MASON. That does not make $8,500,000.

Mr. PEARCE. Yes, sir, it does.

Mr. MASON. Then I received false information, because the report, which accompanies the bill, certainly makes the premium enter into it, if I read it aright. What we owe is the $5,000,000 with interest—the interest which has accrued up to the time of payment. They ask that we shall pay, not only the interest up to the time of payment, but that we shall pay in advance the interest which shall have accrued when the time of payment arrives. And why? For what reason? We are under no obligations to the creditors of Texas, none that I see or recognize; and if there were any existing, the State of Texas, which is competent to determine her own debt, has agreed to receive a sum in consoldo for some acquittance to be given to the United States. But if we pay the interest which will accrue up to 1864, we shall make a most extraordinary bargain so far as financial matters are concerned.

Now, as to the creditors of the State of Texas, those who held this scrip. I happen to know some of them, and for those whom I know, my sympathies have been very strongly engaged. Two of them are ladies whose petition I presented, asking the United States to pay the money. I know their condition, and that of others; but I am not at liberty to consult my sympathies for these people, when I am dealing with a public trust; and I am dealing here with a public trust only. I can know none but the State of Texas, and the contract made with the State of Texas. This application does not come from her, as I understand it; but it comes from the creditors of Texas. They ask us to interpose ourselves between Texas and her creditors, and pay the money directly to them.

Mr. President, the bargain was a bad one when made—I mean a bad one on the part of the United States. I am not aware that there existed any liability to pay this money. I deny that, under the terms of the bargain, any liability is to be implied; but, be that as it may, the contract is made, and we must comply with it, and that is to pay $5,000,000 with five per cent. interest on it, when Texas produces her acquittance.

Mr. TOUCEY. I do not acknowledge the liability of the Government to pay the debts of Texas. I can never admit that the admission of a State into this Union, by cutting off the right to tax importations involves a liability to pay the debts of that State antecedently contracted. On the contrary, I hold that the compact which exists between the United States and Texas imposes an obligation on Texas alone, and that we stand fairly clear of any claim on the part of the creditors of Texas. But, sir, we have entered into a compact—and this is the point to which I beg leave to call the attention of the Senate—we have entered into a compact with the State of Texas to pay the precise amount which is embraced in this bill, and without a new compact we never can get rid of the obligation of that compact, without paying to Texas the sum of $8,500,000. The compact was to pay $5,000,000 at the end of fourteen years, with interest at five per cent. per annum; and five per cent. per annum for fourteen years amounts to $3,500,000, or to seventy per cent., which added to the original, amounts to $8,500,000. The sum proposed to be appropriated by this bill is precisely the amount which we have entered into a compact with Texas to pay for the benefit of her creditors.

Now, sir, the only question that arises is with regard to the time of payment. I agree, by the terms of that compact, we can delay the payment of the principal to the end of the fourteen years, and we can delay the payment of the interest, except the annual interest, running through the fourteen years; but when we reach the last end, and satisfy the obligation, we shall have paid $8,500,000. The question that is presented to my mind is this: With an overflowing Treasury, with a vastly larger claim on this Government, shall we prefer to hold this money in the public Treasury, and pay its interest, instead of now paying it over to Texas under an arrangement by which we become entirely discharged from any claim of her creditors embraced in the bill? It is true, it does not pay the whole amount, but then they had no claim on this Government. Their claim was on Texas, and this payment cannot be made unless with the assent of the State of Texas. When, therefore, the State of Texas consents to this engagement, and receives the money, we have discharged our obligation, and for the purpose of getting rid of this whole claim, I am willing to advance the money now without any discount or deduction, and that is what is proposed to be done by the bill. That being the case, I hope, as it is now understood, the vote will be taken upon it without further debate.

Mr. BRIGHT. The time has elapsed which I asked should be devoted to this bill; and I am under a promise to move to postpone it.

Several SENATORS. Let us take the vote.

Mr. BRIGHT. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to take the vote I have no objection, but I am under a promise to let the bill go over now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to say a few words upon the subject.

Mr. BRIGHT. Then I move to postpone its further consideration until to-morrow. I promised to do it, and I shall do it.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS SIGNED BY THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, announcing that he had this day approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act to incorporate the Georgetown Gas Light Company;

A joint resolution providing for the distribution of the works of Thomas Jefferson;

An act regulating the time of holding the sessions of the district and circuit courts of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana; and

An act for the relief of Thomas K. Glenn.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the House bill "to grant a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Mason to add at the end of the bill the following:

Provided, That nothing contained in this act shall apply to any of the public lands lying northwest of the Ohio river, and which were ceded to the United States by the Commonwealth of Virginia, pursuant to the act of that Commonwealth, of 30th of October, 1783, accepted by Congress March 1, 1784; the same being by the Virginia acts and deed of cession aforesaid, considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of such of the United States as have become members of the Confederation or Federal Alliance of said States, Virginia inclusive, according to their usual respective proportions in the general charge and expenditure, and to be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatsoever; and the sixth article of the Constitution of the United States, providing that all "debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution, as under the Confederation."

The amendment led to considerable discussion, when

Mr. BAYARD moved that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until the second Monday in December next. This motion also led to a long discussion, in which Messrs. BAYARD, BUTLER, BADGER, CLAYTON, GWIN, STUART, WALKER, BROWN, and others participated.

Mr. HAMLIN, though opposed to the bill was opposed to the motion, desiring, as he did, to have the bill disposed of at the present session.

Mr. DOUGLAS urged the friends of the bill to resist the motion and sit the bill out.

Mr. CLAY, though opposed to the original bill, would vote against the proposition to postpone.

The question was then taken on the motion of Mr. BAYARD, and decided in the negative, as follows—yeas 24, nays 30.

The question was then taken on the amendment of Mr. Mason, and decided in the negative, as follows—yeas 17, nays 33.

Mr. BROWN then moved his amendment for the original bill, the effect of which is to allow any person to enter a quarter section of unappropriated public lands on the following scale, viz: Lands offered for sale for five years might be entered at one dollar per acre; those for ten years at seventy-five cents; those for fifteen years at fifty cents; those for twenty years at twenty-five cents; and those for twenty-four at twelve and a half cents per acre, payable in every instance at the expiration of five years, or sooner, at the option of the person, but in all cases patent to issue after payment, which was modified by Mr. CLAY, and adopted by Mr. BROWN.

The question having been taken, it was decided in the negative, as follows—yeas 16, nays 32.

Mr. BELL then moved to amend the bill by adding an additional section, the effect of which was to grant to any free white citizen of the United States who is not a freeholder, and who may not desire to settle upon the same a warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land, which warrant shall be assignable, the assignee receiving it under the requirement to cultivate.

This amendment also led to a long discussion, in which Messrs. BELL, DAWSON, DIXON, HOUTSON, RUSK, GEYER, and others, participated, when the question was taken, and decided in the negative—yeas 12, nays 39.

Mr. CLAYTON moved to lay the bill on the table; but the motion was rejected—yeas 16, nays 35.

Other amendments offered by Mr. BELL were also voted down.

Mr. BAYARD moved to add to the bill a section, the effect of which would be, that any one erecting a habitable dwelling on any vacant quarter section of public land, and occupy the same for five years, shall be entitled to receive a patent therefor.

This motion led to debate, and it was rejected by the following vote—yeas 19, nays 27.

Mr. HUNTER then moved his bill as a substitute for the original, which embodies the graduation and preemption principles, &c.

Messrs. CASS and BRIGHT advocated the substitute as next best; and if they could not get the bill as it came from the House, they were willing to take Mr. HUNTER's substitute.

Mr. GWIN moved to amend the substitute so that preemptions in California be put at one dollar per acre; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD moved to amend the substitute by inserting a provision giving to all persons engaged in the military service since the Revolution one hundred and sixty acres of land.

Mr. HAMLIN modified the amendment, with Mr. BRODHEAD's permission, so as to include all who had been in any battles; and the question having been taken, it was lost, the vote standing—yeas 24, nays 24.

Several attempts were made to adjourn, but were severally defeated on a call of the yeas and nays.

It was apparent that the friends of the bill were determined to resist all efforts to adjourn until the bill was disposed of.

Mr. BAYARD moved to strike out several sections from the substitute, declaring that, much as he was opposed to the homestead bill, he would infinitely prefer it to the substitute of the Senator from Virginia.

A long debate ensued, in which Messrs. JONES, of Tennessee, DAWSON, BUTLER, TOOMBS, and others participated.

Mr. BAYARD then demanded the yeas and nays; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 4, nays 33.

Mr. SEBASTIAN moved two amendments, both of which were agreed to; one was a reservation of certain Indian rights, and the other to give present preemption rights under the bill.

Mr. CHASE moved an amendment, the effect of which was, that when the public lands in any State should be reduced to thirty thousand acres, they should be ceded to the States in which they lie.

Mr. HUNTER opposed the amendment, and the question having been taken, it was decided in the negative—yeas 6, nays 31.

Mr. BENJAMIN moved an amendment to the ninth section, by striking out that portion fixing the price of land to actual settlers at twenty-five cents per acre; or if lands have been in market twenty years, at twelve and a half cents, and to insert "at the graduated price fixed by the first section of the bill."

The question having been taken by yeas and nays, it was rejected—yeas 11, nays 29.

Mr. BAYARD then moved to strike out twenty-five cents an acre and insert "one cent," so that the price would be merely nominal in effect; which, after discussion, was decided in the negative.

Mr. BADGER urged that the bill be reported to the Senate and adjourn. They had been in continuous session from eleven in the morning until eight at night. Such protracted sessions in a season so warm was prejudicial to health and wasting to their energies.

But further amendments were proposed, and the debate continued.

Mr. BROWN submitted an amendment, the effect of which was to subject the alternate sections reserved for railroad grants to the graduating principle.

On this question the yeas and nays were ordered, and it was decided in the negative; yeas 4, nays 39.

Mr. CHASE moved to strike out the word "white," believing, as he did, that it would give strength to the bill.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. CHASE, and it received 8 affirmative votes to 38 nays.

The question was then taken on Mr. HUNTER's substitute as it was amended, and it was decided in the affirmative, as follows—yeas 34, nays 13.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and the Senate adjourned at nine o'clock, p. m.

[A perfect report of the proceedings of this day could not be prepared in time for the Congressional Globe, but they will be found in the Appendix.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 21, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the disposition of bills on the Speaker's table of a private character.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill of the Senate (No. 257) "to confirm the claim of Dusuan de la Croix to a lot of land therein described," with a view of taking it up and putting it upon its passage. It is a bill to confer the title of a town lot. I will state that this matter has been before Congress for three years without objection to it, and we have never been able to reach it.

No objection being made, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of said bill; which was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion by Mr. BERNHISEL, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of Orson Hyde, that the same may be referred to the Indian bureau.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report back from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office the petition of Cyrus Buckland, master machinist United States armory, and that the same may be referred to the Committee of Claims.

There was no objection; and the petition was accordingly referred.

Mr. MIDDLESWARTH. Circumstances have made it necessary for me to leave the city for a short time. For this reason, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make certain reports now in my possession.

There was no objection; and

Mr. MIDDLESWARTH, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, made adverse reports upon the petitions in the following cases; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

The petition of the children of William Peters, of New York, praying for arrears of pension due to him for services during the revolutionary war; and

The petition of Achsa Noys, of New York, praying for a pension.

WASHINGTON AND ALEXANDRIA RAILROAD.

Mr. MAY. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill (No. 388) "authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia."

It asks for no appropriation, and I hope there will be no objection to its being taken up and passed.

The bill was read through for information. It authorizes the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company, incorporated by the Legislature of Virginia, to construct a railroad from Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, to Washington, District of Columbia. To extend this road from any point on the Virginia side of the Potomac river, to which said road may be constructed, at or above the aqueduct of the Alexandria canal into the District of Columbia, connecting with the Baltimore and Washington railroad depot, by the most convenient and practicable route or routes, passing through or along such streets or avenues, except the Pennsylvania avenue, of Washington and Georgetown, as the corporate authorities thereof may respectively approve.

The second section authorizes the said company to construct a bridge over the Potomac river, on or above, or west of the aqueduct of the Alexandria Canal Company, provided said bridge shall only be built on or over the piers of the aqueduct, with the consent of the Alexandria Canal Company; and provided further, that, in constructing said bridge, and crossing the Chesapeake and Ohio canal, said bridge and railroad shall be so constructed as not to injure or obstruct the navigation of said canal; and that this act shall not prevent Congress from giving like privileges to any other railroad company or person.

The third section provides for the establishment of depots in Washington and Georgetown, and for the laying of tracks, with proper turnouts, &c., in said cities, subject to such terms, conditions, restrictions, and taxation, and to such rules and regulations relative to the construction, repairs, and working of the road within said cities as the corporate authorities thereof shall, from time to time, respectively prescribe, so far as it may be within their limits: Provided, That no higher rates of taxation shall be imposed than is prescribed in the charters of said cities, and that said company shall keep an office in Washington or Georgetown, and shall have the power to sue and be sued, &c.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the bill gives rise to debate, I shall object to it.

Mr. HAVEN. I have heard the bill read through, and I think that it ought to pass. It is properly guarded, and, with the gentleman's consent, I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. MAY. There are two or three amendments which I propose to offer, and which are necessary for the perfection of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill has not been read a second time yet. It will be read a second time, and it will be then open for amendments.

Mr. HAVEN. I withdraw the call for the previous question.

The bill was then read a second time.

Mr. MAY moved the following amendments; which were severally agreed to:

In the fourteenth line, after the words "or avenues" insert "except the Pennsylvania avenue."

In second section strike out the word "their" and insert "a railroad."

Mr. MAY then offered the following amendment:

Add as an additional section:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct and extend the Washington branch of said road according to such route as may be most convenient through the said District, to some point on the Potomac river, opposite to, and near the city of Alexandria, in Virginia, for the purpose of forming a connection with said river, and the lines of railroad running south, subject to the provisions of its present charter; and the said company are hereby authorized to locate, construct, and operate the said extensions hereby authorized through such parts of the city of Washington or public reservations as the corporate authorities thereof, or the President of the United States, may consent to; and also to build a bridge or bridges over the eastern branch of the Potomac river, at some point above the navy-yard: Provided, however, That the same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof; and said company shall have power to locate and establish a depot, and erect the necessary buildings thereon, and also to erect such wharves and piers into said river as may be necessary: Provided, That the same shall not obstruct the navigation thereof: Provided, further, That the said Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company be subject to the same conditions and restrictions in extending their road through any part of the city of Washington as are prescribed for the Alexandria and Washington Railroad Company.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I raise a question of order upon that amendment. It relates to a different road and a different subject from that provided for in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill came in by unanimous consent, and refers to a railroad in the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES. Exactly, but not to the Baltimore and Ohio railroad.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to say that my friend from Tennessee misapprehends the operation of this bill. It simply gives the right to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company to run their road to the river, subject to any restrictions that the corporate authorities may see fit to impose upon them. It is wise to leave this matter to them, and I am willing to leave it in their hands. I move the previous question.

Mr. JONES. I submit this question to the Chair, whether it is in order to put one private bill upon another?

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. It is no private bill.

Mr. JONES. Then it has no business here to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee seems to have forgotten that the bill comes up by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES. This amendment has nothing to do with the Washington and Alexandria railroad. It relates to an entirely different road. When leave was first asked to take up the bill, I asked for the reading of the bill in order that I might ascertain what was in it; and hearing nothing objectionable in it, I made no objection.

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless, it is in order to amend the bill, and it will be for the House to determine whether or not the amendment shall be adopted.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, being first on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. JONES. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES. I now move to lay the bill and amendment on the table.

Mr. ROBBINS. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the bill on the table; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken; and, on a division, there were—ayes 80, nays 38.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. HAVEN. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then read a third time.

Mr. ROBBINS. Upon the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the bill was passed.

The title having been read,

Mr. MAY moved to amend the same by adding thereto the words "and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company;" so as to make it read

An act authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, and conferring certain privileges on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. EDGERTON. I appeal to the gentleman from Tennessee to withdraw his call for the regular order of business, to enable me to ask the unanimous consent of the House, to report from the Committee of Claims certain private bills, for the purpose simply of referring them.

Mr. JONES. I cannot withdraw the call. I want the regular order of business.

Mr. KERR. Have we not the right to report private bills on Friday morning?

The SPEAKER. Not to-day.

PAYMENT OF LOAN TO NEW MEXICO.

The joint resolution of the Senate No. 18, being first in order on the Speaker's table, was taken up and read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armijo, José L. Perea, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved June 17, 1851.

Mr. PHELPS. This resolution does not involve an appropriation or expenditure of money, and I ask that the House shall put it upon its passage at this time. I will explain the facts connected with it in a very few words. Some two or three years ago, the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico being absent during a session of the Legislature, the Legislature passed a resolution authorizing the negotiation of a loan for the purpose of paying the expenses of the session of the Legislative Assembly. Such a loan was negotiated and received from these men, and disbursed for the payment of the expenses of the session. A portion of the money can be paid from the Treasury, but the money received from those men cannot be paid without the authority of Congress. There is a sufficient amount of money on hand from the appropriation for these expenses to pay the whole amount, and all that is necessary is the recognition of the loan by Congress. The money ought to be refunded to these men who have actually paid it out, and I hope there will be no objection to having the resolution put upon its passage. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bills, which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, as follows, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims:

S. No. 443. An act for the relief of A. G. Penn; and

S. No. 403. An act for the relief of Gaston T. Raoul.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. DENT. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to report back to the House several Senate bills.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand the gentleman from Georgia is not in good health, and I trust that there may be no objection to his proposition:

There was no objection, and

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back Senate bill (No. 106) "to authorize the payment of invalid pensions to the heirs of Lieutenant Robert White, and others," with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. DENT. The bill is a just one, and if there be no objection, I ask that it be now put on its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does not the bill provide for an appropriation out of the public Treasury for the payment of these balances of pension?

Mr. DENT. It does.

Mr. JONES. Then, under the rule, it must have its first consideration in a Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I hope there may be unanimous consent to allow the bill to be now put on its passage.

Mr. JONES. Let it go to the committee.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, ordered the bill to be referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DENT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported adversely on Senate bill No. 360, "for the relief of John McVey;" which was laid upon the table.

The House, by unanimous consent, then proceeded to consider the private bills reported on Friday and Saturday last from a Committee of the Whole House, with the recommendation that they do pass.

Senate bill No. 76. "An act to authorize Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands and enter the same quantity elsewhere."

The bill was read in extenso.

The bill was then ordered to be read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I withdraw any objection to reporting any private bills for the purpose of referring them to a Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The House have already disposed of all the private bills upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. JONES. I mean the private bills in the hands of members to be reported, but not to be put upon their passage.

Mr. ORR. I think we had better dispose of the bills reported from a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EDGERTON. I will say that it will not take five minutes to report the bills I have in my hands. They can be referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MACE. I object.

The following Senate bills reported from a Committee of the Whole House without amendments, were severally ordered to be read a third time, and were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

S. No. 73. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased;

S. No. 127. An act for the relief of John Phagan;

S. No. 125. An act for the relief of Ezra Williams;

S. No. 90. An act for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co.;

S. No. 91. An act for the relief of James Dun-ning; and

S. No. 29. An act for the relief of Joseph Mitchell.

House bill (No. 99.) "for the relief of Captain George Simpson, of Galveston," and House bill (No. 131) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard," reported without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were accordingly read the third time, and passed.

House bill (No. 173) "for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general of the United States Army," came up next in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I demand the previous question upon the engrossment of that bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was subsequently read a third time.

Mr. ORR. That was a bill which gave rise to a good deal of debate in committee. I was myself opposed to the principle of the bill. I think it is wrong, and therefore I demand the yeas and nays upon its passage.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 58; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, Ellison, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Kerr, Knox, Lamb, Lindsley, McCulloch, McDougall, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Mayall, Middlewarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Sabin, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Sollers, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—92.

NAYS—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barry, Belcher, Bocock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Caskie, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cobb, Cox, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, Dunham, Edgerton, Faulkner, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, J. Glancey Jones, Roland Jones, Kittredge, Kuriz, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, May, Smith Miller, Milson, Morrison, Murray, Orr, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Shaw, Shower, Skelton, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vansant, Witte, and Hendrick B. Wright—58.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDGERTON. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House, to allow me to report from the Committee on Claims certain bills for the purpose of reference only.

Mr. McMULLIN. I hope the gentleman will wait until we have disposed of the bills upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. EDGERTON. It is not probable that we shall get through with those bills to-day.

The SPEAKER. Debate is out of order.

Objection was made.

The following bills reported from the Committee of the Whole without amendment, were then taken from the Speaker's table, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, were severally read a third time, and passed:

H. R. No. 174. A bill for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis.

H. R. No. 110. A bill authorizing the payment of the balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812.

H. R. No. 107. A bill for the relief of Robert Grignon was next in order.

An amendment was reported by the Committee of the Whole to strike out the words "Robert Grignon," and insert "the legal representatives of the Menomonee tribe of Indians."

Mr. EASTMAN. I move the following as a substitute to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Add at the end of the bill the following words: Provided, That before the money shall be paid to the said Grignon, the consent of the said tribe of Menomonee Indians shall be obtained thereon, which consent shall be certified to by the sub-agent of said tribe.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in the nature of a substitute, and the question must be first taken upon the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Let us hear the amendment read.

Mr. EASTMAN. I can state the case in less time than it will require to read the amendment. The bill proposes to pay $19,000 to Robert Grignon, according to the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs, under the treaty of 1836. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] after an examination of the claim, found that the money was due; but, that there might be no chance of fraud, he moved that the money should be paid to the assigns of the said Menomonee tribe of Indians. Now, sir, as it is exceedingly difficult to ascertain what an assignment of a tribe of Indians is, I propose that, instead of adopting this amendment, we shall provide, that this tribe of Indians shall give their assent before the money shall be paid. This is the amendment I have offered.

The question was then taken upon the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole; and it was disagreed to.

The amendment offered by Mr. EASTMAN was then adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill of the House (No. 176) "for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, deceased," reported with an amendment, came up next in order.

Mr. KNOX. I move the previous question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I would appeal to the gentleman to allow a brief explanation of the amendment of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KNOX. This bill was considered in committee, after the reading of the report accompanying it; and was reported to the House with amendment, by a general vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has called the previous question, and debate is not in order.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I hope the previous question may not receive a second. There ought to be some explanation of the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words: "at the rate of thirty dollars per month, to commence on the first day of January, 1854, and to continue for ten years from that date, and then cease: Provided, however, That if the said Pamela Brown shall die before the expiration of said period of ten years, the pension hereby granted shall cease at her death." And in lieu thereof insert the following:

And to pay her a pension at the rate of one half the pay per month to which her said husband was entitled at the time of his death; said pension to commence on the first day of January, 1838, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. FAULKNER. I beg the gentleman to withdraw his call for the previous question, in order that I may make a single inquiry.

Mr. KNOX declined to withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. FAULKNER. I must really ask the House to allow me some explanation of this amendment.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would like to inform the House—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call for the yeas and nays upon the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 87, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bridges, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Thomas D. Eliot, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Daniel T. Jones, J. Quincy Jones, Knox, Lilly, McCulloch, McDougall, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shower, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walley, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—87.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Bliss, Bocock, Breckinridge, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Culom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, Dunham, Edmundson, Ellison, Faulkner, Giddings, Goode, Grow, Hendricks, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, George W. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of privilege. I present the following resolution, which involves a question of privilege, and after it is read, I will only make a very few remarks.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the committee of which the Hon. Mr. Letcher is chairman, be instructed to communicate to this House any communication made to that committee reflecting upon the representative character of T. H. Bayly, a member of this House, by Ben. E. Green, or others, with a view that the House may take such action as to them may seem proper, the said committee having decided that it was not within their jurisdiction.

Mr. HOUSTON, (sotto voce.) That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. BAYLY. It is emphatically a question of privilege.

Mr. HOUSTON. What I uttered was in an under tone, and not intended to be made public; but I will say that I doubt very much its being a question of privilege. A committee having been appointed under the direction of the House, who have charge of this subject, it does seem to me that it ought to be not only permitted but required to finish its action, before a member of this body can, by a resolution of the House, bring the unfinished report of that committee before the House for adjudication or action. I do not pretend to say that the gentleman is not right in bringing the matter to the notice of the House.

Mr. BAYLY. My personal character is involved in it.

Mr. LETCHER. If my colleague will give way a moment, I will satisfy the House about the matter.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg to submit my own statement. This is a matter in which my honor is concerned. The special committee have declined to take jurisdiction of a personal imputation on me—an imputation on one of the oldest members of this House—made against my conduct while I was enjoying the highest favors of this House during two successive sessions of Congress, in one of which I was chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and in the other of which I was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have been advised to take no notice of this imputation, on the ground that it obviously grows out of malice. But, sir, I do not choose to do that. By order of the special committee, I have seen that document; and I mean that this House, and the country, shall see that communication, and I mean, if the House will indulge me, that a committee of this House shall be appointed to investigate the charges made against me, that the stamp of falsehood and infamy may be placed upon the brow of my accuser. I do not choose to wait. It is only five minutes ago that I saw this document, and the charge contained in it shall be investigated, if this House will allow me justice.

Mr. LETCHER. Has the resolution been adopted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not been adopted as yet.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, I do not deem it necessary to say more at present than to confirm the statement made by my colleague, that the special committee have disposed of this matter so far as they are concerned. Probably, after the resolution has been disposed of, I may have something more to say in relation to it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not wish to throw any obstructions in the way of the desire of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] nor to cause any delay in this matter. But I should like to learn from the honorable chairman of the select committee the reason why that committee did not take jurisdiction of the matter, and report on it to the House? I should like an explanation to be given on this point, so that the House may thoroughly understand the matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker—The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. PHELPS occupying the chair.) Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON?]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I prefer to yield to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] as I have propounded a question to him.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was going to present to the consideration of the gentleman from Ohio himself, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] as well as to that of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that if we commence to draw out information from that committee, we may interfere with their investigation. I do not know what the committee has been doing; and I may say, in excuse for myself, that I do not know that any charges had been made against the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,].

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not propose to draw anything from that committee, except the reasons which will justify this House in yielding to the request of the honorable gentleman who has presented the resolution. If the gentleman's honor has been impugned; if it has been assailed through this committee, I want to know why that committee did not take jurisdiction of the matter, and exculpate him from the charges preferred against him, so as to preclude the necessity of raising another special committee.

Mr. LETCHER. Suppose, sir, a charge were preferred against the gentleman from Ohio, of five or six years' standing, and brought to the attention of that committee, would he consider, under the resolution which organized this committee, limiting it to matters before this Congress, that we had the right to go back five or six years, and commencing there, come down to the present time? There never would be an end to the investigation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand, then, from what the gentleman says, that the committee did not think the resolution under which it acts was sufficiently general in its character to enable them to make an investigation of this particular matter?

Mr. LETCHER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I should like to know whether that committee is confining itself simply to the investigation of charges in relation to Colt's patent; for I understand, from the terms of the resolution, and I think it was so understood by the House, that it was the purpose of the House to give that committee full and ample powers to go back and make a full investigation of all these charges of corruption. There have been inuendoes and charges thrown out here, in rather a loose and irresponsible way, affecting the character of the members of this House, involving them in bribery, and in being controlled by improper influences. I think it is high time to put a stop to this system of general and incessant slander.

Some members of this body are perhaps to blame for giving too much weight and dignity to vague outside rumors, and mere newspaper trash. I was not present at the time this committee was raised, but had I been, I should have taken the ground that these loose inuendoes, by being indorsed to some extent by being repeated on this floor, had a greater tendency than anything else to bring odium upon Congress. Upon these idle rumors it was thought necessary to raise a committee of investigation; and now that the committee is raised, I should hope they would go fully into the investigation of the whole matter, and make a report, so that we may know whether there is any foundation in fact for any of these rumors circulated throughout the country, and repeated on this floor, so as to implicate, to some extent, the entire body.

I will move the previous question upon this resolution, if—

Mr. LETCHER, (interrupting.) I have the floor, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] was recognized by the Chair, and was upon the floor. The gentleman from Ohio made an inquiry of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] and, in the opinion of the Chair, he yielded only for a reply.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I merely intimated my purpose to cut off this debate, so that we might proceed to business. But before I make the motion, I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia a moment, retaining, however, my right to the floor.

Mr. EDGERTON. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I wish to say to my colleague, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] that I hope before he calls for the previous question, he will permit me to offer an amendment to the resolution. I propose to amend by inserting after the name of the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] the words "or any other member of this House," and to insert after the name of Mr. Green the words "or any other person."

Mr. CAMPBELL. My judgment differs from that of my colleague. Inasmuch as the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] has felt that the imputation sought to be cast upon his character is of sufficient importance to call the attention of the House to it, I think it is due to him that his request be granted; but I have no idea myself of assuming the position here that there is any ground to suspect any member, until something sufficiently definite is charged by a responsible person.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will my colleague allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I merely wish to state that the usual course of this House has been, whenever a member has felt himself assailed in his official capacity, to regard him as possessing a right to demand an investigation, as the gentleman from Virginia has now done. I therefore hope my colleague will withdraw his objection, and that the resolution will be adopted unanimously.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree fully with my colleague in what he has said; but it seems to me that it is better to wait until specific charges have been made of sufficient importance to call for investigation, and not to act upon mere idle rumors.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to allow me a word.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I had intended to have moved the previous question; but if the gentleman from Virginia desires to speak, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg to say that I have not the slightest disposition to make the slightest complaint of the course of the gentleman from Ohio, but I will say to him that this is no case of mere newspaper charge.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not so understand it.

Mr. BAYLY. If it had been a mere charge of letter-writers, I should not have felt it due to myself to have said one word. But here is a communication that has been sent to a committee of this House, signed by a name that is known, at least in this House. The gentleman from Ohio may not know, until I inform him of it, that this communication was made to this House substantially many years ago, and it turned out that there was so little semblance of truth about it that the House refused to give it any attention. But, sir, I am a little sensitive about the matter. I want to brand the thing as it will be branded when the facts become known.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will take the thing as philosophically as I did when a communication was sent by a convicted thief to some blockhead down South about me.

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not understand me as making any sort of complaint about the course he is taking. On the contrary, I think if a communication about me, of that character, had been sent to a committee of this House by a responsible man, I should have taken the same course that he is taking. I think, under the circumstances, the request of the gentleman for a special committee to investigate the matter ought to be granted. But, sir, my object is to dispose of this matter, that we may go on with the business of the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the gentleman will allow me to say a word before he calls the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. LETCHER. I want to say a word as to the action of our committee. We decided, at the outset, that our jurisdiction, under the resolution of the House constituting the committee, should be limited to the present Congress and the members of the present Congress; that we had no power to go beyond it. And now a word with regard to this communication. This case goes as far back as the Twenty-Ninth Congress, and goes on to the last Congress in its charges against my colleague. Under these circumstances, we conceived that we had no right to investigate the matter. If we were to go back to investigate the charges that might be brought before us, there would be no stopping; we should not be able to bring the investigation to a close at all. It is our wish to bring our labors to a close as speedily as possible, and, therefore, we have given such a construction to the resolution as will confine our investigations to the present Congress.

Now, one word to the gentleman from Ohio over the way. [Mr. EDGERSON,] with regard to the members of the present Congress, that there may be no misunderstanding as to the duties of the committee. I will say that, so far as members of the present Congress are involved, the committee will, in the discharge of their duty, ascertain the facts so far as they are able, and report them for the action of the House. So far as the members of the House are concerned, our action applies to them, one and all, so far as they are brought before us.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think that the decision of the committee in that respect was very proper, and I now apprehend their difficulty. I call for the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. BAYLY. The resolution having been adopted, the matter being one of privilege, and being informed by my colleague that he is ready to produce the communication referred to in the resolution, I ask that it may be at once received and read, and the committee ordered.

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

The Clerk then read the communication, as follows:

WASHINGTON, July 13, 1854.

HON. JOHN LETCHER, Chairman of the Committee of Inquiry, appointed under House resolution of the 8th July, 1854:

SIR: The second clause of the resolution of the 8th instant, under which the committee of inquiry, of which you are chairman, was appointed, reads as follows:

"To inquire whether money has been offered to members, or other illegal or improper means used, either directly or indirectly, to secure the passage or defeat of any bill through Congress."

I beg leave to call the attention of the committee to the following case, which, for sake of perspicuity, I state in the form of specific charges:

Charge 1. That W. W. Corcoran, banker, did offer to Thomas H. Bayly, chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the Thirty-First Congress, money, or the use of money, coupled with a proposition that said Bayly should unite with said Corcoran in a joint speculation in United States Government securities.

I observe that the resolution does not propose any inquiry as to whether such offers of money, if made, were accepted. But in making this charge, I think proper to add, that, in this particular case, as I am informed, said Bayly, after consultation with his father-in-law, Judge May, declined said Corcoran's proposals, for the reason that Judge May did not think well of said proposed speculations.

Whether or not said offer of the use of money was repeated by said Corcoran to said Bayly, in connection with or apart from other joint or separate speculations, I am not prepared to assert. But that the purpose and effect of said offer was "to secure the passage of a bill through Congress," or as a general inducement to said Bayly, who, as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, held a control over all the appropriation bills, in most of which said Corcoran was directly or indirectly interested, is a necessary and irresistible corollary from the subsequent conduct of said Bayly, and the facts which I herewith respectfully submit, and hold myself ready to prove, viz:

Charge 2. That said Thomas H. Bayly, as chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, of the Thirty-First Congress, and as chairman of the Committee of Foreign Affairs of the Thirty-Second Congress, did "use improper, if not illegal, means," to wit, willful misrepresentation and falsehood, involving a breach of trust reposed in him by the House, and intended to deceive the House, and thereby "to secure the passage" of the acts of September 26, 1850, and February 10, 1852, making appropriations for the payment of the indemnity due to Mexico under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, with the full knowledge and purpose on the part of said Bayly, that the money appropriated by said acts would be, and the same was subsequently paid to said Corcoran and others; and with the further knowledge on the part of said Bayly that a large sum of money would be, and a large sum, to wit, near half a million dollars, was thereby lost to the United States, which might have been saved, had the reasonable wishes of the Mexican Government, as to the mode of payment, been acceded to.

Specification 1. Willful misrepresentation. In this: that whereas the Mexican Government, being in great want of money, and under the necessity of procuring advances at an interest of eighteen to twenty-four per cent. per annum from the bankers employed by the United States to pay said indemnity, a proposition was submitted, on behalf of the Mexican Government to the United States Government, and especially to the said Thomas H. Bayly, in his official character of chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means; and whereas, the said proposition was, that an arrangement should be made either to pay the said indemnity in advance of its falling due, directly to the Mexican Government, in the same manner as the payments under the late treaty was made to General Almonte, the Mexican Minister, or that drafts should be accepted by the United States Government, so as to render the same negotiable, the United States Government, in either case, taking a full receipt and acquittance direct from the Mexican Government.

Nevertheless, the said Bayly endeavored to deceive, and did deceive, the House of Representatives, by misrepresenting the nature of the said proposition, submitted as aforesaid, in behalf of the Mexican Government, and by stating that said proposition contemplated that Duff Green and Ben. E. Green were to be employed as the agents and bankers of the United States in making said payment, when said Bayly well knew that no such agency was ever contemplated by the said proposed arrangement.

Specification 2. Falsehood. In this: that said Bayly stated to the House of Representatives that said Ben. E. Green, when acting as chargé d'affaires of the United States in Mexico, had received, and failed to account for, the fourth and fifth installments of the indemnity due by Mexico to citizens of the United States, under the convention of 1843, when said Bayly well knew that his said statement was utterly false. And when afterwards called upon by another member of the House to withdraw said false charge, he (Bayly) said: "I did not so charge, as the report of my speech will show, for this whole matter was involved in doubt."—[see Cong. Globe, 1 sess. 32 Cong., page 359]—when said Bayly well knew that said matter was not involved in any doubt, because the circumstances of these alleged payments had been investigated by Mr. Slidell, United States Minister to Mexico, whose report fully exonerated said Ben. E. Green from all responsibility in the premises, and said Bayly had fully examined not only Mr. Slidell's said report, as published in the congressional records—[Ex. Doc., No. 133, 1st sess. 29th Cong.]—but, as he himself stated, had also examined the original documents on file in the State Department; and, therefore, must have known that his said original charge, and the assertion with which he accompanied the subsequent denial of having made said charge, were alike false and calumnious.

Specification 3. Willful falsehood. In this: that after quoting from the civil and diplomatic bill of the 3d March, 1845, the following clause, to wit:

"For paying the April and July installments of the Mexican indemnities, due in 1844, the sum of $275,000: Provided, It shall be ascertained to the satisfaction of the American Government, that said installments have been paid by the Mexican Government, to the agent appointed by the United States to receive the same, in such manner as to discharge all claims on the Mexican Government; and said agent to be a delinquent in remitting the money to the United States;" the said Bayly, to give color to his said false accusation of said Ben. E. Green, and thereby to secure the passage of said bills, in the form desired by said Corcoran, said as follows:

"After the passage of the law, to which I have referred, Mr. Polk, through Mr. Slidell, and our consul in Mexico, Mr. Black, instituted an inquiry in Mexico to ascertain, if possible, whether the contingency provided for had happened. He became satisfied it had, and the money was paid." [Congressional Globe, second session Thirty-Second Congress, page 340.]

Whereas, said Bayly well knew that no part of the money was ever paid under the act quoted by him, and that Mr. Polk ascertained by the said inquiries of Messrs. Slidell and Black that the said contingency had not happened, and, therefore, refused to make any payments under the act quoted by said Bayly; and that the claimants, because of Mr. Polk's said refusal to pay under the said act, applied at the next session of Congress, and procured the insertion of the following clause in the civil and diplomatic bill of August 10, 1846, to wit:

"For paying the principle and interest of the fourth and fifth installments of the Mexican indemnities due in the year 1844, the sum of $320,000: Provided, The claimants, each for himself, shall relinquish to the United States his right to said installments: Provided, further, That each of the claimants shall agree to take in payment the scrip of a stock bearing interest at five per cent. payable in five years."

Respectfully submitted, BEN. E. GREEN."

P. S. I submit herewith a copy of a report from the Comptroller, which fully proves the charge of falsehood as set forth in specification third. Most of the other proofs which I wish to submit are of record, and easily produced. But the witnesses, whom it will be necessary to call, are intimate friends of said Bayly, and will be very reluctant to state any facts to his prejudice. Nevertheless, fully aware of the disadvantage of my position, I confidently believe that, if your committee will give me a fair chance, I can prove all and more than I have charged.

BEN. E. GREEN.

Mr. WALSH. Is that Green, the reformed gambler?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an indorsement on this communication, made, as I understand, by the chairman of the select committee. Shall it be read?

Mr. LETCHER. That is an indorsement made by the committee, stating their reasons for not investigating the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is also a letter from Mr. Whittlesley accompanying the documents.

Mr. BAYLY. They have nothing to do with the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House only directed the chairman of the special committee to report the communication of Ben. E. Green, which has been read. The other documents accompanying it are not noticed by the resolution.

Mr. BAYLY. It is not, Mr. Speaker, on my own account, as God knows, that I take this course; but it is on account of this House, of which I am one of the oldest members, and whose confidence I have, to a large extent enjoyed, as the positions which I have occupied in this body show. It is on that account alone, that I ask this House to order a committee to look into this matter; and I ask the Speaker that no personal friend of mine be put upon that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What number of members does the gentleman propose that the committee shall consist of?

Mr. BAYLY. I presume, seven.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] will withdraw his resolution. It is giving entirely too much importance to the charges of some miserable vagabond. Who is this Green?

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to say a word or two in relation to this matter. At the time the bill was pending before the House providing for the payment of the indemnity to the Republic of Mexico, I was induced to oppose the propositions of the then chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. BAYLY.] This course I was induced to take by allegations made in reference to the then Secretary of State; allegations made by the very same parties who have filed these charges against the gentleman from Virginia. I was at that time indiscreet enough to rely so far on the truth of these allegations, as to commit myself, to a partial extent, before the House. But the result was this, that these parties never could and never did furnish me with the first fact to substantiate the allegations made, and which I was instanced to reproduce to some extent before this House. Experience, then, has taught me the folly of relying upon any statement of the gentleman who make these charges. I object therefore to raising any committee, because I know that such will be the end of it; that it will all end in smoke.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Virginia to move that this matter be referred to a committee of seven, with power to send for persons and papers?

Mr. BAYLY. That is my motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to make a suggestion to the House, which I hope will meet its approbation, and which I think will answer all the purposes of the appointment of a committee. My suggestion is, whether we cannot express the opinion of the House upon the charges contained in that paper by a motion to lay the whole proceedings upon the table, and thus give it a more emphatic reprobation than if it were referred to a committee.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put; and being put, Mr. BAYLY's motion was agreed to.

PAMELA BROWN.

The question then recurred upon ordering House bill (No. 176) "for the relief of Pamela Brown," to be engrossed and read a third time; and being put, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be read a third time.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the previous question does not still operate, and whether the gentleman from Indiana has now the right to make his motion, and debate it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question is exhausted.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I feel that it is my duty to call the attention of this House for a few minutes—perhaps not to exceed five minutes—to this bill. As the chairman of the committee to which this bill was referred, it became my duty to investigate it. The committee did investigate it, and reported upon it. But when it came back to the House, there was a bill from the Senate upon the same case, containing precisely the provisions which are contained in the amendment which has been reported from a Committee of the Whole House. When that bill came up in the House it was laid upon the table.

I was not in the Hall on Friday last when this bill was considered in Committee of the Whole, and when this amendment, to which I object, was adopted. I tried to get the floor this morning before the question was upon the amendment, but having failed, and the amendment having been adopted, I now feel it to be my duty to explain its effect.

Mrs. Brown applied at the Pension Office for the pension to which she claimed she was entitled under the general law of 1802. That application was rejected because she could not prove her claim. She could not establish the fact that her husband died of the wounds received in the war of 1812, and her application was, for that reason, rejected, and she came here and asked for special relief at the hands of Congress. And why? Because she could not establish her case according to the technical rules adopted at the Pension Office. She comes here and undertakes to establish substantially before Congress what she could not establish technically before the Department, and asks Congress to grant her relief.

And what would she have received, if she had succeeded in establishing her claim to a pension under the law of 1802? She would have received $100 per month for five years. And if she had established her right to a pension under the law of 1836, she would have received a pension of thirty dollars a month for five years. That is the law now in force, and under that law she could not have received more than the amount I have named. These were the facts under which the case came before us, and I ask the House if it was the duty of the committee to have reported more as special relief than she would have received under the general law, if she had been able to establish her claim technically at the Pension Office? The committee with which I am connected have adopted as their rule, that where special relief is granted, that special relief shall be made to correspond as nearly as possible to the general law. General laws were established on mature and deliberate consideration to cover a class of cases. The committee have adopted as a rule that they will not take special cases which cannot be proved at the Pension Office, and put them on a better footing than those which can. Why not give Mrs. Brown the same relief which she would have obtained had she proved her case in the Pension Office? I know of no reason. The bill, as amended, gives her a pension equal to the half pay of her husband as Major General from 1838 up to this time, and to continue during her natural life. I do not know what it will amount to, nor can we exactly tell until it is submitted to the Attorney General for his consideration. If it be the pay proper, then she would receive $100 per month since 1838. If it be the general receipts of Major General, then she would receive $200 per month since 1838. I will now yield to the gentleman from Virginia, who desires to make a few remarks.

Mr. FAULKNER. I thank my friend from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] for the privilege of making one or two remarks on this bill. When it was first announced this morning, I sought to obtain the floor, and to call attention to its provisions; but I was arrested by a stern and vociferous demand for the previous question. I have not risen to question Mrs. Brown's claim for a pension. Far from it. No member of this body would more promptly solace her declining days by some unmistakable evidence of the gratitude of her country than I would. I well remember, when but a mere youth, the delight which I derived from a motion made by General Harrison, then a member of the Senate, to confer on her a pension. I gave expression to my feelings in the first article which I ever wrote for a newspaper. I am therefore not opposed to giving her a liberal pension; but I am opposed to this bill as it now stands, because, instead of a pension, it bestows an enormous fortune upon that lady. I was in the House when the amendment was offered, a week ago. It attracted but little attention at the time, owing to the difficulty of learning precisely what its character was. It certainly attracted very little of my attention. Observing it the next day in the Daily Globe, I made a calculation of the amount bestowed by the amendment. I saw that the words "proper pay" of a Major General was not used, but such monthly pay as her husband was entitled to at his death. I found that if restricted in its construction to proper pay, it was giving her in hand $19,000, and $1,200 per annum—if it received a more liberal construction, such as the language of the amendment would justify, it was giving her from $38,000 to $56,000, according to the position which General Brown might have been occupying at his death, and from $2,500 to $3,500 per annum for the balance of her life, according to the same rule.

I made out a statement of my view of this law, and forwarded it to the Commissioner of Pensions, with the request that he would advise me of the construction which he would place on this amendment if it became a law, and what amount he would feel required to pay under its terms. Several days have elapsed since I addressed that letter to Judge Waldo, and although I requested an immediate answer, I have not, up to this hour, heard a word from him. I have, within the last half hour, sent a page to the Pension Office to hasten his reply. The messenger has not yet returned. Now, sir, it is certain, under this law, if passed, we shall vote to Mrs. Brown at least $19,000 in hand, and perhaps $56,000. If we are disposed to violate the whole object and spirit of the pension system, and to substitute enormous fortunes for pensions, let us at least do it understandingly. That is all I ask. Do not let us vote it in the dark, and protect ourselves behind the plea that we were entrapped by the phraseology of the law, and did not know what we were doing. This House shall have no such pretext for its action upon this occasion. The language of the amendment is very intelligible to the few who comprehend the mode in which the pay of an officer of the Army is calculated. It bestows an enormous sum—far beyond what any one would for a moment contemplate as a proper pension provision—and far beyond what the country would tolerate if they are made acquainted with it. I repeat, sir, I am for a just and liberal pension, but I am against the bestowal of fortunes, the lion's share of which, in all probability, is to go to some scheming and voracious agent.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. With the permission of the gentleman from Indiana, I will make a word of reply to the gentleman from Virginia. The gentleman said that when this matter was under consideration, a few days ago, it elicited very little attention. It attracted great attention. The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was read by the Clerk at the request of members. Reports have been made for the last thirteen years, in favor of giving this poor widow of seventy-nine years of age a pension. The report was read, and the committee, in voting, fully understood the case.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will ask the gentleman from Ohio, if the bill will not, by one construction of it, place $50,000 in the hands of this lady?

Mr. TAYLOR. I understand this: that favorable reports have been made in this case from 1838 to this time, recommending that she might receive half the pay proper for her deceased husband, one of the most gallant men ever known in the American service. It has been withheld from that time to this, about $100 a month, which I am willing she should now receive.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The amount to which Mrs. Brown would be entitled, depends upon the law under which she would receive it. Under the law of 1802 she would receive half of the pay received by her deceased husband at the time of his death, which would amount to $100 per month, as the whole pay of the deceased would be $200. Why this distinction and this uncertainty in legislating for this lady. She is to be given, in hand, $20,000, at the lowest rate, and $1,200 a year as long as she lives. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] just stated that Mrs. Brown was seventy-nine years of age.

Mr. TAYLOR. I understood she was seventy-nine, but a friend near me says sixty-nine. I hope she may live twenty years more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The gentleman from Ohio is mistaken in her age. The committee, at the time the bill was reported, understood, from the evidence before them, that she was seventy-nine years of age. That is my understanding now. I do not care whether she is sixty-nine or seventy-nine. If the object is to give her $20,000, I say it is not intended for her, but others. The $1,200 a year will be for her, and it will be as large, if not the largest, pension ever given—$100 per month. The gratuity of $20,000 is for others.

The object of the pension laws in this country is not, as in England, to create large estates in favor of particular families; but it is to provide reasonably and properly for those who have served the country. Our general laws express the opinion of Congress from time to time as to the proper provision to be made. We are giving to the soldiers who served with General Brown, and fought as well as he, eight dollars per month, and to the widows of soldiers who have died six dollars a month for five years. There is no influence brought into this House, or the other end of the Capitol, to get anything more in these cases; but Mrs. Brown, and her family must be more magnificently provided for than any family that has ever yet been provided for by the Government. I do not call into question the bravery, gallantry, and distinguished services of General Brown. I admit all that is claimed for them. The report I made to this House admits them to the full extent, and no gentleman will go further than I will in an appreciation of these services; but I am in favor of general legislation; and if we have general laws for the relief of the soldiers of the country and their widows, we should not go beyond them, and make special laws.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman from Indiana permit me a moment, to make an observation?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to make an explanation on behalf of my colleague. This case has been long pending in this body; and the report to which my colleague has alluded has been often before this body. I am of opinion that fifteen years since, a very distinguished member of this House from Massachusetts—Mr. John Reid—made the very disclosures in relation to this case that have been made now by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS], and the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER]. He then instanced how we act without proper information, and showed how we have totally dissipated the $50,000—the naval pension fund. [Laughter.] As often as this case has been pending it has been rejected.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The widow of General Brown would have had a pension long ago, had she been satisfied with that provided for by that law which governs in all such cases, when application was made to the pension office. But that was not sufficient. A fortune was asked to be given to her. That is the reason why reports have been made from year to year, and yet no pension given. That is the reason why I oppose this proposition now. I feel it to be my duty to oppose it; and I should be glad if I felt it my duty to go in favor of the bill. I was in favor of a bill to give a pension to Mrs. Brown. I am now in favor of a bill which will give such a pension to her as the widows of other major generals receive who die in the service of their country; but I am not willing to go beyond that. I am not willing to give to other persons besides the widow $20,000, or $56,000, as the case may be; and I think the construction will be in favor of the $56,000. I am willing to have a decent support provided for the widow of Genera

Brown. That is the policy of the pension laws of this country.

I am not willing to go any further. There has been a singular course pursued here this morning in reference to this bill. The gentleman who called the previous question on the bill knew very well that I felt an interest in it. I had myself reported a bill to the House for her relief. I had opposed a bill of the Senate on the same subject; and when the facts were fairly and fully explained to the House, two months ago, the House decided against the bill of the Senate, and ordered it to be laid on the table, where it lies still. This morning, when I wished fully to explain the nature of the bill, the extent of it, the amount of money to be given under it to this aged female, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Knox] refused to allow me the opportunity of doing so, although I had charge of the bill, and am, to some extent, responsible for the legislation of this House in regard to it. Why was this? Because the gentleman must have felt convinced that the same statement of facts which had laid the bill on the table before, would have killed his amendment. It was in vain that I told him I wanted to address the House, and that it was proper I should be heard. The gentleman refused to allow me to be heard.

I am against the bill now. I hope it may be defeated. We cannot go back and strike out the amendment. We are past that point. I hope to see a proper bill passed for the relief of Mrs. Brown; but I hope this bill, as amended, will be lost.

Mr. McMULLIN. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Knox,] I voted for the bill before; and now I say to the gentleman from Illinois, that if he is willing to take such a pension for Mrs. Brown as she would be entitled to under the general pension laws, I am ready and willing, and anxious to vote to give it to her. But if the gentleman insists on having more than that, I will vote in favor of laying the bill on the table, and will submit to the House a motion to lay it on the table, unless the gentleman from Illinois, will express his determination to ask only the same sort of justice for Mrs. Brown as the general law provides for the widows of other major generals.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am willing that Mrs. Brown shall receive a pension under a general law. I am willing to remove her from under the technical rules required to be conformed to, at the pension office, and allow the loose proof which she has presented to govern the case. I am willing that she should receive a pension under the law of 1802, which will give her $1,200 for five years; or under the laws of 1836 and 1852, which would give her thirty dollars a month for ten years. I am willing that she should have relief under either of those laws, but I am opposed to giving a gratuity of $20,000 to any person. That is the reason why I am opposed to the bill as amended.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon (interrupting,) I desire to say a few words upon this case, if the gentleman from Indiana will allow me.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Certainly.

Mr. LANE. I could not be induced to say a word upon this matter, if I did not feel it a duty which I owe to the House and the country. I think no gentleman in the House will say that I am not a friend to the soldier, and that I do not love and appreciate the character of the brave. To no man in this House will I yield my respect for the memory of General Brown, and in this case I desire to see justice done to his family and widow, and I want to see her stand upon the same footing precisely with the widows of other officers, and gallant men who have fallen in the defense of their country.

I know an instance of a widow of an officer who fell under my own eyes. He was as gallant a man as General Brown, or as any man God ever made. After having received half a dozen shots, he was ordered to the rear. He replied, "It is not worth while; I have but five minutes to live, and perhaps not that, and I will front the enemy while I have life." He fell from his horse with those words upon his lips. I mention this as simply one case, but I know of many others. That man died without leaving any property. The night before he fell he seemed to have some presentiment that he would fall the next day, and he talked about his wife and children. "If I should fall," said he, "what will be the fate of my wife and children? I have not fifty dollars in the world."

Now, you have granted to that widow, and the orphan children, not one of whom are able to help themselves, half pay proper for five years; and that pay you have extended for five years longer, and that will be the end of it. Now, why is there a disposition, on the part of this House, to discriminate between Mrs. Brown and the widows of other officers? Let there be no discrimination.

I say, further, that if this bill passes, the moment it receives the signature of the President, Mrs. Brown will draw from the Treasury of the United States $56,000, and there is no accounting officer of the Treasury Department who will refuse it.

Now, do you want to make such a gratuity to anybody? I see no objection whatever to giving Mrs. Brown the $100 per month, to which she would be entitled under the law of 1802, or the thirty dollars per month to which she would be entitled under the law of 1836. I think myself that fifty dollars per month, which some one has proposed, would be a reasonable compensation. She ought to have a reasonable compensation. But this House ought not to discriminate between Mrs. Brown and others.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Hendricks] has well said that there are several pension laws, under which this could have been allowed. Under the law of 1802 she would have been entitled to $100 per month, or, more exactly, to $102 per month as half pay, for the full pay proper was $204. Under the law of 1836, she would have been entitled to thirty dollars per month. Now, as Major General Brown died of the wounds received in the service of his country, under the circumstances, it would be fair, perhaps, to grant his widow a pension for ten years.

I ask the attention of the House to the reading of the amendment. I say it is fair to place Mrs. Brown upon the same footing precisely that other widows are placed upon. It is not fair that a discrimination should be made between this and other similar cases because she happened to be the fortunate wife of a brave general. I have known many brave soldiers fall, and their widows received only four dollars per month. But let her have all that his position would entitle her to, and that is enough.

Why, sir, but a day or two ago, the House refused to consider a bill increasing the pay of the poor soldier, who now receives only eight dollars per month, while you now propose to give this widow lady enough to pay a whole regiment of them. You nominally give them eight dollars a month; and, after deducting the charges which are made, they really do not receive more than four dollars per month. Sir, they are brave men; they bare their breasts to the foe as gallantly as any men who ever lived. And why this discrimination? Why legislate money into the pockets of any one, when it is not necessary for their support? It is for others, and not for Mrs. Brown. It is to make a fortune for somebody. I hope this species of favoritism will not be countenanced by the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I do not think it is necessary to say anything more than I have already said in reference to this bill. I have already made all the explanation that I desire to make. The friends of the bill had explained it this morning as fully as they desired, and I do not, therefore, see any further necessity for debate. I withdraw the motion which I made to reconsider, and move to lay the bill upon the table. I make this motion because the bill is not now amendable. I ask the Chair, however, if the bill could be recommitted, so that it could be amended and referred back to the House?

Mr. HUGHES. I trust the gentleman will not move to lay upon the table. I hope he will not commend to others what he himself complained of this morning.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time were reconsidered, the bill could then be recommitted, and any amendment made that is desirable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time prevails, it will be subject to amendment, notwithstanding the fact that the amendment has been adopted by the House, and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The House has adopted an amendment which is objectionable, and from which we cannot relieve ourselves, as I understand it. The amendment has been adopted, the vote by which it was adopted reconsidered, and the motion to reconsider laid upon the table. It is therefore no longer in the possession of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An amendment, by way of substitute to the bill, would be in order, and would supersede the amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is no difficulty about the matter, if the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed be reconsidered.

Mr. HAVEN. I should like to speak five minutes on this matter, although I am wholly uninterested in it.

Mr. HUGHES. I have written a substitute which I hope may be received. I think that it will meet with the approbation of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I yield the floor, that the substitute may be read for the information of the House.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to place the name of Mrs. Pamela Brown, widow of the late Major General Jacob Brown, on the list of pensioners, and to pay her a pension, at the rate of fifty dollars per month; said pension to commence the first day of January, 1838, and to continue during her natural life.

Mr. HUGHES. With the gentleman's permission, I will say a few words on the subject.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I have made the motion to lay the bill upon the table, and I shall not withdraw it, if the friends of the bill insist on going back to give any amount, against the whole policy of the law.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. Then I hope that the friends of the bill will stand together and oppose the gentleman's motion.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. STUART. There are enough of us here to pass the bill.

[Renewed cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. CUMMING. It is a disgrace to the country to give a major general's widow a pension of only fifty dollars per month.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HENDRICKS. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion that the bill be laid upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. READY. Is it in order to move to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not, pending the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. HUGHES. If the motion to lay upon the table be voted down, I presume that the friends of the bill can then be heard?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to lay upon the table be voted down, the bill will then be open for discussion.

The question was taken on Mr. HENDRICKS's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Bliss, Bocoock, Boyce, Chastain, Christian, Clingman, Colquitt, Craig, Cullom, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, Faulkner, Fuller, Giddings, Grow, Hendricks, Hubbard, Houston, George W. Smyth, Andrew Stuart, Trout, Vansant, Walsh, Witte, and Hendrick B. Wright—65.

NAYS—Messrs. Appleton, David J. Bailey, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Bridges, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chamberlain, Chandler, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cumming, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Edgerton, Edmunds, Thomas D. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollicoffer—93.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Speaker, if the House will bear with me for a short time, I shall be grateful, and I will try and condense all I desire to say within the space of five minutes. From the little experience I have had in this House, I am convinced, I am certain, there is no more fatal way of attacking a bill or any measure, than to take the floor and speak against it, by argument or insinuation, when it has arrived at a point where it is not further amendable under our rules, and is beyond the exercise of the discretion of the House as to its details. Such has been the course of the gentlemen who have addressed the House since the previous question was voted down. They have damaged this bill, sir; I am afraid they have utterly defeated it. And that this widowed lady is again to be sent adrift under the frowns of the House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no connection with any parties who are interested in this bill. I do not know the face of one of them—they are strangers to me; but there is a name mentioned in this bill that will not allow me to sit still, although in no way connected with the matter, and hear the claims of Mrs. Brown disparaged or weakened in this House.

Sir, I speak on this subject because I live at a place from which, when I walk into the street from my front door, I can look over into Canada, upon those fields where Major General Brown—whose widow speaks to us in this bill—during the war of 1812, after the reverses of our arms, and when gloom overspread the whole nation, moved with his gallant men as a pillar of fire. Yes, sir, and when he moved, success, order, confidence, victory, followed in his train; and he retrieved our tarnished honor; established the success of our arms; and the whole nation felt proud, and was exalted by what he did. And I should be ashamed beyond recovery, Mr. Speaker, to go home to my constituents, and have it known there that I had, under any circumstances, voted against doing full justice—with no stinted hand—to the widow of that honorable, brave, and gallant man.

Sir, he was not educated to arms. He was a farmer—a brave, noble, cheerful, and hearty man, of solid sense. He won the confidence of the country. He served it cheerfully, at the peril of his life, and I will not forget him when I hear his widow's voice.

I desire to be understood. I do not vote for this bill simply because General Brown was a brave and gallant man, as I have described him. No, sir. There were other men who marched with him, shoulder to shoulder, in those dark days, and during those fearful struggles.

There was Scott, and Ripley, and Miller, and McNeal, and Porter, and there too was that gallant man whose death was announced in the papers but yesterday, General Towson. These men and others, sir, marched with Jacob Brown along our Canadian frontier, and in the enemy's country, at Fort Erie, at Chippewa, at Lundy's Lane, and at Bridgewater; they retrieved the disasters that had fallen upon our army, they burnished up our tarnished honor, and made the country hopeful, cheerful, confident, and proud. Sir, did you not read anew in the papers of yesterday, how the dispatches from Fort Erie told the country that Towson's batteries on that occasion were a continued sheet and flame of fire?

But, sir, I do not desire that this bill shall pass upon any considerations of this kind. I only mention these things as a reason why I would have this House, at this point, stop and look at the facts before they "whistle down the wind" this aged widow, who, we are told, is bending under the weight of seventy-nine years, upon a suggestion made here, that proof could not be made at the Pension Office that her husband's death was the result of wounds, exposure, and hardships in the field, whilst in the country's service.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the gentleman allow me one minute?

Mr. HAVEN. I beg to be excused. We are told by my friend from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] and I beg him to understand, and also the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] that I approve their desire to watch the Treasury, and to keep an eye upon all these expenses. We are told by them, that, under this bill, it is uncertain how much Mrs. Brown will get. Why, sir, is it possible that this House has no knowledge of the English language? Cannot it understand a plain narration? What is the difficulty? Let me read the language of the bill:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place the name of Pamela Brown, widow of the late Major General Jacob Brown."

Sir, I have no desire to slur or hurry over either of those names; I dwell upon them with peculiar pleasure, and the country recognize them as belonging to her.

—"upon the list of the pensioners, and pay her a pension at the rate of one half of the pay per month which her husband was entitled to at the time of his death."

What does that mean? One half pay per month. What was the monthly pay of Major General Brown? That is the only question. It is now how much were his perquisites? how much were his emoluments? or how much were his commutation rations and traveling expenses, about which things we have heard so much in discussing the army appropriation bill within the few days here; but it is how much his pay was per month? The law settles that question. The Army Register settles it. It is there stated, and any gentleman who knows anything about the law, knows what his pay—his pay proper—per month was. I submit, then, to this House, that there is nothing in the suggestion that this bill is equivocal in its language. It is clear and distinct, and the only question properly open for discussion is, whether the half pay per month is too much or not? and whether it goes back too far, starts from too remote a period or not?

Mr. Speaker, I desire to stop here, and say, that in my judgment, our pension laws are grossly wrong. I believe that in too many cases, to too great an extent, they allow agents, and persons of no particular merit, to speculate, so to speak, upon the blood, gallantry, and noble deeds of men who have performed valuable services for the country. They ought to be guarded and graduated more carefully. But I am not disposed to set them aside upon this particular occasion. I, for one, will not commence reform here, when this case comes before us; and when those who represent General Brown's flesh and blood, appeal to Congress and ask us to remember his gallant services when the country was in danger; and smooth the declining years of his bereaved and venerable widow.

Mr. FAULKNER. Will the gentleman yield me the floor for a moment?

Mr. HAVEN. Not at present, as I am almost through with my remarks. Gentlemen say that there are over $56,000 to be given to Mrs. Brown by this bill. They say it is too much, and that it is more than she can well spend for the purpose of insuring her comfort and happiness during the few years she is to stay with us. I confess that it is more than I would pay to this lady, or those interesting persons, his and her heirs, who will represent her after her death.

But this bill makes no such princely provisions. It provides for the payment to her of one half of the regular monthly pay which Major General Brown received, and that, too, not to commence until ten years after his death, which was in 1828. Sir, will that exceed what the General himself would have accumulated for them, if his years had not been prematurely shortened by wounds and exposure in the country's service? Sir, I think it is more than the widow requires, as the bill is. It may be that it goes back too far; and I desire those gentlemen here who are friendly to this bill—who favor this pension—and who wish to see exact justice done—when I have finished the remarks which I am about making—to settle the precise point which they wish to fix for the commencement of this pension. If they desire to put it at a later date than 1838, let them do so. I prefer they should—

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Now, Mr. Speaker, one thing more, and then I will leave the matter with the House. It has already taken up too much time—time is getting precious now, sir. But it would not have been necessary to have taken up the time which has been consumed on it, were it not for the fact that these gentlemen made a stand on what they were pleased to call the equivocal language contained in the bill; that they seized upon, as the very Ther-mopyla of the case, and by which they could, if they had got a vote upon this bill, have finished it, and defeated it forever. Now, there is my honorable friend from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] to whom I wish to say a word. I thank him for the manner in which he has acted in relation to all this class of business, and I am far from undertaking to disparage him for what he has done in reference to this bill. He tells us that this woman—this widow—comes here as a matter of grace—as a matter of favor; and that she could not produce proof to satisfy the Pension Department; and that he seems to think a reason for disparaging this claim and defeating this bill.

Let me draw the attention of that gentleman to his own conclusions, to his own sense of justice, on this subject. What does he tell us here? He tells us that he felt constrained, on the proof before the committee of which he is chairman, to report a bill in this lady's favor; and, sir, he has reported that proof to the House. It is satisfactory to all of us, and has been satisfactory to him. What has weakened it in his judgment to-day? Was he willing to compromise with his conscience and his judgment on this question of proof, when he reported his bill in favor of this woman? Or did he, by his small bill, intend to stop half way between the bill now under consideration and nothing at all, because, in his opinion, the proofs he has reported only half established the fact in dispute? Sir, I give him credit for better logic than that. His conclusion is a non sequitur, and I commend my friend from Indiana to the task of over-looking, re-examining, over-hauling his argument, and seeing if his better judgment will not prevail; seeing if he did not report his bill because the proof was sufficient, abundant, and if he does not oppose this bill only because of its amount.

Now, one thing more, Mr. Speaker. I dislike this kind of legislation. As a new thing, if it were the commencement of legislation for pensions, I should be strongly inclined to vote against this bill myself, notwithstanding that Mrs. Brown, with her seventy-nine years upon her head, stood before us asking for this boon. But it is a regular part and parcel of our system of legislation. And I will ask the House, if I can induce them to go with me, at some proper time to correct it. But I ask them now, in God's name, not to commence their reform on the trembling head of that poor old lady, the relict of that man who, as I said before, retrieved our disasters, and brought sunshine to the country, after the reverses which had befallen us on our northern frontiers in the war of 1812.

Now, sir, this very report, on which our action is founded, tells us that the widow of Captain Schmuck had received a pension on the same principle; that Elizabeth Armistead, if I remember aright, received a pension on the same principle at the last session of Congress. The next instance is, and I speak it with pride, because he, too, whose widow was provided for here, was a gallant man. He, too, saw sharp service with Brown in the war of 1812 on our northern frontier. The next instance is that of the widow of Brevet Major General Worth. The bill granted to her half pay, (that is the language of the bill as appears in this report) during her natural life.

A MEMBER. Was it per month or per year?

Mr. HAVEN. Half pay, no matter whether it is per month or per year. According to my arithmetic, the aggregate of all the time would be the same. That bill was passed on the 7th of January, 1853, as appears from the report.

Mr. LETCHER. It only went back for two or three years.

Mr. HAVEN. Now, let me say this in reference to the remark of my friend from Virginia [Mr. LETCHER.] He says that the pension which was granted to Mrs. Worth only went back two or three years. Why, sir, that gallant man, General Worth, had only died two or three years before the passage of that act, so that it reached back to the time of his lamented death; whereas this bill proposes to start ten years from the time of the death of Major General Brown. He died in 1838, and this bill proposes to give the half pay to the widow from 1838.

Now, I want to ask the friends of this bill—those who have the charge of this matter—if their judgment tells them to ask that this pension should begin at a later date; for if it is so, this is the time I want to know it.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Sir, I am an utter stranger to this bill. I know nothing of this case, only what has been disclosed in debate here to-day. I have spoken for this bill in some shape, because the memory of the deeds of Jacob Brown is very dear to me and to my constituents. The next precedent I find is that of Mary W. Thompson, Elizabeth W. Lomax, and Mrs. A. M. Dade, whose pensions, according to this report, commenced at the date of their widowhood—not ten years after—and continued during their lives. These bills were passed during the last Congress, and I remember that some of these widows came from the State of Virginia, and my friend from that State, [Mr. FAULKNER]—I hope he will excuse me—on that occasion did not find any unsurmountable scruples in reference to them, because the language was equivocal, or because he did not know whether it was for half pay or for whole pay. And why does he find objection now? Has he grown wiser with years?

But I have said more than I intended upon this case. We have blocked up the business of the House with this matter longer than we ought to have done. I am sorry the precedent has been set, but I will never recede from it, on the case of Mrs. Brown. Other truly needy persons are awaiting our action upon this Calendar, and as we have too long blocked up other business against the bill, and as three gentlemen have spoken consecutively against the bill, and only one in its favor, I call for the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. ORR. I rise to a privileged motion, but I wish the gentleman from New York first to withdraw his demand for the previous question.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. ORR. Very well, then, if the gentleman does not choose to do so, I will not make the motion I intended, and if the friends of the bill think they can pass it, let them try, and they will, I think, find themselves mistaken.

Mr. HAVEN. I feel bound to regard the wishes of the friends of this bill, rather than those of the gentleman from South Carolina, and therefore I cannot withdraw.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for tellers upon the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. WHEELER and CHAMBERLAIN were appointed.

The House was then divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 73.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. ORR. When I rose before, I did it with a view of making a motion which would enable the friends of this bill to relieve themselves from the difficulty in which they have been placed, and enable them to pass the bill in a manner which I understood to be acceptable to them. But I confess I was surprised when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HAVEN] refused to withdraw the demand for the previous question, especially when it was understood by several of us who could not support the bill in its present shape, that if the bill was not laid on the table, an amendment would be offered that would be acceptable to the friends of the bill. We understood that the friends of the bill would accept an amendment, and it was for that reason that many of us voted against laying the bill upon the table who would have voted for the motion rather than pass the bill in its present shape.

Mr. HUGHES. I hope the House will not adopt the amendment recommended by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Those who observed the proceedings of the House will have noticed that I tried to get the floor. I myself believed that the original bill, if properly understood, appropriated none too large an amount in this case. But, rather than hazard it, I sent up an amendment which I had prepared, and which, if I could have obtained the floor, I should have advocated. But I could not get the floor. And now, sir, I give notice that, whenever I can get it before the House, I shall present it as a substitute, and urge that that meager sum, at least, be awarded to this aged widow.

Mr. HAVEN. If my friend will allow me but a moment, in order to put myself right, I will not trouble the House again in reference to this matter. The gentleman from South Carolina spoke of an understanding upon the part of the friends of the bill. Sir, I had no understanding with any one. I had had no conversation with any one upon the subject until it came up in the House to-day. But, sir, when I was appealed to to withdraw the demand for the previous question, there was a general cry of dissent among the friends of the bill, with whom there must have been an understanding, if with any one, and therefore I declined to withdraw the demand.

One word more, and I have done. My friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] shows me the statute in reference to Mrs. Worth. It puts her on the pension roll at the rate of fifty dollars per month. Now, to show why I made the assertion that I did, I desire to read from the committee's report.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I wish to remark that Worth was Colonel, and Brown was Major General.

Mr. HAVEN. I only want to put myself right. On page second of the Senate report I find the following:

"Act of January 7, 1853, for the relief of Margaret Worth, widow of Brevet Major General Worth, granting to her half pay during her natural life."

I was misled by this, and if the House understand the explanation, I shall now resume my seat.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from Oregon to state that at the time Worth was Colonel.

Mr. LANE. He was.

Mr. JONES. That is true, but he was Major General by brevet; and at the time of his death he had the command of Major General by brevet. He died in Texas while in that command, and receiving pay as such.

Mr. LANE. I think that he was receiving pay as Colonel.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.] He himself conceded that the amount of the bill was too large, yet he concluded his speech by moving the previous question, which precluded any reduction of the amount contained in the bill.

The gentleman made an eloquent speech. He eulogized the character and services of Major General Brown. I have nothing to say in derogation of them. Nobody can appreciate his ability and gallantry more than I do; but I feel that it is my duty, as a Representative in this body, not to yield to these appeals to the sympathies and feeling of honorable gentlemen. I remember that at the last session of Congress the bill for the relief of Mrs. Worth, now quoted as a precedent for giving this large pension to Mrs. Brown, was carried through Congress by the same appeal. So anxious were members to pass it, so strong was the feeling in favor of Mrs. Worth, that the previous question was demanded, and I was cut off from speaking to the bill, and the only opportunity that I had of being heard was on a motion to reconsider.

When I then made the objection that the bill would be quoted as a precedent, that we were extending our pension system too far, what was the reply? I was told that there would never again be such a case; that we had no other such officer as General Worth; and that if, perchance, we should hereafter have a case of the same sort, the same principle should be applied. I do not know whether that case goes to the extent that this one does; but I am willing to give Mrs. Brown a pension according to the usual form. I do not know but I would go a little further. And to enable the House to go back, to put the bill in an acceptable shape, and to preserve consistency in our legislation, I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. If the reconsideration be agreed to, it will then be in order to move a substitute. I am of opinion that it will not be in order to strike out that which the House has already inserted; hence, the only way the amendment could be made, would be by way of substitute, when the reconsideration was effected. I would suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUGHES] offer his substitute, and then allow the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to move his amendment, so that the sense of the House may be fairly tested. By doing that the bill may be passed, and the House relieved from its embarrassment.

The question was then taken; and the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The question recurred upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. HUGHES. I now propose to strike out the enacting clause, and insert as a substitute for the bill what has already been read at the Clerk's desk.

I have been seeking the floor to say something upon this bill, but gentlemen upon my left say, let us vote. I do not wish to occupy the time of the House any further than by reading the last clause of the report of the committee of which the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] is chairman. He says, in this report made to the House:

"When General Brown entered the Army, his property and business rendered him independent. He served the country well. But, abandoning his business, his pecuniary affairs became involved, and after many years of suffering he died, 'covered with glory,' but leaving an embarrassed estate. The widow of General Brown is now seventy-nine years old, and is dependent upon her friends for that support which the Government ought to secure to her."

Upon that report the committee introduced a bill here to pay Mrs. General Brown thirty dollars a month, from the 1st day of January, 1854; to last ten years, should she exist so long! This was the magnanimity of my friend from Indiana; and I wonder not that he advocated so warmly a bill that proposed to give such a gross amount to Mrs. Brown.

It would be useless for me to advocate this cause before the House. It would be useless for me to point you to the many brave, gallant, and honorable acts of General Brown. They are engraven upon the grateful hearts of his countrymen; and the cold monumental marble that has been raised by order of this Government to mark his grave, points you to the fact, that he lost his life in the heroic defense of his country. Gentlemen have but to wander with me one of these pleasant mornings, and read for themselves the following, on the east face of the monument erected by Congress to his memory, and written by President Adams. That inscription is as follows:

SACRED

To the memory of

Major General JACOB BROWN,

By birth, by education, by principle,

Devoted to Peace.

In defense of his country,

A warrior;

To her he dedicated his life.

Wounds received in her cause abridged his days.

The amendment which I have offered in the nature of a substitute for the bill is precisely of the same nature as the bills which have passed Congress granting a pension to the widows of Generals Worth, Belknap, Armistead, and Lomax. The cases are exactly similar, with the exception that the high rank held by Major General Brown differs from that of those other honorable gentlemen to whom I have referred. Mrs. Brown exists to-day a spared monument—the last relic of an officer who held that high position—a position which is now held by Major General Scott. And while we have spent some time during the present session of Congress on the bill to give a new title to General Scott, let us not, for Heaven's sake, by all we hold dear, by all we cherish as patriots and lovers of our country, by those memories in which are embalmed the names of those who perished in that country's defense—let us not, I say, hesitate to do this last act of simple justice to Mrs. Brown.

I will not call the previous question, as was said by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

Mr. LANE. It is now proposed to put the bill in a proper shape; and I desire to say that in that shape I hope it will pass. I do not rise to say one word in opposition to what has been said by the gentlemen from New York, [Messrs. HUGHES and HAVEN.]

I have no desire to contravene what has been said by my friend from New York over the way, [Mr. HAVEN,] or by the gentleman from New York who has just taken his seat, [Mr. HUGHES.] Both of them have paid high tributes to the gallantry, worth, and patriotism of General Brown. And if I could command words I would join them in their eulogies, and I might say more than either. But enough has been said in that respect. You have an amendment before you, which, if you adopt it, will give to Mrs. Brown over $9,000, besides placing her on the pension list at the rate of fifty dollars per month for the balance of her life. I think she ought to have it.

I have a word to say to my friend from New York, [Mr. HAVEN.] There is this difference between him and myself: I have been sometime in the field, and have had the command of soldiers. I do not mention that through any sentiment of vanity, but because it gives me the right to say that the credit of victory is not always to be ascribed entirely to the officer in lieu of the men. I am for giving equal credit to both officers and men. I want to have even handed justice done to all. I desire to see justice done to the widow of General Brown. You have a proposition here giving her a good pension, and which I think the House will readily adopt. But when you do that I desire to say that, in my opinion, there are many objects in the country entitled to your protection in this regard, entitled to bounties of this kind. Will you extend the same favor to them? Will you still require the widows of soldiers who have fallen fighting the battles of their country, to subsist on four dollars per month, while here you have before you a bill voting $20,000 at once to a widow of an officer. Now, I mention this that the House may look to consistency in its action. I am willing to do justice to her if I knew that the House would be willing to do the same justice to others.

I am not quite done yet. I have the floor, and intend to move the previous question, unless my friend from Illinois [Mr. KNOX] wants to take the floor. It is not worth while for me to say that the amendment pleases me, and will please this House, and will, I am confident, be adopted. It is all that Mrs. Brown herself would like to have, and perhaps a little more.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Will the gentleman allow me to have the floor one moment? I do not wish to address the House again, but just to make a few remarks in reply to the gentleman from New York. That gentleman has done me the honor to read to the House a portion of my report in this case. I do not think that the gentleman from New York, by his ardent speech, indorses the gallantry of Major General Brown in any better terms than I did in the report which I made; and it is not generous in him, or in any other gentleman upon this floor, to try to place me in the position of being opposed to granting a pension to Mrs. Brown. I have not occupied that position at all, but I have occupied the position upon this floor, from first to last, in favor of a consistent course of legislation, whether it applies to one person or another.

Mr. HAVEN. I beg pardon of my friend from Indiana for interrupting him. I endeavored to do him full justice in ascribing to him a desire to do full justice to Mrs. Brown. If I did not do so, it was entirely unintentional.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The gentleman cannot claim much for doing me full justice. I did not say that I was in favor of giving Mrs. Brown thirty dollars a month, because the case was not established. I said, in my report, that Mrs. Brown—and I said it in my speech—had applied to the Pension Office, and that, under the laws and regulations which govern that bureau, she could not make out her case there.

Mr. HUGHES. Did not the Pension Bureau once pass her case?

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Gallagher did once pass her case, but it was rejected by two different Secretaries. I did not say I was in favor of paying her thirty dollars a month because her case was not made out at the Pension Bureau. I said, in the report, that the facts, in my judgment, were established, not technically, but substantially, by such evidence as would satisfy a jury sitting in the box.

It is right that the different Departments should have technical rules by which they are to be governed; and, when a case which has merit in it cannot be made out according to the technicalities and laws of the Department, it is proper then to come here to obtain relief. But they are not satisfied with such relief as they would have got at the Department, provided their case had been made out there. They must go further, and seek relief far beyond that. If the proof had been full and complete in this case, under the rules of the Department, Mrs. Brown would have received $100 a year for five years. If she had succeeded under the law of 1836, she would have received thirty dollars a month; and by the law of 1852 that was renewed, so as to give her thirty dollars a month for ten years, and then it would end.

Now, the committee framed the bill under the last expressed will of Congress. I ask if it is the duty of the committee to disregard, in its action, the expression of the will of Congress; or is it rather the duty of a committee to follow that will, and to follow the analogy of the laws which have been enacted? We adopted the last legislation of Congress upon the subject, which legislation gives thirty dollars a month for ten years, and we framed the bill accordingly.

I have no objection to Mrs. Brown having a pension under the law of 1802. She originally wanted that, and that satisfied her then. That also has satisfied others. But it does not satisfy her now. That law would have given her $100 a month for five years, and I ask the gentleman to find and point me to a case of general legislation, where a widow has received a pension for a longer period than five years. I know of no case since the year 1800. All the soldiers who have fought the battles of our country receive the pension for only five years. There is already enough of aristocracy in the Army without increasing it, by increasing the pay after the death of the officer. I am not in favor of this bill as it has been amended, but I am in favor of a consistent system of legislation.

I propose to offer an amendment, without, however, any idea that it will be adopted, after the course which the House has already pursued. I propose to give her the full relief which she would have received under the general law. If she had succeeded in establishing her claim under the law of 1836, she would have received a pension for five years. That is what is given to all other persons under the general law.

I ask again, if it is the duty of a committee to follow the analogies of general laws in their action, or to disregard them? If this House wishes to give Mrs. Brown $100,000, she shall enjoy it, so far as I am concerned, without a single afterthought. I wish her all prosperity as the widow of Major General Brown. I have no feeling but that. If there are others who are to be enriched by such means, they will never be enriched out of the public Treasury by my vote. I think I have pursued such a course as a committeeman ought to pursue in reporting bills to the House. Now, if my friend from Oregon will yield me the floor still further for that purpose, I will offer an amendment, and then call the previous question.

Mr. LANE. I will allow the gentleman to offer his amendment, but I do not yield for him to call the previous question.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I then move to strike out all after the enacting clause in the bill, and insert the following:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, upon the roll of pensioners of the United States, at the rate of $100 per month, to commence the 18th of January, 1854, to continue five years from date, and then cease.

Mr. MILLSON. Now, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. LANE. I will yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not propose to prolong this debate further than to notice a remark which fell from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HAVEN,] some minutes since, in which he referred to the case of Mrs. Lomax, which he has somewhat misapprehended. The gentleman took occasion to say that there was a Virginia case which passed the last Congress, and on that occasion there was no scruple or objection upon the part of the Virginia delegation. My purpose now is to set the gentleman right upon that subject.

I know that allusions have been sometimes made to what is supposed to be the disposition of the Virginia delegation upon this floor, that they only vote for appropriations affecting them or their State, while they vote against such as affect only other constituencies. It is hardly necessary for me here to enter upon a vindication of the course of the Virginia delegation in this House, where it is well understood. Although allusions of this sort are sometimes made in the newspapers, I regret that the gentleman from New York has thought proper thus to speak of the Virginia delegation.

Mr. HAVEN. I may have been again misled by the report. I relied entirely upon that. If the report is wrong, the gentleman from Virginia will correct it. I stood entirely upon the report. That says, among others, that Mrs. Lomax was to receive her pension from the date of her widowhood, to continue during her natural life.

Mr. MILLSON. I understand the facts perfectly, and it is for the purpose of stating them that I have risen.

Mr. HAVEN. I wish the gentleman from Virginia would let this matter pass. Let us have the previous question, and come to a vote.

Mr. MILLSON. I have but a word to say, and I have done. This case first passed the Senate. It was reported first as one of the strongest cases, and I think was the strongest case then presented. It came to the House of Representatives, and was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar. When it came up in Committee of the Whole, a motion was made by the then chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, [Mr. Harris, of Tennessee,] to reduce the amount to what would have been granted under the general law, and there was not a word of objection made to that motion by any one of the Virginia delegation. The committee adopted the amendment, and the bill passed the House in its amended form. It went to the Senate where the amendment was concurred in, and the pension of Mrs. Lomax was reduced to thirty dollars per month for five years, commencing with the date of the application on the passage of the bill.

Afterwards the other bills, seven or eight in number, which had passed the Senate, at the same time came to this House, and without being referred to the Committee of the Whole, as was Mrs. Lomax's bill, were taken up by suspension of the rules, and under the operation of the previous question, passed, just as they passed the Senate. Even the gentleman who made the motion to reduce Mrs. Lomax's allowance thought it was exceedingly unjust to subject her to a rule which was not applied to any of the others, who stood on precisely the same ground. Then it was, at the close of Congress, that we passed a supplemental act restoring Mrs. Lomax's bill to the footing which it occupied when it passed the Senate. So that it seems, that so far from the Virginia case being pressed through Congress by the Virginia members, it was the only one subjected to the operation of this rule, and not a single delegate from Virginia opposed the reduction at the time it was made.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I do not like to see hasty legislation. It does not become us. This is an important matter, and deserves at our hands full and mature deliberation. My friend from Indiana has the right view of this question; but, while acknowledging this, I have committed myself to the amendment, and I must say that, of two evils, I took the least. Now, Mrs. Brown would be entitled, were a pension allowed her at the Pension Office, from the time of her husband's death, to $6,000. If justice were done in this case, she would, under the provisions of the law of 1802, be entitled to $102 a month for five years. I mention this to show that I am satisfied the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has been conscientious. He desires Mrs. Brown to be treated as any other pensioner. He wants her placed on the footing of others, under the general law. Nay, he wishes to do better by her. He cannot establish before the Department her right to a pension, and yet he provides, by the bill he has reported, that she shall be placed on the pension list.

Here let me say, that soldiers fight the battles. I have had the good fortune to acquire some reputation as a commander, but I owe it to my command entirely. I had good help, and so succeeded, and am grateful to them for it; and should I ever fall in the service of my country, and be entitled to a pension for my wife and children, I shall will every cent of it to the soldiers under my command. They fight the battles, and it is the commander who gains the reputation. That reputation is a rich boon, and far above price. It is worth more than money. A disposition has been manifested to give to the commander and his heirs a larger pension than you give to his entire command. Will the House act upon that principle? Will they build up an aristocracy in this country, and say that, because a man has proved himself gallant as a commander, he shall receive a larger sum than the entire force under his command? God knows we have many gallant men in this country. It is a rare thing to find a coward in the service. Give our officers American soldiers, and they will make for themselves a reputation upon the field of which their country may well be proud. Let me say, in conclusion, that I desire to see as nearly as possible an equal distribution of favors on the part of the Government towards those who have served their country in its time of need. As I am under a promise to yield the floor to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. KNOX,] I will now do so, for five minutes.

Mr. KNOX. This House will bear me witness that I seldom trouble them with speeches. I am, unfortunately, placed in a wrong position in reference to this measure, which I believe to be one of great justice to an aged widow and her family. It so happens that I am charged with having moved the previous question in order to prevent gentlemen from a full discussion of this question. I wish simply to state the facts. When this measure was under consideration in Committee of the Whole House, I moved an amendment, and called the attention of gentlemen to the report of the committee, of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] is chairman. The committee immediately called for a vote upon the amendment, and it was adopted and reported to the House. This morning I took the floor, and gentlemen around me who were friends of the bill said, "Call for the previous question." I presumed that the minds of gentlemen were made up in regard to this matter, and it was not out of any want of courtesy to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] or any other member upon this floor, that I called for the previous question in compliance with the general request of those around me.

I examined the case thoroughly, and became interested in it from reading first the report made by the gentleman from Indiana, then a report made in the Senate, and afterwards a speech, and the only one made upon it in the Senate, by General CASS, in which he indorsed fully everything contained in the report of the Senate committee. After this examination and investigation, I became thoroughly satisfied that the case was a just and meritorious one; and now I wish merely to add that I hope the House will not consider the case as prejudiced by anything which I may have done or said in regard to the matter.

Mr. LANE. I will yield now for a few minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WRIGHT,] and then I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to take up the time of the House by any extended remarks on the subject of this bill. But I wish to say a word or two with reference to the claims of a gallant soldier in Pennsylvania. And I hope those gentlemen who are appealing to the House in favor of the widow of General Brown, will permit me to cite an instance which has come under my own observation.

[Cries of "Order!" and "Question!"]

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise for the purpose of elaborating an incident, which proves the truth of that which has fallen from the lips of my friend from Oregon, [Mr. LANE.] He has stated here, with truth, that it is the "rank" which receives the honors and the pay, and the "file" which does the work. There never were truer words uttered. I hold here in my hand a medal—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a question of order. The military service of the country, and the rank and file, is not the question before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio is well taken.

Mr. WRIGHT. I conceive that I know enough of the rules which govern this body to be aware whether I am in order or not. [Laughter.] Now, I hold here in my hand a medal, and it furnishes an illustration of the principle about which I am going to make an argument. I hold here a letter written by the Governor of Pennsylvania to William Pace, forwarding a medal. The inscription on the medal is:

To WILLIAM PACE,
In testimony of his patriotism and bravery
In the naval action on Lake Erie,
September 10, 1814.

There, sir, is the medal (producing it) granted to that man. Now, I want to say a word in respect to this man.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. WRIGHT. I am strictly in order. I give this as an illustration. William Pace was born in the same town in which I was born.

[Laughter, and renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a point of order. The remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are not in order, as they have no connection with the question under consideration before the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the question of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio. The merits of William Pace are not under consideration. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Pennsylvania is indulging in a discussion on the merits of William Pace, who served in one of the actions on Lake Erie; and he will perceive that that is not in order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am merely illustrating my argument by relating an incident connected with the subject before the House.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. WRIGHT. I am in order. I want to state here that I went before the Military Committee of the House as an advocate for a pension for this William Pace, who belonged to the ranks, and was deprived of the pension to which he was entitled, because—

[Renewed cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. The remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania are out of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am simply illustrating—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not in order in discussing what took place on the application of this gentleman for a pension. The gentleman will please confine himself to the bill under consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT. The gentleman from Oregon, in his remarks, alluded to the rank and file of the Army, and the title of the men to as much favor as the officers. If an officer dies, his widow, it appears, is entitled to favor and consideration at the hands of Congress, whether his case comes within the provisions of the rules laid down by the Military Committee of this House, or by the laws of Congress or not. But when it is the case of a man in the ranks, who dies in poverty, as this unfortunate man, it is another thing. It makes no difference whether he receives from his own country a medal for his services, or—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. EDGERTON. I call for the enforcement of the rules of the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has been decided by the Chair to be out of order, and the rules provide that when a member is called to order, he shall immediately sit down. I insist upon the enforcement of the rule.

Mr. WRIGHT. General Jacob Brown—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio has insisted upon the enforcement of the rules of the House, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will take his seat.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to know if I cannot speak to the subject?

Mr. EDGERTON. The gentleman can only speak by the consent of the House.

Mr. FULLER. I move that the gentleman be permitted to proceed in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can proceed in order.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Brown was a native of my own State. He was a Quaker gentleman, and served his country gallantly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I rise to a question of order. It is this: the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] is entitled to the floor, and he can only yield it for the purpose of a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon is entitled to the floor, and if the point of order is insisted upon, the Chair will rule that the gentleman from Oregon can permit any other gentleman to occupy the floor only for the purpose of making a personal explanation.

Mr. EDGERTON. I insist upon the enforcement of the rule.

Mr. LANE. I have yielded the floor to the gentleman over the way, and to several others, and there was not a word said about it. I appeal to the House to let the gentleman proceed; and if they will allow the gentleman to go on for five minutes, I will then move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has raised the question of order that the gentleman from Oregon cannot yield the floor, except for personal explanation. It is true the gentleman from Oregon has yielded the floor to other individuals, and if the question of order had been raised in those instances, the Chair would have felt bound to sustain the point of order. Whenever it is insisted upon, the present occupant of the chair will enforce the rules. The Chair must rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania out of order.

Mr. LANE. I am sorry the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been ruled out of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am not disposed to quarrel with the House in regard to the right of speaking, yet, not having—

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

Mr. LANE. I now demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put, being first on the amendment proposed by Mr. HENDRICKS to Mr. HUGHES's amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 60, nays 105; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Barksdale, Barry, Bliss, Bocoock, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Cobb, Craigie, John G. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Trout, Vansant, and Daniel B. Wright—60.

NAYS—Messrs. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zollcoffer—105.

So Mr. HENDRICKS's amendment was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon Mr. HUGHES's amendment; and being taken, it was decided in the affirmative.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HUGHES. I move the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PECK. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes before four o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 21, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Postmaster General, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, information in relation to proposals submitted to him for the purchase of a site for a post office in Philadelphia; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a copy of the statutes of Oregon, enacted by the Legislative Assembly at the session commencing 5th December, 1853; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented a memorial of the Society of the Cincinnati, of the State of New Jersey, praying Congress to pass an act for the relief of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army, and their descendants; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. WADE presented a memorial, in the form of a resolution, in favor of releasing the bond given for the appearance of Otho Hinton, charged with robbing the mail, and who forfeited his recognizance, now in suit in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Ohio, and of dismissing the suit; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a petition of citizens of Ravenna, Ohio, praying that the soldiers of the last war with Great Britain, and the widows of those deceased, may be allowed the same pensions as have been granted to the soldiers of the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE presented the following petitions, praying the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia; which were ordered to lie on the table:

A petition of Josiah Bond and other citizens of Pennsylvania;

A petition of D. W. Atkinson, and other citizens of Warren county, Iowa;

A petition of Wesley Mart, and other citizens of Ohio; and

A petition of Caleb Stett, and other citizens of Portage county, Ohio.

Also, a petition of Josiah Bond, and other citizens of Pennsylvania, praying the abolition of slavery throughout the United States, or that the people of Pennsylvania may be relieved from the responsibility of aiding in its support; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred a bill to establish a navy-yard and depot near the city of New Orleans, reported it back without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of L. F. Frazee, praying Congress to purchase his patent life-boat for the use of the Navy, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of the heirs of Wolcott Lawrence, late of Monroe, Michigan, deceased, praying remuneration for lands improperly sold to him by the General Government, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elliot Smith, William C. Green, and Nathan Farnsworth, praying to be allowed salvage on the ship Charles Wharton, employed as a Government transport, and rescued by them when in distress off Tampa Bay, and compensation for their time, and the cargoes of their vessels, which they were compelled to throw overboard to effect the rescue of said ship, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MEETING OF CONGRESS.

Mr. GEYER asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill fixing the time for the next meeting of Congress; which was read a first and second time by its title.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

The bill from the House of Representatives "to grant a homestead of a hundred and sixty acres of the public lands to actual settlers," was read a third time, and the question was stated to be, "Shall the bill pass, as amended?"

Mr. SHIELDS. Before the vote is taken I wish to place myself right before my constituents, so far as my own action is concerned in abandoning what was the homestead bill, and voting for the substitute of the Senator from Virginia, which has now become the bill before us. I wish to state that, in voting for it, I am consistent with the course which I myself recommended when at the head of the General Land Office in 1845. I wish to refer to the report which I then made in order to place myself right at home, with my own friends and constituents. At that time I had the honor of making a report upon the subject of the public lands, to which I will refer. I then said:

"I therefore recommend that all lands that have been in the market not exceeding five years constitute the first class; more than five, and not exceeding ten years, the second class; more than ten, and not exceeding fifteen, the third class; more than fifteen, and not exceeding twenty, the fourth class; more than twenty, and not exceeding twenty-five, the fifth class; and that all the residue in market over twenty-five years, and remaining unsold, vest absolutely in the particular States in which they are situated."

Thus it will be seen that I then recommended precisely what is now contained in this bill as it stands, that the public lands should be divided into five classes, the price of which should be graduated according to the time they have been exposed to sale. I also used this language in the same report:

"As $1 27 is the average maximum price of the best quality of lands, it must be admitted that $1 25 per acre will be a sufficient minimum price for lands of the first class; one dollar for the second; seventy-five cents for the third; fifty cents for the fourth; and twenty-five cents for land of the fifth class."

I state this because, as I had to abandon what was considered a favorite measure with us in the West, and as none of us abandoned it until we considered it lost, I had the good fortune then, to fall back upon the recommendations which I had the honor to make when I was charged with this subject as the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. COOPER. I shall not detain the Senate by making any extended remarks upon this bill; but as I was absent during the period of its discussion, I merely rise to state what would have been my course in relation to it, if I had been present. I was opposed to the homestead bill as it originally came to the Senate, and should have voted against it in its original form. I am opposed to it in its present form, and would vote against it if I voted at all, but having paired off with the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] I do not feel myself at liberty to vote. I do not think, at this stage of the matter, that it would be proper to go into a discussion of the reasons which would have induced my opposition to the original bill. It is defeated, and that is enough for me. I merely arose, sir, for the purpose of saying that I was opposed to it, in order that my constituents may know my position in relation to it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There have been two favorite measures with myself, with the delegation from my State, and with the people of my State, for many years; and, I believe, with the West generally. One was a graduation of the price of the public lands; the other was a homestead to the actual settler. The bill which was ordered to be engrossed last evening accomplishes both objects in a manner entirely satisfactory to some, and I have no doubt to all the people. I do not consider, therefore, that in adopting the substitute of the Senator from Virginia, we abandon anything that is material. On the contrary, we have secured the object entirely satisfactory, so far as the homestead is concerned, and we have secured the graduation principle besides.

The bill accomplished, instead of one good subject, several very good objects, and for that reason I was entirely satisfied with the result of the measure, and believe that our people will be satisfied with it. I do not think we have abandoned the House bill by any means. The bill of General Dawson, of the House, is the principle which, with a very slight modification, has been put into this bill. I think the members of the House will congratulate themselves that the bill has been modified instead of being destroyed, and that the distinguished author of that bill, who has labored so assiduously with it, will feel that while we have done justice to his own measure we have only put in another one which the House of Representatives have several times passed. They have passed the homestead before; they have passed a graduation bill before; and we have put the two together.

Mr. STUART. I should not say a word on this bill, if it were not for the intimation that the homestead principle was abandoned in it. I sought to say something on that subject the other day, but was very abruptly prevented from doing so. This bill combines everything, in my judgment, which is valuable to the United States on the one side, and to the new States and the people generally on the other. It graduates the price of the public lands upon the only principle which is practicable. It confers the power to construct railroads in all cases where the State in which the road is projected thinks it proper that it should be constructed. It also confers upon the States a power to take any portion of the lands which are in the State, at a graduated price, and to apply those lands according to its own wisdom. It secures, in each case, to the Government of the United States the graduated price, by providing that the patent can, in no case, issue until the graduated price is paid into the Treasury, and secures to every actual settler a homestead upon a principle and upon a basis as practically useful as any that can be devised.

It does it at a price within the reach of every man of common capacity and common industry, and, sir, the homestead provision within itself carries with it that check upon the graduation principle which has given more difficulty, I apprehend, to those who have considered the subject than any other, to wit, it prevents private speculators from grasping the graduated land in the State, because if private speculators shall assume to purchase all the lands that lie in the State at twenty-five cents an acre for instance, they do not retard the homestead man, for he can take any class, even the dollar class at twenty-five cents. Hence, if speculation seek to aggrandize itself in this instance, the actual settler ceases to become the purchaser from them, and takes from the Government under this bill at twenty-five cents an acre.

Another check is placed upon that by giving the preëminent right to the States. The State has the first right under the bill to take a graduated class of lands and thus prevent them from being seized upon by speculators, and the price elevated according to speculative cupidity, so that the State never can be the loser if it takes land at a graduated price and sells it, or lets the actual settler take it at the graduated price, for the State is not to pay until the purchaser has paid, nor is the State chargeable with interest.

Now, Mr. President, when it is said that any principle of the homestead has been abandoned by this bill, a greater mistake never was fallen into. The bill is stripped of all objectionable features, which some gentlemen entertained towards the House bill. It provides a price, as I have said, one within the reach of everybody.

It takes away what some gentlemen think the obnoxious provisions in respect to the character of the persons who might enter the States under the original bill, by leaving it entirely to State laws to determine that subject; for no man can take, under the homestead principle of this bill as it now stands, unless he be a man who, by the laws of the State in which the lands lie, is entitled to hold land therein. In respect to the Territories, this capacity is given upon the only true basis—the basis of the preemption principle.

I shall not detain the Senate upon this subject. I merely rose to discharge a duty to myself. I wished, so far as lay in my power, to correct an error which may have gone abroad to the country, in consequence of remarks which may have fallen from some gentlemen, that the homestead principle is abandoned by the adoption of this bill as it is. Sir, it is secured in a shape which ought to be fully acceptable to every man with whom that principle is a favorite. Having said this much, I shall cheerfully vote for the passage of the bill.

Mr. BADGER addressed the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to point out an error in the bill as it stands, which I hope the Senate by unanimous consent will allow to be corrected. It is a provision which was altered in the original bill, but which by a mistake was retained in the substitute of the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] which has now become the present bill. It is that provision which authorizes executors and administrators to sell the infant's estate according to the laws of the infants domicile instead of according to the laws of the estate where the land lies.

This can easily be remedied by consent. The provision now is: "In accordance with the laws of the State in which such children, for the time being, have their domicile." It should read: "In accordance with the laws of the State in which such lands are situated." I hope there will be universal consent to have this amendment made before the bill is put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT.) It requires unanimous consent to make an amendment at this stage, but if there be no objection, it will be considered as adopted by unanimous consent.

There was no objection.

The discussion was continued by Messrs. TOOMBS and BADGER.

Mr. MASON. Mr. President, if this discussion is to go on, I will ask that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow, for the purpose of going into Executive session.

Several SENATORS. "Oh, no!"

Mr. MASON. I only want to know the fact whether it is to be further discussed.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to say a few words.

Mr. MASON. Here is one gentleman who wants to discuss it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator submit a motion to postpone?

Mr. MASON. I do.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope my colleague will not press it, but let us get to a vote upon the bill.

Mr. MASON. It is manifest that we cannot get to a vote to-day. The Senators over the way have consumed an hour in discussing a question which, I suppose, is not now involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to postpone.

Mr. MASON. At the solicitation of Senators, I withdraw it.

Mr. CHASE. I ask the indulgence of the Senate but for three minutes. I do not regard this substitute as carrying out fully the principle of the homestead bill. That principle required free grants of public lands to the landless. The principle of free grants to actual settlers, without reference to their condition, as provided for by the bill, came from the House, and which has been under discussion, was accepted by the friends of the original homestead principle, on the ground that it was a near approximation to its requirement, since grants to actual settlers would, in fact, be, generally, grants to the landless. But the substitute now before us proposes sales, at very low prices, instead of free grants. I voted, therefore, against its adoption as an amendment of the homestead bill of the House; but the Senate has seen fit to adopt it by a large vote, and the sole question now submitted to me is, whether I will vote for the only measure which can possibly pass at this session.

I have looked carefully into this substitute. I see in it many valuable provisions. I do not see in it some things I desire to see, and I see some I should have wished not to see there. But, sir, weighing the reasons in its favor with those against it, I have come to the conclusion that I am bound to go for it. Although it is not the homestead bill, yet it secures large and important benefits to the actual settler upon the public lands directly through its own provisions, or immediately through the provisions in favor of the land States, which it seems to me ought to commend the bill to the friends of the actual settlers. I shall, therefore, vote for it.

Mr. CLAY. I feel it due to myself to make a single remark by way of personal explanation, in order to satisfy my constituents. I moved an amendment to the substitute which was introduced by my friend from Mississippi, providing that those settlers upon the public lands who held less than one hundred and sixty acres, might be permitted to enter lands adjoining their farms to an amount making, with that which they might own previous to the entry, the number of one hundred and sixty acres. I did not offer that amendment to this bill. My reason was not that I did not think that they were entitled to that preference, but because I was unwilling to peril or defer the passage of a bill which contained so many good things, by providing for an inconsiderable number of the people, and particularly in my State, where the lands will probably be reduced, under the provisions of this bill, to twenty-five cents an acre, at all events. Besides, friends of this measure from other land States, equally interested with myself in behalf of those who may now own less than one hundred and sixty acres of land, thought it better not to embarrass the bill with the amendment suggested. By their advice, I declined offering the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. "I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him. The evil, that men do, lives after them; the good is oft interred with their bones." Such, I think, is the condition of this bill. Certainly we killed it last night, and all that remains for us to do is to give it a decent burial. I should like to have some pomp and ceremony about it, if I could. I have gone all round the Senate, but I cannot even get pall bearers enough to give it a respectful burial. I hope, therefore, we shall consign it to the grave. We have talked long enough.

Mr. WELLER called for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill; and they were ordered, and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Bright, Brodhead, Brown, Butler, Cass, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Hamlin, Houston, Hunter, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Mason, Pettit, Rusk, Sebastian, Shields, Sidel, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Toucey, Walker, and Weller—36.

NAYS—Messrs. Badger, Bell, Dawson, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Jones of Tennessee, Pearce, Pratt, and Rockwell—11.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BRODHEAD. It will be necessary to amend the title of the bill, in order to make it consistent with the substitute of the Senator from Virginia. I therefore move to amend it so that it will read as follows:

"An act to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands to purchasers and actual settlers, and to grant the right of preemption in certain cases."

Mr. ADAMS. "And for other purposes."

Mr. GWIN. That certainly does not cover the object of the bill. "And for other purposes" should be added to it.

Mr. BADGER. I would suggest that as there is some little difference amongst the friends of the bill, its title should be "An act for certain purposes therein mentioned." That will accomplish everything. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRODHEAD. I add to it the words "and for other purposes."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not like that amendment. I am not very anxious about it by any means. I know the Senator from Pennsylvania is, as he was, an enemy of the original bill. It is said by some of the friends of the homestead principle that this is a homestead bill. If it is so, let the title declare it.

The amendment was agreed to; and the title, as amended, was adopted.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the bill, as passed, be printed.

TEXAS DEBT BILL.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now move that the Senate take up the Texan debt bill.

Mr. GWIN. I hope we shall take up and consider the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill. Is it the object of the Senator to have discussion on the Texan debt bill?

Mr. BRIGHT. The object of the Senator is to get up the bill, and to have a vote upon it. I suppose it can be done this morning beyond doubt.

Mr. MASON. I ask the Senate, with great regret so far as the Senator's bill is concerned, not to take up that bill, in order that we may go into Executive session, and dispose of Executive business.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senate will recollect that yesterday morning I promised that if it was discussed over half an hour, I should agree to postpone it. I did so with the understanding that it would be taken up this morning and disposed of.

Mr. PETTIT. I dislike to interfere with my colleague, or any other Senator, but I am very desirous of having a resolution considered, which I laid upon the table last Saturday, providing for the printing of a number of copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act. The session is drawing to a close, and it ought to be acted on.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will ask but an hour for the consideration of the bill. If it shall take more than that time, I shall be willing to let it go over.

Mr. BRIGHT's motion was agreed to; and the Senate accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. BRIGHT, to add to the amendment of the committee the following:

Provided, That the interest on the debt embraced in this act shall be determined by the existing laws of the State of Texas.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I know it is not in order unless by general consent; but I wish to say that, if the bill is not disposed of at one o'clock, I hope we shall postpone it, and either take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, or go into Executive session.

Mr. STUART. Give an hour to its consideration.

Mr. BRIGHT. That is a method of defeating the bill entirely. Senators could talk it out, if they choose, by that means. I name an hour, for the reason that, I think, within that time we can certainly dispose of it.

Mr. CHASE. I move to strike out "eight," and insert "six," so as to make the amount $6,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, to reduce the amount from $8,500,000 to $6,500,000.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to state the grounds on which that amendment is based. It will test the question as well as any other, and I think better, than any other upon this bill. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] stated to the Senate that the debt and interest at this time amount to something less than $6,000,000. Adding to the principal and interest the fourteen per cent. which the Secretary of the Treasury now pays in anticipation for debts of this class, being the premium which the stock would command in market, it made, according to the statement of the Senator from Indiana, $6,500,000. I have verified that statement by my own calculation, and find it to be correct. The simple question submitted to the Senate now is, shall we assume $2,000,000 of the debt of Texas in addition to that provided for in the articles of annexation and in the act of 1850?

The Senator from Virginia has well said, and he has been followed in that by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. TOWER,] that there was no original obligation on the part of the United States to assume and pay this debt. The obligation is created by a positive statute; and that statute we all, without any exception, propose to fulfill. We do not propose to abate one jot or tittle of any of its obligations. But, sir, the Senator from Connecticut went on to say that this bill was a mere anticipation of interest to become due, and that, therefore, we might pay the amount proposed to be appropriated, although there was no legal claim on the Treasury. That honorable Senator, if I recollect aright, objected to the grant of public lands to the States for a particular purpose, because there was no constitutional power on the part of Congress to dispose of those lands otherwise than to dispose of the money; and that there could be no power to dispose of money, except in execution of some one of the powers of the General Government. He now tells us that there is no obligation whatever to pay these $2,000,000; and yet he says that he will assume to pay it. I cannot quite perceive the consistency of these positions. There is no obligation to pay the money. It is a mere gratuity; yet he says to this extent we may assume to pay the debt.

Now, sir, one of the articles of the Democratic platform, if I may be pardoned for referring to such a document as that, is, that the Democratic party will not sanction the assumption by the General Government of the debts of any State. This is confessedly, all around, the assumption of $2,000,000 of the debt of the State of Texas, without any obligation whatever on our part.

I think, sir, I have made myself clear. I simply ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment, because I conceive this to be the test question on the bill, and I suppose it may as well come to the vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, as I voted at the last session of Congress against the issue of stock to the amount of $8,500,000, or something of that kind, for this debt, I wish now to give my reasons, as succinctly as I can, why I shall vote in favor of the present bill, and against the amendment.

I still adhere to the opinion that the Government of the United States is not bound for any portion of these debts beyond the extent of its agreement to pay. I do not read the law of nations according to the doctrines of some honorable Senators here, and I do not think the obligation for the debts of Texas exists; but there is an evident difference of opinion on that point. A large number of the members of this body entertain the opinion that we are bound for the whole debt of Texas for which the import revenues of that Republic were pledged. I do not admit that principle as affecting distinct nationalities; but I do not mean to enter into that question, but I mean to show why, as a matter of policy, I shall vote for this bill, though I do not consider that there is any obligation, arising out of the law of nations, on us to pay this money, or any obligation in regard to it, within the contract which we have assumed, arising, probably, from the looseness with which the provision was inserted in the act of 1850, which stipulated for the payment of ten millions to Texas. No Senator doubts the obligation to pay to the extent of that stipulation. Well, sir, what was that stipulation? It was to pay Texas $10,000,000 in a particular mode; that is all. It was to be paid by the issue of a five per cent. stock, redeemable in fourteen years. We issued $5,000,000 of that stock, but the act contains a proviso that the remaining $5,000,000, which should bear an interest of five per cent., redeemable in fourteen years, should not be issued—until Texas had done any act, but until the creditors of Texas, who had a specific pledge on her import or revenue duties, should release the United States from any claims they alleged they had upon them. That is the form of the condition; but that condition did not provide that Texas should be required to have those releases filed in any given time. The obligation of the United States was not to pay money, but to issue stock.

What, then, is the position of Texas? She is the creditor of the United States for $5,000,000.

We have chosen to retain this fund for the benefit of her and her creditors. She and her creditors cannot agree as to the terms on which the settlement shall be made. Texas, therefore, suffers the stock to remain uncalled for. It is drawing interest in the mean time, and it will draw interest until its maturity, and she comes to a settlement with her creditors. The condition does not compel her to have those releases filed at any particular time. The condition affects the creditors. She cannot draw the stock until their releases are filed; but if those releases be filed at the lapse of the time when the stock matures, the payment of the whole amount, principal and interest, is just as obligatory on this Government as if the releases were filed now. The loss may be to Texas, for she will not get her interest in the mean time. But, in point of policy, the loss is also to us, for the money is lying dead in the Treasury, and the interest is running on against us, and we shall have the $8,500,000 to pay at the end of the time, because the stipulation is to issue stock, and not to pay money. We shall have to pay the whole amount, however, at the end of the fourteen years, and I understand this bill, in point of policy, to be based upon that idea.

What, then, is our condition? We have a redundant Treasury. Here is a case in which there are differences of opinion as to the extent of the obligation, or the equitable obligation, if you please, of the United States, to pay the whole debt, which amounts to over $10,000,000; but the creditors are willing, as we are informed, to come in and take this $8,500,000. We propose to pay that under this bill, if the State of Texas will agree to its provisions. Sir, if we do not pass this bill, the result may be, in the course of a few years, with the fluctuations that take place in the body, that the opinion may obtain under those circumstances, that we are bound for the whole debt, and we shall have more than $10,000,000 to pay, with probably the Treasury not in as good a condition to pay as now.

Under these circumstances, making allowance for difference of opinion, though I do not consider that the obligation to pay exists, yet we are obliged to pay the interest, and whether we pay it in advance, or at the end of the time, is immaterial. It is perfectly certain, with the experience which we have had, that there can be no settlement of the matter on any other terms. Interest is running on against us, and the money is lying idle in the Treasury, and ultimately we shall, at any rate, have to pay $8,500,000, and probably more, if the character of the Senate, or the views of the Senate, change as to any legal or equitable obligation on our part, under the laws of nations, to pay the whole amount of the claims of these creditors. Many able men sustain that view. I differ from them. I do not go into that ground, however, but in point of policy, thinking that we have nothing to gain by delaying the payment of this interest, and that the Treasury is now in a condition to enable us to do it, I cannot see that there is any great difference between the paying of the interest in advance, instead of paying it hereafter. I am willing, therefore, to vote for this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into the argument of this question, but I wish to state briefly the reasons why I cannot vote for the bill. I do not hold that we are under any obligation to pay the debts of Texas any further than we stipulated to do so in the compromise measures of 1850. By one of those laws, we undertook to pay the State of Texas $10,000,000; $5,000,000 of which were to be reserved until Texas furnished us with the releases of the obligations of debts for which her customs revenues were bound.

We are now told that there is an inability to agree between the creditors of Texas and the State of Texas, as to the mode of payment of that $5,000,000. If there is an inability to agree, how can they come to us and ask us to pay the amount? The creditors have no business here. They have made no contract with us. They treated with Texas. Their claim is upon Texas. We owe to the State of Texas these $5,000,000. We were by the stipulation to pay it to Texas, and not to the creditors. We were not, however, bound to pay it to Texas until she furnished the releases. When Texas shall furnish the releases, we shall be ready to pay. I am ready to vote to pay every dollar, principal and interest, the moment we can get a receipt which is valid, so as to liquidate the claim against us. If we pay these claims to the creditors without releases from Texas, we shall still owe to Texas, for we shall not have liquidated the obligation.

Then, sir, I am ready to pay the $5,000,000, and interest upon it, in pursuance of our contract. That is all Texas can claim. It is stated—and I believe correctly—that, taking the $5,000,000 of principal, and adding the interest up to this time, and adding, besides, the present premium on such stock, the whole would amount to $6,500,000. That, I think, is the highest sum that can possibly be claimed, if we pay now. But the bill, as it stands, proposes to pay $8,500,000. How is it that gentlemen arrive at the conclusion that we owe these additional two millions? Why, they say there will be two millions of interest due when the debt shall become payable ten years from now! That is very true. But why should we pay the money now, and pay the interest for ten years on a debt which we do not owe?

We are now paying interest on debts which we owe to foreign countries. If we were to take this money, and with it liquidate debts that we owe to foreign countries, we should stop interest on the amount of $2,000,000. Hence I say, if we now pay interest for ten years on a debt which we shall not owe during that time, we shall be making a present to the creditors of Texas to the extent of that interest, which is $2,000,000. I look upon this as a proposition distinctly to make a present, a gratuity, of $2,000,000 to the State of Texas, for the benefit of her creditors, over and above any legal obligation on our part to pay.

Then, sir, if there is no legal allegation, what moral obligation is there on our part to pay this debt? We are told there is a moral obligation on us, because Texas, prior to her annexation, had pledged her revenues specifically for the payment of a certain portion of this debt. Suppose she had. Well, it is said by the annexation those revenues inured to the Treasury of the United States, and not to the State of Texas. Sir, if Texas has made an arrangement with us since she pledged her revenues, inconsistent with that pledge, it is a question between the bondholders and Texas. It is a question of faith between them with which we have nothing to do, because the creditors have no claim upon us. Texas, when she made the pledge, only pledged her faith. If she has done any act inconsistent with the pledge, it is a question between her and her creditors, with which we cannot interfere.

But, sir, is it true that, by the annexation of Texas, we diminished the means of Texas to pay her debts? If we did not, surely there is no moral obligation upon us to pay any of those debts; but if we did diminish her means to discharge her debts, it may be said there is a moral, although no legal obligation on us, to make up the deficiency. Now, do we not know it to be a historical fact that every creditor of Texas was anxious for annexation, in order thereby to increase the chances of getting his debts paid. Did not the bonds go up in the market two, three, four, or even tenfold the moment annexation took place, in consequence of annexation? Then I say the effect of annexation, instead of diminishing the means of Texas to pay her debts, or instead of diminishing the value of the obligations which she owed, was to enhance them in the market wherever they were found. This shows that we aided Texas and her bondholders by our action, instead of diminishing the value of their bonds.

Again, there was a distinct stipulation in the resolutions of annexation that Texas was to keep her own lands, and pay her own debts; thus showing that she had no claim upon us. Nobody conceived that we were ever to be called upon to pay any portion of her debt. But yet, in 1850, during the slavery agitation, it became necessary for us to buy a piece of land to which Texas had claim, and to pay her liberally for it, in order to settle an existing controversy. We did agree to pay her $10,000,000 for that land. I voted for it. At the time I voted for it, I did not believe the land was worth enough to pay the expenses of its survey; I do not believe so now. But the $10,000,000 were well paid to get rid of a difficulty which might carry serious, and even fatal, consequences to the permanency of the Union. We voted cheerfully to pay the $10,000,000. At that time the creditors of Texas wished us to insert a stipulation that $5,000,000 should be reserved, and not paid to Texas until their releases were filed, so that they might get their debts. We were then told that the obligations were only something over $4,000,000. If I recollect aright, the Senator from Maryland made a communication to us that $5,000,000 was more than enough to pay the whole.

Mr. PEARCE. At the time to which the Senator refers, I did state, on the authority of a document with which I had been furnished from the auditor's office of the State of Texas, that the amount of the debts of Texas, from which her revenues from imports were pledged, was about $4,500,000. It turned out afterwards, however, that, in this estimate, they only took into consideration those bonds in which, upon their face, the revenues from customs were pledged eo nomine. There were, as it turned out afterwards, other bonds for which the revenues were pledged, though not in that form, but equally as effectual. That enlarged the class. If, at the time of the introduction of that bill, I had been aware of the amount of all the debts for which those revenues were pledged, I think I should have reserved a great deal more.

Mr. RUSK. The words contained in the boundary act are: "The debts for which the revenues of Texas, from impost duties, were specially pledged." There were a great many such debts, but covering, I believe, altogether, a little less than $5,000,000. The matter, however, was submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, to determine what class of the debts of Texas came under the provisions of the boundary act. He examined the laws of Texas, and determined that, in all cases where the revenues generally were pledged, there was a special pledge of the revenues from impost duties.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Well, Mr. President, the point I was stating was, that we acted in 1850 upon the supposition that there were less than $5,000,000 of the debts of Texas for which these revenues were pledged. I did not then understand that we were under the slightest moral or legal obligation to pay one dollar of that indebtedness. I did not understand that that act was making us assume any of those debts; but that, inasmuch as we were to pay $10,000,000, and as it was understood that Texas was willing to take $5,000,000, and to furnish receipts for the remainder, and that had been a compromise between Texas and the bondholders, we were willing to pay it in any shape that was agreeable to Texas, to whom the money was to be paid. We therefore put a stipulation that $5,000,000 were to be reserved.

But I maintain that does not contain any implication that we assumed to pay the bonds, for the assumption was to Texas and not to the bondholders. We had nothing to do with the creditors. We did not acknowledge that we owed anything to the creditors. We acknowledge the debt to be to Texas. The debt was created in consideration of the land she granted. It was an obligation to pay her money, in consideration of that land, and to pay it in a particular form.

Now, sir, there is an attempt to argue that we are bound to pay the debts of Texas, because, prior to annexation, Texas had specially pledged her import revenues for the payment of her debts. If that be true, we are now making a still further assumption, and one the extent of which no one can calculate, by acknowledging that we are bound to pay the debts of Texas, for which her revenues were pledged. If I recollect aright, when the proposition to annex Texas was pending, proof was furnished that the whole of Texas had been specially pledged by Mexico to England for the payment of sixty or eighty millions. If that pledge, binding Mexico to England, holding a lien on Texas, was assumed by us when we annexed Texas, we should be bound, by the same principle, to pay those sixty or eighty millions of dollars to England, for which the whole State of Texas, revenues, lands, and all, was pledged. If I recollect aright, evidence was furnished also that a mortgage was held by the English bondholders, or, perhaps, by England herself, on the northern States of Mexico, including California. If the annexation of California binds us now to pay all the debts for which California was previously pledged, who knows how many millions or hundreds of millions of dollars we may be compelled to pay in consequence of the annexation of California?

Sir, the same assumption would go back and compel us to pay the debts which Spain contracted before the independence of Mexico, inasmuch as she pledged Mexico for the payment of those debts. I fear, sir, that we are about establishing a principle of the assumption of debts which may carry with it one, two, or three hundreds of millions of dollars. No man can see how far it will go.

I am not willing to do any act by which we shall assume any obligation to pay one dollar beyond our stipulation. Our stipulation is for $5,000,000, with interest. I am ready to pay that to-day; but I am not willing to pay any more than that. If we now pay $2,000,000 for the purpose of compromise, we thereby admit the principle that we are bound for the whole. The moment you admit that principle, do you think your compromise will stand to-day? Next year, they will demand of us to pay the balance of the debt. The moment we admit the principle, we shall be held responsible for the whole; and if the principle be correct, we ought to pay the whole. Then who knows how far we shall be bound to pay the debts of Mexico to England, and to other European Powers, by which California and Texas were specially pledged.

For these reasons I cannot vote to pay any more than that which we specifically assumed to pay to the State of Texas in consideration of the lands we purchased of her in 1850.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, there is nothing in this bill which commits the Government to pay a dollar beyond that which she is now committed to pay on the Journals of Congress. The honorable Senator from Illinois must permit me to say that I think his argument is a very unfair one. If there are any mortgages existing of the character to which he refers, I should be glad to see them. I apprehend, however, that his supposition on that head is based merely on rumor, and that neither he nor any other Senator believes there is any probability that the United States can be charged with the payment of any other debt than that named in this bill, by the terms of the bill, or that any principle or precedent will be established by the bill, which is not in accordance with previous legislation.

The honorable Senator from Maryland [Mr. PEARCE] has already stated that, at the time the compromise measures were passed, he prepared the amendment reserving $5,000,000 from the public Treasury with which to liquidate that part of the debt of Texas for which her public revenues had been pledged. He further states, what I know and what other Senators know to be the fact, that at that time the impression prevailed that $5,000,000 would cover all that part of the debt of Texas, and no doubt it did cover all that part which upon its face appeared to be pledged for that object. But, as the honorable Senator said, previous acts of the Legislature of Texas had provided that other parts of her debt, issued at a former period, should operate in the same manner. If the committee who reported that bill had known that the debt of Texas, of the description or class I have mentioned, exceeded $5,000,000, there is no doubt they would have made the proviso broad enough, and the $10,000,000 would have been reserved. But it was supposed at the time that $5,000,000 would cover the entire amount, thus relieving the United States from all liability.

By the terms of the act of 1850 we are bound to pay $5,000,000 in stock, bearing five per cent. interest, and having fourteen years to run. Four years of that time have expired. The interest upon that, together with the premium, amounts, at this time, to $6,500,000. The entire debt of Texas amounts to between $12,500,000 and $13,000,000, and it is contended by many that the United States are liable to pay that sum; but that is a question which it is not necessary to consider now. There are members in both branches of Congress, however, who acknowledge this liability, and it is with these facts looking us in the face that we are called to meet this question. Now, we say to Texas, by this bill, "We will give you, at this time, $5,000,000, with the interest upon it, instead of requiring you to wait nine years longer." Whether Texas, by the act which appropriated $5,000,000, is made a party to it in such a way that nothing can be done with the $5,000,000 until her consent be obtained, is a question which we do not touch. We say to Texas: "If you will assent to this arrangement, we will make this appropriation." It is nothing more nor less than this: A proposition to say to the creditors of Texas, "We will give you $8,500,000, in consideration that you will sign full and final releases to the United States for about $13,000,000; and if there be any excess, if you have any claim in addition to the amount we pay you, look to Texas for it." We say to Texas, by the terms of this bill, "If you consent to this arrangement, we will carry it out in good faith." It is narrowed down to the simple proposition whether we shall advance the interest now, or wait, as the Senator from Delaware said, with an overflowing Treasury, nine years longer, and then make the payment, and in the meantime be importuned from session to session in reference to this debt. The committee, after weighing all the facts, and examining the question in all its bearings, with an anxious desire to do justice to Texas, to the public Treasury, and to the creditors, have said to them: "We will cancel the obligation to issue the stock, and pay you directly the amount that stock will be worth at the end of the term." This seems reasonable to the Committee on Finance; but, if not so, I hope the Senator from Illinois and others who agree with him will come forward with a better plan.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, if I understand the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, it reduces the sum which is proposed to be appropriated from $8,500,000, which includes principal and interest to this time, and anticipated interest for nine years, to $6,500,000, which is the amount of the principal and interest up to this time, with the present premium upon the stock of the United States. I think that is a fair proposition. I feel willing to go thus far, but no further. I cannot see on what principles of justice we can be called upon to anticipate this interest for such a length of time amounting to such a large sum—$2,000,000.

Why, sir, if we had been in default, there are those here who would say that we ought not to pay interest. There are those here who would contend that the Government ought not to pay interest, even if it were in default. Who are those Senators? Why, sir, first among them stands the Senator from Delaware; I believe next to him stands the Senator from Indiana; and yet they can now come forward and contend that where the Government is not under any obligation for the debt, where it is not in default, but when the debt is not yet due for nine years, we should step forward and anticipate it, and pay in advance the interest for that period. Yes, sir, those Senators who now contend most strenuously for the anticipation of this interest, and the payment of it to the creditors of Texas, are the very Senators who fight the question of interest here whenever a private claimant sets up a claim to it, although the Government of the United States may have been in default. It looks a little strange to me at least. I am not able to see into the matter.

Mr. BRIGHT. The Senator is not authorized to say that, as a general principle, I fight what he calls interest. I allow interest where I think it is right, and I resist it where I think it is wrong, governing myself by the facts as they present themselves in each case.

Mr. WALKER. That is right; but I believe the Senator and myself have very frequently differed in reference to what was right in regard to interest. I have placed it upon this ground: The Government of the United States, under the Constitution, has no right to take private property for public use without a just compensation. I have said heretofore, that I could see no distinction between taking $1,000 of private property and appropriating it to public use directly without compensation, and taking it by means of detaining a sum from an individual for a sufficient length of time to produce the amount of $1,000, at the legal rate of interest, and in this way taking it indirectly. I have said that the Constitution prohibits as effectually the depriving an individual of his property by this indirect means, as it does the depriving him of it by direct and positive means. But, sir, here is a case where the Government is not in default, where the Government has deprived nobody of anything, has appropriated the property of no one for public use, and yet it is asked that the Government shall step forward and advance interest for a long period, without consideration. If the amount will be $8,500,000 when the time has arrived, what of it? Is not money now worth in the country five per cent.? I apprehend so. The business community feel that it is worth far more, and the sum which you have locked up in your Treasury is imposing burdens upon the business community, and putting them to the necessity of paying one and a half per cent. per month for money. Still it is here proposed, without any default on the part of the Government, to step forward now to advance nine years' interest to those with whom we have no contract, and to whom we are under no obligation.

The amount is a large one. It is one that attracts attention. There may be danger lurking in its magnitude. It may be supposed that that induces gentlemen to act upon such matters when they would not if there were a small amount involved. I am not sure that Shakspeare meant to charge persons with a lack of proper humanity when he said:

"Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes, and furr'd gowns, hide all. Plate sin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it."

I do not know that he intended in every instance to charge against humanity that this was their intentional feeling and intentional course; but men, without being aware of it, looking to national matters of this magnitude, sometimes will act differently, and act apparently with more magnanimity, and more justice, than when a solitary and, perhaps, humble individual comes and presents his claim for consideration. I am confident that Senators who advocate this bill intend to do nothing but what is right, but they are certainly (perhaps not appreciating the position they occupy) acting differently upon this large scale from what they do upon a small one. We have so frequently seen it the case here that private individuals have asked for the payment of interest when the debts have been withheld, and seen that interest refused, that we cannot help viewing with astonishment the proposition now to anticipate the obligations of the United States, and to pay nine years beforehand the interest before it is due.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I had not the pleasure of hearing all that my friend from Texas [Mr. Rusk] said the other day in his speech on this subject. I understood him, however, to set up a large claim against the United States for Indian spoliations. Now, if we pass this bill, and pay, as we shall pay under the bill, $1,800,000 over and above the principal, interest, and premium on the $5,000,000 up to this time, will it be considered to that extent a credit upon that claim? I have great faith in the honorable Senator from Texas, and I feel quite certain that he would not rise before the American Senate and assert that his State had a claim for a large amount of money, unless there was some foundation for it in justice. Now, I wish to ask him, if we pass this bill, and allow $1,800,000 over and above the principal, interest, and premium, up to this time, to what extent would it be a payment of the claim for Indian spoliations? Would it be, admitting for the sake of argument that the claim for spoliations is just, a payment pro tanto, and to what extent?

Mr. RUSK. I have a few words to say in answer to the inquiry of the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania. I stated the other day, what I will not repeat except in general terms, that the State of Texas claimed about $4,000,000 from the Government of the United States for that amount, or perhaps a larger amount, expended by the Republic of Texas prior to annexation, in defending herself against Indians whom this Government acknowledged itself bound to restrain from committing depredations. These expenditures were made by Texas in consequence of the violation by this Government of treaties forbidding its Indians to war upon Texas, which violations went on for eight or nine years.

I also stated that, during the pendency of the compromise measures, I endeavored to impress upon the committee the force of this claim for the benefit of the creditors of Texas. Those expenditures constitute a part of the debt now in controversy. No provision in regard to it, however, was put into that act; and in the releases which Texas made under the boundary act, she did not release any claim for these depredations by the Indians of the United States. Now, sir, I believe I know pretty well the opinions of the people of Texas, and it is my decided conviction that the United States ought in good faith to pay this amount of money to these creditors; and if I understand the opinion of the people of Texas, they would be willing to submit it to any disinterested tribunal you may appoint, on full proof to be made, to ascertain the amount of those claims, and to pay them to the creditors of Texas.

It is a slight mistake to suppose that the principal, interest, and premium on the $5,000,000 appropriated by the act of 1850, amount to only $6,500,000, because this will certainly not be adjusted before the 1st of January next; and at that time, counting the premium at fourteen per cent., the principal, interest, and premium will amount to $6,700,000. The difference between that amount and the $8,500,000, which is $1,800,000, would be an advance. I have no sort of doubt in my mind, that whenever the United States choose to investigate and settle the claim in regard to the Indian depredations, Texas will allow that amount to be deducted from the claim.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before the vote is taken, I merely wish to state that the effect of the amendment is to put the bill in such a shape that Texas will not accept its principles.

The question being taken on the amendment by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Butler, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Fessenden, Gillette, Hunter, Johnson, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Shields, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Walker, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Clay, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Foot, Houston, James, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, and Toucey—25.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made, as in Committee of the Whole, were concurred in.

Mr. WALKER. I wish to ask what is the meaning of the conclusion of the third section? It may be all right, but I do not know that I have a right view of it. It provides for the surrender of the evidences of debt, and that the creditors shall deposit their evidences of debt "with the Treasury Department, for the benefit of those whom it may concern, until otherwise directed by law." Is it understood that even this is not to be a final arrangement of this matter, so far as the Government is concerned, or is it designed that it shall be a final adjustment?

Mr. BRIGHT. It is intended that it shall be a final release, so far as the United States are concerned. In preparing that section, the committee decided that each creditor, on presenting his claim for payment, should, on receiving the amount that he or she might be entitled to under the provisions of this act, enter on the back or face of the evidence thus presented the amount paid, with a full and final release of the United States forever, and the same to be left with the Treasurer of the United States, for the benefit of those interested. Certainly the United States is finally exonerated.

Mr. WALKER. Then I have no objection to that phraseology. I ask for the yeas and nays on ordering the bill to be engrossed for a third reading.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Cooper, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Fish, Foot, Houston, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Rockwell, Rusk, Sebastian, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toucey—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Butler, Chase, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Geyer, Gillette, Hunter, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Shields, Sidel, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Weller—19.

So the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

DAVID TOWLE.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the House of Representatives to create and provide a pension for David Towle.

It proposes to place his name on the pension roll, at eight dollars per month, from the 5th of April, 1848.

The petitioner, on the 14th of April, 1814, enlisted for one year as corporal in the company of Captain Noah Haley, in the thirty-third regiment of United States infantry, commanded by Colonel Isaac Lane, and on the 25th of May joined his regiment at Saco, in Maine, and was afterwards marched to Boston, Massachusetts; thence, on the 14th of August, was ordered for Concord, a march of eighty miles in excessive hot weather. During the march, he became so exhausted and worn down by the fatigue and heat, that an inflammation of the kidneys and stoppage of the urine was produced, which eventuated in a chronic disease of the kidneys and ureter, by which he is wholly disabled from obtaining a living by manual labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA ACT.

Mr. PETTIT. I move to take up for consideration the resolution which I submitted on Saturday last, to provide for printing ten thousand copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act.

Mr. SUMNER. I suggest that that should not be taken up now. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Chase] has given notice of an amendment to it, and I know that he has made some preparation with a view to that proposition. The Senate may not be precisely aware of it, and therefore I mention the fact. Of course the Senator from Ohio did not expect that this motion would come up this evening.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Why?

Mr. SUMNER. For the reason that we were in Executive session, and he supposed we should continue in Executive session during the whole of the day.

Mr. PETTIT. This resolution has been pending for some time, and that objection has been made half a dozen times, when I proposed to call it up. I know what the Senator from Ohio wishes to do. He desires to amend the resolution by providing for printing, with the bill, all the amendments which he and everybody else offered, together with all their votes upon them, which would make a big book, and I am satisfied the Senate would not agree to print it. He can offer it as an original proposition, and test the sense of the Senate upon it. If his amendment were adopted, the book could not be printed until after the adjournment. I want this bill printed in order to put an end to the falsification that the true bill has not been published. I ask the Senate to sustain their action, and to show to the people an authenticated copy of what they have enacted. It is complained in every part of the country that they have not got that now. I ask the Senate now to take up the resolution, and order this printing, so that we may have it before we leave.

The motion to take up the resolution was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider it.

Mr. CASS. I wish the honorable Senator from Indiana would add to the number. I have received many letters on that very point. The law is not within the reach of the community, and we cannot do them any more proper and acceptable service than to give them the means of obtaining it. I would rather say twenty thousand. The additional cost will not be much. It will make but a small pamphlet.

Mr. PETTIT. I have no objection to making the amount twenty thousand. I accept that amendment.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That twenty thousand copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act, certified by the Secretary of State, be printed in pamphlet form for the use of the Senate.

SALARIES OF TERRITORIAL OFFICERS.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am directed by the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the House bill to increase the salaries of executive and judiciary officers in Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Utah, and Minnesota, to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage. I also ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to fix the salaries of the chief justice and associate judges for Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, at $2,500; and of the chief justice and associate judges of Minnesota to $2,000; to increase the salary of Governor of New Mexico to $3,000, and of the secretaries of Oregon, Washington, Utah, and New Mexico, to $2,000.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed Senate bill authorizing the extension of the Alexandria and Washington railroad into the District of Columbia, with amendments.

Also, that they had passed the following Senate bills and joint resolution:

A bill to confirm the claim of Dusan de la Croix to a tract of land therein described;

Bill for the relief of Charles Cooper & Co;

Bill for the relief of James Dunning;

Bill for the relief of Joseph Mitchell;

Bill authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;

Bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased;

Bill for the relief of John Phagan;

Bill for the relief of Ezra Williams; and

A resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico to adjust and pay to Juan C. Armijo, José L. Perea, and James L. Collins, the amount by them loaned to the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, under authority of a joint resolution of that body, approved June 17, 1851.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills:

Bill for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston;

Bill for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard;

Bill for the relief of D. C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis;

Bill authorizing the payment of balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812;

Bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, administratrix of Lieutenant Colonel Aeneas Mackay, late a deputy quartermaster in the United States Army.

MADALENA VAN NESS.

The bill for the relief of Madalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius P. Van Ness, deceased, was read a second time; and, on motion by Mr. GEYER, considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to appropriate $9,000 to Mrs. Van Ness in consideration of services rendered by her husband, in the seizure of goods imported into the district of Vermont, in violation of the laws of the United States, during the years 1813 and 1814, while he was collector of the customs for that district, for which services he did not receive the award provided by law in such cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JOHN DONNELL AND SON.

Mr. PEARCE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution for the relief of John Donnell & Son.

Unanimous consent was given, and the joint resolution was read twice by its title.

Mr. PEARCE. If the Senate will allow me to make an explanation of two minutes, I think they will consent to act upon the resolution. If there be any objection, I shall, of course, yield.

Several SENATORS. We are all in favor of it.

Mr. PEARCE. If it can be passed without any objection, I shall not trouble the Senate.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Several SENATORS. Read it.

It proposes to require the Third Auditor to reopen and adjust the claims of John Donnell & Son, for damages sustained in consequence of the sinking of the ships Chesapeake and Thomas Wilson for the defense of Baltimore in 1814—the adjustment to be under the Secretary of the Navy, upon the principles laid down and acted upon in the case of the Sciota and other subsequent cases by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PEARCE. I will state in two minutes the object of the resolution. In 1830, Congress passed an act authorizing payment to be made for the vessels sunk at Baltimore for the defense of the city during the war of 1812, and agreed to pay twenty-five per cent. upon the value of the ships. I have inquired at the Treasury Department, and ascertained that upon all the other vessels they have paid the twenty-five per cent. valuation; but, for some reason which I have not been able to ascertain, deductions were made on the valuation of these two vessels. Their method was to take the lowest estimate as the valuation on which they paid the twenty-five per cent.; but in regard to these two they applied a different rule. The object of the resolution is to put the adjustment of the account in regard to them upon the terms which were applied to all the others, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CLAY. I dislike to interpose any objection to the object of the honorable Senator, but I must suppose that there was some good reason why a distinction was made against these parties; and hence I cannot agree that the resolution shall be passed now. I think it ought to go to a committee, and let them report upon it. They certainly can ascertain some cause for the distinction. I therefore move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROADS IN IOWA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill "making a grant of land to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State," and recommend its passage. I ask, as a favor to my colleague and myself, that the Senate act upon it now. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The bill is precisely such as it has been usual to pass, with the exception that it has in it what is called the Cutting amendment, which restricts the grant of the land to the twenty miles, and to the completion of the road—an amendment which is understood to be necessary in order for the bill to receive the sanction of the President of the United States. An official intimation of that character was made to the committee, and when the fact was made known, every member agreed to the necessity of so reporting the bill. It is precisely the bill which passed before, except that it is more restricted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAYUSE WAR.

Mr. DOUGLAS, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill from the House, making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Cayuse war, reported it back without amendment, and asked for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, accordingly, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to appropriate the further sum of $75,000 to pay the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the provisional government of Oregon, in defending the people of the Territory from the attacks and hostilities of the Cayuse Indians, in 1847 and 1848, and for such allowances for the expenses of adjusting the claims on that account as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem proper, not exceeding five dollars per day to each commissioner. The Secretary of the Treasury is to pay out of the appropriation so much as may be necessary to liquidate the claims according to the reports of the commissioners heretofore appointed, and of the Governor of the Territory, that have been communicated to Congress, and no claims are hereafter to be allowed on account of this war, which are not presented at the Treasury Department within the next fiscal year. All the claims and accounts, not heretofore adjusted, are to be settled and adjusted at such place and in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and he is empowered to reexamine any award made, and to reduce the amount, if, in his judgment, founded on proof, it should be too much.

Mr. WALKER. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he intends this as the final winding up of the matter relating to the Cayuse war?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It is accompanied by a list of all the claims proved, and is a final winding up. Mr. WALKER. Is there a clause in it declaring it to be final?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think there is, and I believe it is entirely right.

No amendment being proposed, the bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. EVANS. It has been brought to my notice to-day, by the Secretary of the Senate, that some few days ago resolutions were passed fixing the salaries of the officers of the Senate. Among them is one which was submitted, I believe, by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT] which gives the clerks of committees five dollars a day with twenty per cent. added, commencing with the beginning of the session. Now, sir, in one instance a clerk was appointed on the 22d of May, and if you give him pay from the commencement of the session, you give him fifteen dollars a day.

Mr. WELLER. That is rather too much.

Mr. EVANS. That is one instance. I therefore submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the clerks of committees of the Senate be paid from the day of their appointment, except those who were on duty from the beginning of the session.

Mr. PETTIT. Let the resolution go over for the present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, [Mr. BRIGHT.] It goes over, if objected to.

Mr. EVANS. I have no objection to that. I want to bring the attention of the Senate to the matter.

Mr. PETTIT. I want to be heard upon it.

KANSAS AND NEBRASKA ACT.

Mr. CHASE. While I was out of the Chamber, the resolution of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PETTIT] ordering the printing of 10,000 copies of the Kansas and Nebraska act was taken up and acted upon. I had stated that I had an amendment to submit to it. I have always been ready to submit it, but when the resolution was called up, other business had been pressing upon the attention of the Senate, and consequently it was not in my power to submit it. I now ask the Senate to reconsider the resolution, and allow me to submit the amendment.

Mr. PETTIT. I object.

Mr. WELLER. I voted in the affirmative on the adoption of the resolution. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. PETTIT called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered and taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Brodhead, Chase, Cooper, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Gillette, Houston, Mallory, Rockwell, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, Walker, and Weller—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Badger, Benjamin, Bright, Clay, Dawson, Dodge of Iowa, Douglas, Evans, Fitzpatrick, Geyer, Gwin, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Mason, Pettit, Pratt, Rusk, Sebastian, Thompson of Kentucky, and Toombs—22.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

TEXAS DEBT.

Mr. CLAY. I ask the Senate to take up the bill reported by the Committee on Pensions some time since for the relief of the widow of James Batchelder.

Mr. FOOT. I rise to a question which takes precedence of the motion of the Senator from Alabama. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate yesterday passed the bill "to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850."

My object is not to defeat the bill. I am in favor of its provisions; that is, I am for the payment of the $5,000,000 provided for by the act of 1850, together with the interest. My object is, if this motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill be agreed to, then to move the reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. If that shall carry, I shall move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. CHASE] was rejected. I voted against that amendment, but upon reflection I am satisfied that it was an inconsiderate vote. I desire that the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio shall be reached, and I desire to record my vote in favor of the amendment, and then to vote for the bill. I will say in addition that, in my opinion, it will have the effect to secure with greater certainty the passage of the bill in the other House.

I will state my object again so that Senators may fully understand it. It is to reach the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio, to strike out "eight" and insert "six," so as to provide for the payment of $6,500,000, which is the original amount of the $5,000,000 provided for by the act of 1850, with interest and premium to this time.

Mr. BRIGHT. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 18, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Atchison, Chase, Clay, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Fessenden, Fish, Foot, Geyer, Hamlin, Mason, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Walker, and Weller—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Badger, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bright, Brodhead, Dawson, Dixon, Evans, Gwin, Houston, James, Johnson, Jones of Iowa, Jones of Tennessee, Mallory, Pearce, Pettit, Pratt, Sebastian, and Stuart—22.

So the motion to reconsider was not agreed to, and the bill stands passed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CASS presented documents in relation to the claim of J. G. Schwarr, late consul of the United States at Vienna, praying compensation for diplomatic services; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SUMNER presented a petition of Lorenzo Sabine and one hundred and sixty-three others, citizens of Framingham, Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the fugitive slave bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, a petition of men of Massachusetts, praying the repeal of the act of Congress of 1850, known as the fugitive slave bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of citizens of the United States, praying an appropriation for the repair of the wharves and piers at Marcus Hook, on the Delaware river, in the State of Pennsylvania; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the memorial of James Thompson, of Louisville, Kentucky, surviving partner of Strader & Thompson, praying indemnity for losses sustained by reason of the violation of their contract for carrying the mail, by the Post Office Department; which, together with a memorial already on file in relation to the same claim, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

BILL RECOMMENDED.

Mr. SLIDELL. Since the Committee on Foreign Relations made a report on the petition of Mr. Sanford, chargé d'affaires at Paris, I have received, in regard to a portion of his claim, additional information. I therefore move that the bill reported for his relief, together with the report, be recommended to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the additional papers which I now present.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF HOUSE BILLS.

The following bills from the House of Representatives, were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Eneas Mackay, deputy quartermaster general of the United States Army;

A bill for the relief of David C. Cash and Giles U. Ellis; and

A bill authorizing the payment of the balance of the property accounts between the United States and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812.

The bill from the House, for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Gerard, was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ROBERT GRIGNON.

The bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Robert Grignon, was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WALKER. I think there is no necessity for the reference of that bill. If I understand it, it is one which has once or twice passed the Senate heretofore. I will ask my honorable colleague if it is not?

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin. It is; and I hope it will be disposed of immediately.

Mr. WALKER. Then I ask the Senate to put the bill upon its passage now.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Robert Grignon, the sum of $19,000, in full satisfaction of his claims against the United States arising out of the treaty with the Menomonee tribe or nation of Indians, executed September 3, 1836, but before the money is paid the consent of the Menomonee tribe shall be obtained.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN GEORGE SIMPTON.

The bill from the House of Representatives, for the relief of Captain George Simpton, of Galveston, was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. WELLER. I hope the Senate will agree to put that bill upon its passage now. It has been pending for several years. The claim was originally reported for $3,000, and the bill has now passed the House of Representatives proposing to allow $1,600. As there can be no question as to the propriety of the payment, I hope the bill will be put upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Captain Simpton $1,600, in full payment of his claim for indemnification for loss of schooner Alert, whilst in the public service, during the war with Mexico.

In the month of March, 1847, the French bark Jeune Nelly, of Havre, was captured as a prize by the United States steamer Hunter, commanded by Captain McLaughlin, while attempting to violate the blockade of Vera Cruz. George Simpton, being the owner of a schooner called the Alert, was at that time employed by the quartermaster to carry provisions from Sacrificios to Camp Bagara for the use of the division of the army under the command of General Twiggs. After the capture of the French bark, the services of Captain Simpton, who was an efficient seaman and a skillful and experienced pilot, were required by Captain McLaughlin for the purpose of taking the Hunter, with her prize, into harbor. The capture was made late in the evening of the 20th March, and the wind being light, Captain McLaughlin ordered the vessels to be taken into the anchorage under Green Island, to remain until the morning. Before this was done, a severe "norther" sprung up, and the pilot was ordered to take the vessels into the harbor. While attempting to execute this order, the three vessels were driven upon a reef by the violence of the winds, although prompt and vigorous efforts were made by the officers and crew to save them. The Hunter, with her prize, and the schooner Alert, were all wholly lost, the officers and men escaping with great difficulty. Captain Simpton now asks that he may be indemnified for the loss of his vessel.

If this loss had occurred while in the performance of his contract with the Government for the transportation of supplies for the army from Sacrificios to Bagara, the Government would have incurred no responsibility for such loss; but as Captain Simpton was called from his duties under his contract, by the officer in command of the Hunter, to render assistance in securing a valuable prize, and his own vessel was lost while thus employed in the public service, the committee think that he is entitled to relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

PAMELA BROWN.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill for the relief of Pamela Brown, widow of Major General Jacob Brown, of the United States Army, deceased.

Mr. SHIELDS. I hope that bill will be put on its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. It is exactly the same as the bill which has already passed the Senate.

Mr. CASS. The passage of the bill would be no more than a proper testimonial to the memory of General Brown. The House of Representatives have diminished one half the amount of pension. His widow has been in a state of penury, and now, as a proper mark of our gratitude for his services, we ought to pass this bill, and as a testimonial for what he did, and for those glorious feats of arms which he achieved in the service of his country.

The bill was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Pamela Brown upon the roll of pensioners of the United States, at the rate of fifty dollars per month, to commence on the 1st day of January, 1828, and to continue during life.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

BOSTON, PHILADELPHIA, AND NEW YORK COURT-HOUSES.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendments of the House to the bill of the Senate, to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts. The bill as it passed the Senate was as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to provide necessary and permanent accommodations for the courts of the United States, and the officers connected with them, in the district of Massachusetts, by fitting up and leasing the same for a term of not less than ten years, or by purchase; provided that no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress.

The amendments of the House were to strike out "Secretary of the Interior," and insert "President of the United States."

To strike out after the word "necessary" the words "and permanent;" to insert after the word "Massachusetts" the words "and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia."

To strike out the words "for a term of not less than ten years, or by purchase; provided that no purchase shall take place except within the limits of an appropriation to be made by Congress," and insert "until permanent accommodations can be provided as hereinafter proposed."

And to add an additional section; so that the bill, as passed by them, reads as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to provide necessary accommodations for the courts of the United States, and the officers connected with them, in the district of Massachusetts, and in the cities of New York and Philadelphia, by fitting up and leasing the same until permanent accommodations can be procured as hereinafter proposed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President be authorized to procure, by purchase or otherwise, suitable sites for buildings to be used as court-houses and post offices, in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, and that he prepare and submit to Congress, at as early a day as practicable, plans and estimates for the same.

The title was amended so as to read:

Bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the districts of Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and New York.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER and Mr. BRODHEAD. I hope not.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should feel exactly as the Senators from Massachusetts and Pennsylvania feel, if there was an appropriation in the bill for a court-house at the capital of the State which I represent.

Mr. BRODHEAD. This bill authorizes no appropriation. The doings of the President under it are to be submitted to Congress, and then the whole matter will come up.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have read the bill, and I have heard the amendment read. I want the same privilege extended to every State in the Union that is proposed to be extended by it to New York, Philadelphia, and Boston. There is no reason why an appropriation should not be made for every city, to accommodate the circuit and district courts of the United States and the post offices.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I beg to assure the honorable Senator from Indiana that there are now no places in which to hold the United States courts in Philadelphia. In the large cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia suitable sites for post offices cannot be obtained from private individuals.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is so all over the West.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I hope that the motion of the Senator from Indiana will not prevail. Similar bills have already passed the Senate. They have now been included in one by the House. The bill authorizes the President of the United States to procure, by purchase, or otherwise, suitable sites in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, for court-houses and post offices. It is absolutely necessary, as a measure of economy. It is right, because we are paying now more in the shape of interest than it would cost to purchase the buildings. We are paying some $10,000, I think, for the post office in New York, and we cannot get, in Philadelphia, a suitable site for less than six or seven thousand dollars.

Mr. MASON. I desire to ask the Senator a question entirely for information. Has this matter, in regard to a site for the court-house in the city of Philadelphia, at any time during the present session, been before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate?

Mr. BROADHEAD. I do not know whether it has been before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate or not. I introduced a bill which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. In it there was a provision not only for a place for the courts, but for the post office at Philadelphia. It passed this body after the honorable Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] made a few remarks in regard to it. A similar bill passed for the city of Boston. It is hardly right to say that if these provisions are necessary in the cities of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia, every little town throughout the country must have similar provisions. You must have a court-house for the large cities where the principal business is done, and also one for the post office; and if you do not have them, you will be obliged to pay for them either in the shape of rent, or purchase.

Mr. HUNTER. It is obvious that this will lead to debate.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I am willing that it should be passed by the present. It is quite unnecessary to refer it. It is well understood; and if the Senator from Virginia desires to press forward the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, I am willing, by common consent, to let this go over, so that Senators shall have the opportunity to consider it.

Mr. BRIGHT. I agree with much that is said by the Senator from Pennsylvania. There is an existing necessity for building court-houses at the points named, but I have no doubt that the very same necessity exists in many other points of the United States, and that fact has been indicated by bill after bill being presented here, which still remain among our unfinished business. I have introduced into the Senate a bill proposing an appropriation to build a similar work at the capital of the State which I represent. The same necessity exists for building a court-house at Louisville, St. Louis, New Orleans, Indianapolis, Detroit, Baltimore, and various other points that I might name, all over the United States.

I have no objection to this bill, provided it comes in the right shape. My object in moving the reference is, that the Judiciary Committee may cause an inquiry and examination into the propriety of purchasing sites at all the points where the district and circuit courts of the United States are now held by authority of law. I might say that in the capital of the State I represent, as the Senator said of Philadelphia, we have no place in which to hold the courts of the United States. The business of our supreme court has increased to such an extent that they occupy the capitol at the very time that the United States circuit and district courts sit; and lately they have been subjected to a great inconvenience to find a place at which to hold the sittings. I wish to obviate that difficulty, and I will join the Senator in obviating it, by referring the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, so as to let them make an amendment to cover all the cases.

Mr. BROADHEAD. In regard to the several places named by the Senator from Indiana, provision is already made for the sitting of the court in the custom-house erected there.

Mr. BRIGHT. What places?

Mr. BROADHEAD. St. Louis, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, if I am not mistaken, and, perhaps, Louisville. Be that as it may, proper places can be obtained in all those places, or nearly all of them, for a reasonable rent; but, sir, in these large cities they cannot be obtained. The courts have recently been turned out of the State House in Philadelphia, in consequence of the consolidation which has taken place, the city councils desiring to use the rooms occupied by the courts.

The records are now in an unsafe place and condition. I believe the grand jury has been obliged to hold its sessions in some by-house or out-of-the-way place. We must, therefore, rent a building for an extravagant sum, or we must authorize a purchase. There is nothing conclusive in this bill. We do not propose to give to the President of the United States absolute power to bind the Government; he is to make the purchases and submit them, if I understand the bill, to the next Congress, and then the subject will come up.

Mr. BRIGHT. Why not make the same provision in regard to other points?

Mr. BROADHEAD. These are the great commercial depots on this continent.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the bill will be referred, so as to get rid of this debate. The discussion can be carried on in the committee better than here.

Mr. BROADHEAD. It is not necessary to refer it. I am willing to let it go over a day.

Mr. HUNTER. It is time for us to take up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. PRATT. I desire to say only one word. However important Philadelphia and Boston may be, as commercial points, I do not think the representatives from the States in which they are situated will contend that they are more important than Baltimore. The United States own no court-house in the city of Baltimore. I think it equally important that one should be provided for them as for Boston and Philadelphia. I do not doubt the importance of having one in Philadelphia and Boston.

Mr. BROADHEAD. Then I ask my friend, why complicate this bill? Why not bring forward a separate measure, as I have done with this?

Mr. PRATT. I understand the object of the bill is not to make a purchase, but to make an inquiry. Then, why not have included in it the same inquiry in reference to Baltimore? I do not think an amendment to that effect would prevent its passage here.

Mr. COOPER. I hope the reference will not be made. I would prefer that the bill should go over a day, and then dispose of it one way or the other. It is certainly very important that some action should be had on this subject. We ought to know whether the Government is disposed to provide a place for holding the courts in Philadelphia, and a site for the post office. If they do not do so, they must resort to the expedient of renting a place for holding the courts until a suitable building is erected. The courts are now literally in the street; for since the consolidation of the city and exterior districts, the property of the city has been taken possession of by the councils, and the rooms which were used by the courts are now used as legislative chambers by the two branches of the councils. The courts have no place to sit in; they are now occupying sometimes one room and sometimes another, as exigency requires. The judges are very anxious that they should know speedily what is to be done, so that they may rent suitable buildings, if the Government does not undertake to purchase or erect them.

Mr. HUNTER. What possible objection can there be to referring the bill? I hope it will be referred and disposed of.

Mr. BROADHEAD. I hope the Senators from Indiana and Virginia will consent to let it be postponed, and not referred. There is no necessity for the reference. We understand the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. The motion to refer was made from no hostile feeling on my part, but simply to perfect the bill, and make it just towards all the States.

The motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary was agreed to.

CHARLES LEE JONES.

Mr. DAWSON. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones, have directed me to report it back, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

It proposes to pay a sum not exceeding $2,000 to Charles Lee Jones in full for his expenses and services in raising, subsisting, and transporting three companies of volunteers in the District of Columbia to serve in the war against Mexico.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE VACANCY.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the vacancy created by the resignation of the Hon. Edward Everett in the committee on the atmospheric telegraph, be filled by the Chair.

NEBRASKA AND KANSAS BILL.

Mr. CHASE asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution directing the printing of certain proceedings and votes; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

DEATH OF GENERAL TOWSON.

Mr. PEARCE. I beg leave to give notice to the Senate, that at three o'clock to-day I shall move that the Senate adjourn. I wish to say that my motive in doing so is to enable the several members of the Senate to attend the funeral of the late Major General Towson, whose uncommon gallantry during the last war won for him such rare distinction, and whose long, and valuable, and faithful public service since have confirmed and increased the reputation which he then acquired. I give this notice that the business of the Senate may be formed accordingly.

THE CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred House bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, widow of the late Colonel Aeneas Mackay, have instructed me to report it back without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HUNTER. I object to that. I want to look into the bill. I now move that the prior orders be postponed, for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BADGER.) The Chair, with the consent of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, will report the bill to the Senate without acting on the amendments reported from the committee, and let them be acted upon in the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. That certainly will expedite the business, if the Senate will agree to do so. The amendments can be made in the Senate as well as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STUART. It is of no consequence. We can offer them as well in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill then will be reported to the Senate. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, have had under consideration a bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855, and have made no amendments thereto. It is still open to amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest that the most expeditious, and the safest way for us to proceed, will be to read the amendments, and, if any Senator objects to any one, he can reserve that. Those to which no objection is taken can be voted upon in the gross. I will suggest, in regard to the amendments, that the committee have reported a great many. Sometimes the Department have corrected their estimate; sometimes we had to correct them. Some were incorrect in the first instance. I send to the Chair the modifications which we make in them, which I ask to have read, with the amendments that we propose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator propose that the amendments be read on until some one is objected to, and then to take the vote?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed to read the amendments.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendments.

The first was to reduce the appropriation for "horses and carriages," in the items of contingent expenses of the House of Representatives, from $4,745 to $4,015.

The next amendment was, under the caption "Library of Congress," to strike out the following clause:

For compensation of librarian, two assistant librarians, and messenger, $4,500, and insert in lieu of it:

For compensation of librarian, three assistant librarians, and messenger, $8,000.

The next was to add, after the last mentioned clause, the following:

For compensation of librarian, assistant librarians, and messenger, for the year ending 30th of June, 1854, $2,700.

The next amendment was to add, at the end of the appropriations for the library, the following:

For the completion and the publication of the works of Thomas Jefferson, and pay of the editor of said work, $7,200.

The next was to strike out—

For compensation of the Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State, clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger, in his office, $38,700, and insert in lieu of it:

For compensation of the Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretary of State, chief of foreign desk, examiner, messenger, and assistant messenger, in his office, $48,200.

The next was to insert, among the items "for the incidental and contingent expenses of the Department of State," the following:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of the northeast Executive Building, $200.

The next amendment was to add, after the appropriation "for publishing the laws in pamphlet form, and in the newspapers of the States and Territories, and in the city of Washington, $18,525," the words:

And such sum shall be paid for publishing the laws in California, Oregon, and Washington, as the Secretary of State may deem reasonable.

The next was to strike out of the appropriation "for extra clerk hire and copying" in the State Department, "$2,000," the words:

Said clerks to be employed only during the session of Congress, or when indispensably necessary, to enable the Department to answer some call made by either House of Congress at one session to be answered at another.

The next amendment was to strike out:

For printing and paper for the Department of State, $200.

The next amendment was to insert at the end of the appropriations for the State Department:

For the purchase of fifty sets of Howard's Reports of the Decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, $3,500.

"For the purchase of copies of the reports of the Supreme Court and Opinions of the Attorneys General of the United States for the Executive offices of the Territories of Kansas and Nebraska, $450.

The next amendment was to strike out the item:

For compensation of the superintendent and four watchmen of the northeast Executive Building, $2,250, and insert:

For compensation of four watchmen of the northeast Executive Building, $2,400.

The next amendment was to strike out all the appropriations contained in the bill for the compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer, the various Auditors and Comptrollers, the Register, and Solicitor of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Customs, and the clerks and messengers in their offices, and the clerks and messengers employed by the Light-House Board, and in lieu thereof insert:

For compensation of the Secretary of the Treasury and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $46,650.

For compensation of the First Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $30,500.

For compensation of the Second Comptroller, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $26,150.

For compensation of the First Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $37,900.

For compensation of the Second Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $34,900.

For compensation of the Third Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $21,850.

For compensation of the Fourth Auditor, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $27,700.

For compensation of the Fifth Auditor, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $15,550.

For compensation of the Auditor of the Post Office Department, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, $163,300.

For compensation of the Treasurer of the United States, and the clerks and two messengers in his office, one additional messenger being hereby created therefor, $26,900.

For compensation of the Register of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $51,700.

For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $16,850.

For compensation of the Commissioner of Customs, and the clerks and messenger in his office, $19,750.

For compensation of the clerks and messenger of the Light House Board, $8,550.

The next amendment was to insert under the heading of "contingent expenses of the Treasury Department," the following:

For additional for disbursing clerks and superintendents of Executive buildings provided in the third section of the act of 3d March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Treasury Department, $600.

The next amendment was to strike out the following:

For paper and printing of the Treasury Department, including paper, printing, and binding the annual "Statement of Commerce and Navigation," and for paper and printing the annual "Estimates of Appropriations," $17,200.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of eight watchmen of the southeast Executive building, from $4,000 to $4,800.

The next was to reduce the appropriation for the compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, and the clerks, messengers, and laborers in his office, from $29,800 to $28,400.

The next was to insert as the first item of contingent expenses in the office of the Secretary of the Interior:

For pay of laborers, $1,095.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the recorder, draughtsman, assistant draughtsman, clerks, messengers, and assistant messengers in his office, from $139,550 to $165,050.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Virginia if the pay of the packers has been increased?

Mr. HUNTER. The pay of the packers, I believe, has not been increased. I will state, generally, in regard to the laboring force of the Departments, that the committee have put the principal messengers of the Departments proper at nine hundred dollars a year each, and the assistant messengers at seven hundred and fifty dollars; so that all the messengers get either the one or the other.

We have put the laborers in the Departments at forty dollars a month, thus giving them four hundred and eighty dollars a year.

We have applied this rule throughout. It is a reduction in some cases and an increase in others. I have not been able to say in what instances the amounts are reduced. I believe there is a reduction in the Land Office for one. Some laborers are increased and others diminished; and such must be the effect of any uniform rule. Whenever you establish a uniform rule, it must be somewhere between the extremes. I think I can state, in regard to the packers, that they receive the same pay as the assistant messengers, $750.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendments.

The next was to reduce the appropriation for compensation of six laborers in the General Land Office, from $3,000 to $2,190.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, from $27,800 to $29,900.

The next amendment was to add at the end of the appropriations for the Indian Office, the following:

For rent of building on Seventh street, for the office of Indian Affairs, commencing the 12th of June, 1854, at $1,200 per annum, $1,263 33.

For compensation of four watchmen for building occupied by the office of Indian Affairs, commencing the 15th of June, 1854, $2,500.

The next amendment was to strike out the following:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks and messengers in his office, $66,800.

For compensation to thirty temporary clerks employed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, $31,300: Provided, That no clerk shall receive more than at the rate of $3 33½ per day.

and insert in lieu thereof:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, and the clerks and four messengers in his office, $108,200.

Mr. PRATT. Do I understand that the amendments which are now being read, to which no objections are made, are to be considered as agreed to? Are they to be voted on without explanation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia proposed that as there were a great many amendments, all should be read together, and those to which there was no objection should be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PRATT. This amendment, I think, requires some explanation. I see that an appropriation of $31,300 is proposed to be stricken out, and one of over $100,000 to be inserted. I should like to know the reason for such a large discrepancy.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state generally that we have had to reconstitute this bill nearly, as it came from the House. In the bill as it came to us, the salaries for all the clerks were appropriated according to the old law, and not according to the law passed at this session, which was introduced by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS.] We had accordingly to change all these items as to amounts, and to some extent the phraseology of the bill. All these amendments are according to estimates, and are, all of them, according to the reformed estimates made up at the Departments, on the basis of the act which has been passed, providing for additional salaries for the clerks.

Mr. ADAMS. I understood from the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, that the reason why that committee reported the bill in the manner in which they did, was, that they had not received the new estimates from the Departments at the time they reported it, and therefore were compelled to take the old estimates.

Mr. CASS. I suppose that the appropriation of $31,000, to which the Senator from Maryland alluded, of course never could have included all the clerks in the Pension Office under any law.

Mr. PRATT. The explanation is satisfactory. The Secretary continued to read the amendments.

The next was to strike out of the provision for the contingent expenses of the Pension Office the following:

For engraving bounty land warrants, $5,000;

For stationery, $2,500;

For binding books, $1,000;

For furniture, $500;

For miscellaneous items, $1,000.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

For engraving and printing bounty land certificates, $5,000.

For stationery, $3,000;

For binding books, $2,000;

For furniture, $500;

For miscellaneous items, $5,000;

For compensation of laborers, $1,500.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask at this point, as we are now on the appropriations in reference to the Department of the Interior, whether it is contemplated to add a provision for the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of the Interior? I do not wish to embarrass the honorable Senator from Virginia; but I have an amendment to that effect which I intended to propose. The object of it is to create an Assistant Secretary in the Interior Department, the same as in the Treasury and State Departments. I think that this would probably be a proper place for it to come in. I hold in my hand a letter of the Secretary of the Interior to the Committee on Retrenchment—not to the Committee on Finance, of which the honorable Senator from Virginia is chairman—in which he urgently recommends the creation of such an office. He says the duties of the Department have increased in such a ratio that it has become almost absolutely necessary to have this responsible officer appointed. If the honorable Senator will permit me, I will offer that amendment. I presume he will make no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state in regard to that, that no estimate for that purpose has been submitted to us by the Secretary of the Interior. I understood from him, in a conversation, that there had been a conference between the Secretaries of the Interior, War, and the Navy, whether they should apply to have a grade of Assistant Secretaries created similar to those in the State and Treasury Departments. I understood from him that if they came to any determination in relation to it, they would address a letter to the Committee on Finance on the subject. We have received nothing from them in relation to the matter; and I supposed the whole thing was laid by for recommendation at a subsequent period.

Now, sir, it would not do, probably, to create this office in the Department of the Interior without going further, because there have been recommendations in other Departments. There have been recommendations for an increase of the salaries of the first clerk in the War Department. If he is to be considered as an assistant secretary, the salary recommended is not too large; but if he be considered as a clerk, it is too great. I understood the different Secretaries were considering whether they would recommend the creation of this grade of office. Until that is done, I shall be unwilling to take the Department of the Interior alone. I hope the Senator will not press that amendment. It can come in as a separate and independent amendment hereafter, when we have disposed of the amendments of the committee. By withholding it until that time, he will have an opportunity to inquire whether there is any general plan on the subject.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am aware that there has been some misunderstanding in relation to this matter. The intention of the Secretary was to address the committee of the honorable Senator from Virginia on the subject; but I have had communicated to me a very strong recommendation, which has been addressed to another committee perhaps by mistake. I will not press the amendment at this time under the circumstances.

Mr. HUNTER. It can be offered as a separate amendment when we are through with the amendments of the committee.

Mr. SHIELDS. Very well.

The Secretary continued to read the amendments of the committee.

The next was to strike out the appropriation of $8,000 for paper and printing for the Interior Department.

The next was to insert, as the first item under the heading, "for the general purposes of the Department of the Interior," the following:

"For additional for disbursing clerks and superintendents of Executive buildings, provided in the third section of the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854,' for the Department of the Interior, $600.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of four watchmen for the eastern wing of the Patent Office, occupied by the Secretary of the Interior, from $2,000 to $2,400.

Mr. COOPER. I wish now to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to the clause making provision for the compensation of the Fourth Auditor, and the clerks and messengers in his Department. I did not advert to it at the time it was read by the Secretary; but I find the amount appropriated by the bill, as it came from the House, for that office, was $25,200. I have a letter from the Fourth Auditor, Mr. Dayton, from which I perceive that he has recommended a larger appropriation than that, in order to provide for the salaries, as arranged by the bill lately passed. I wish to inquire whether provision is made in this case for the payment of the increased salaries of the clerks?

Mr. HUNTER. It is made. That is the cause of these numerous amendments. We had to change the appropriations as made by the House, which were founded on the old grade of salaries. We made the changes so as to give the clerks the increased salaries allowed by the law passed in May last.

Mr. COOPER. That is satisfactory.

The Secretary continued to read the amendments of the committee.

The next was to insert before the appropriations "for Surveyors General and their clerks" the following:

For the preservation of the collections of the Exploring Expedition.

For compensation of keepers, watchmen, and laborers, $2,980.

For contingent expenses, $100.

Mr. PRATT. If I understand that amendment, the expenditure proposed by it is an annual one for the preservation of the collections of the Exploring Expedition.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator from Maryland over the way [Mr. PEARCE] can explain this matter.

Mr. PEARCE. These collections have been, from the time they were received in this country down to the present period; under the charge of the Library Committee, who are very anxious to get rid of that responsibility. But there are other reasons why they should be transferred to the Commissioner of Patents. They are in the Patent Office building, they are under his eye. He is the proper officer to take care of them. He takes care of other things which are connected with them.

The sum appropriated, I will remark, is rather more perhaps than has been heretofore expended by the Library Committee for that purpose; for the reason that it will be necessary to erect additional buildings, and necessary to have an additional watchman, as there is now nothing to prevent burglars from getting into so much of the building as is now going on. I believe that all the allowances are economical; and I am very sure they are below those made in other Departments of the Government. If we do not appropriate this money here, we shall have to appropriate the same sum of money to be expended under the care of the Library Committee. That is the only difference. That committee is not the proper body to take charge of the matter. They are not an executive body properly.

Mr. PRATT. I called attention to the matter, because it struck me as being rather singular that there should be an annual appropriation of about $3,000, for the purpose of preserving the curiosities collected by the Exploring Expedition. I do not know whether they are worth to the Government this annual expense. I only desired the explanation, as it struck my mind as curious.

Mr. PEARCE. As long as we keep them, we must take care of them, and we cannot take care of them with less expenditure. These are very interesting objects. There are one hundred and twenty thousand people who visit that building annually, and it seems to me that this is a very small expenditure to afford so much gratification to our people.

The Secretary continued to read the amendments.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, and the clerks and messenger in his office, from $6,595, to $9,595.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of War, and the clerks, messenger, and assistant messenger in his office, from $20,750 to $22,650.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of clerks and messengers in the office of the Adjutant General from $11,600 to $14,750.

Mr. SLIDELL. I desire to inquire, not merely in reference to this amendment, but to others of a similar character, which appear to be an increase of these appropriations, whether the amendments are proposed merely to carry out the provisions of existing laws, or whether they are an increase of salary to that extent?

Mr. HUNTER. These amendments are only carrying out the law. They are necessary to make the appropriation for the increase of salaries as provided by the bill introduced by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. ADAMS,] which became the law. In order to provide for that increase of salary, we have had to report in favor of the change of these appropriations.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of clerks and messenger in the office of the Quartermaster General from $14,000 to $16,350.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Paymaster General from $10,900 to $12,350.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Commissary General of Subsistence from $8,000 to $9,350.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Chief Engineer from $7,400 to $8,150.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Surgeon General from $4,400 to $5,150.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers from $5,600 to $9,950.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the clerks and messenger in the office of the Colonel of Ordnance from $10,400 to $12,150.

The next was to strike out the appropriation of $2,400 for printing and paper for the War Department.

The next was to insert, as the first item under the head "for the several purposes of the Northwest Executive Building," the following:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building, provided in third section of the act of the 3d of March 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the War Department, $200.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of four watchmen of the Northwest Executive Building, from $2,000 to $2,400.

Mr. BELL. I will ask the Senator from Virginia whether that sum of $2,400 includes the increased compensation which would be required to place those watchmen on an equal footing with the watchmen and messengers provided for by former acts of Congress when these were omitted?

Mr. HUNTER. My impression is that this does put them on an equal footing. There was an addition made which was due to them on account of the bill of the Senator from Mississippi, as I said before. Four hundred dollars are added here to the item as it came from the House on account of that bill, to the benefits of which they are entitled. I cannot say positively that all the watchmen in the Executive buildings receive the same sum. I am inclined to think that they do now; but I shall be able to inform the Senator before the bill is disposed of.

The next was so to amend the following provision:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $21,875.

For compensation of superintendent and four watchmen of the building corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $2,250.

—as to make it read:

For rent of house on northwest corner of F and Seventeenth streets, or such other building as the Secretary of War may select, and warming all the rooms in it, $32,375; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to lease said building, or some other, for a term not exceeding five years, at the rent herein authorized, if in his judgment the same shall be for the public interest.

For compensation of four watchmen of the building on the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, $2,600.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks, messengers, and assistant messengers in his office, from $27,100 to $28,700.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the salaries of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance and Hydrography, and the clerks and messenger in his office, from $10,000 to $11,650.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Chief of the Bureau of Navy-Yards and Docks, and of the civil engineer, clerks, and messenger in his office, from $13,700 to $14,850.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, Equipment, and Repairs, and of the chief naval constructor, engineering chief, and the clerks and messenger in his office, from $20,800 to $22,550.

The next was to increase the appropriation for clerks and messenger in the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing from $7,300 to $8,150.

The next was to increase the appropriation for the compensation of the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and the clerks and messenger in his office, from $7,900 to $8,350.

The next was to strike out "for printing and paper for the Navy Department, $2,000."

The next was to insert among the appropriations, "for the general purposes of the Southwest Executive Building," the following:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building, provided in the third section of the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Navy Department, $200.

The next was to increase the appropriation for compensation of four watchmen of the Southwest Executive Building, from $2,000 to $2,400.

The next was to strike out the following:

For compensation of the Postmaster General, three Assistant Postmasters General, and clerks, messenger assistants, messengers, and watchmen of said Department, $124,400.

and to insert in lieu thereof—

For compensation of the Postmaster General, three Assistant Postmasters General, and clerks and messengers of said Department, $150,150.

The next was to insert among the appropriations for contingent expenses of the Post Office Department the following:

For additional for disbursing clerk and superintendent of Executive Building, provided in the third section of the act of the 3d of March, 1853, entitled, "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," for the Post Office Department, $900;

For compensation of three watchmen for the Post Office Building, $1,800.

The next was to strike out this clause:

For printing and paper for the Post Office Department, $1,000.

The next was to insert, at the end of the appropriations for the Executive Departments, the following:

For paper and printing for the Executive Departments, including paper, printing, and binding the annual "Statement of Commerce and Navigation," and paper, and printing the annual "Estimates of Appropriations," $30,800.

The next was to amend the following clause, among the appropriations for New Mexico: "For contingent expenses of said Territory, $1,000;" so as to make it read:

For contingent expenses of said Territory, including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor as a translator, $1,500.

The next was to insert in the provision appropriating $20,000 for the compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly of New Mexico, its officers, clerks, and contingent expenses, the following:

Including the compensation of the person employed by the Governor to revise and correct the laws of New Mexico, and the expense of printing the same.

The next was to add to the appropriations for the Territory of New Mexico the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay for the preservation of the archives of the Territory from May 5 to September 9, 1852, $420.

The next was to strike out of the appropriations for Washington Territory the following:

For salaries of Governor, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, three judges, and secretary, $10,500, and in lieu thereof to insert:

For salaries of Governor, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, three judges, and secretary, $11,500; it being hereby provided that the respective salaries of the Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs be increased to $2,000 per annum.

The next was to add to the appropriations for Washington Territory the following:

To reimburse the fund appropriated to defray the pay and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, and the contingent expenses thereof, the amount fraudulently taken from said fund by Henry V. Colter, and to relieve Charles H. Mason, secretary of said Territory, from his liability therefor, $2,000.

For compensation and expenses of commission to frame a code of laws for the Territory, $2,500.

For the completion of the geological reconnaissance of the Territory of Washington, and to make detailed examinations in the coal and mineral regions thereof, $10,000.

The next was to insert, after the appropriation for the payment of district judges, the following:

For compensation of the district judge of the southern district of California, commencing the 23d of January, 1854, $4,023 88.

The next was to increase the appropriation for salaries of the Attorney General, and the clerks and messenger in his office, from $12,300 to $19,900.

The next was to amend the clause "for salary of the reporter of the Decisions of the Supreme Court, $1,300," by adding to it:

If only one volume of the reports shall be published; and in case the Supreme Court shall direct him to publish two volumes, then the sum of $1,300 for each volume so published.

The next was to insert, after the appropriation for the purchase of a custom-house site at Providence, Rhode Island, the following:

For the completion of the custom house at San Francisco, California, including all expenses of filling in, piling, sewers, drains, pavements, inclosure, gateways, the extin-guishment of private claims for the possession of the whole or any part thereof, and contingencies incident thereto, $163,388 09.

Mr. STUART. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance whether that is intended to cover what I understand has been a compensation agreed upon by the State of California, and the United States respecting the custom-house lot in San Francisco?

Mr. HUNTER. This does not cover that. There is another appropriation for it. This is designed to finish the custom-house, to finish the foundation, filling in, and piling to complete the foundation.

Mr. STUART. The present work, as I understand it, is upon a lot which is in dispute.

Mr. HUNTER. It is upon a lot that was in dispute, but the State of California has consented to accept a certain amount which is appropriated here.

Mr. STUART. That is what I wished to inquire, whether the bill contained a provision which was to satisfy the State on that subject?

Mr. HUNTER. Yes, sir, it does.

Mr. WELLER. The Legislature of the State of California passed an act requiring the property to be appraised, and providing for its transfer to the United States on this Government paying one half that appraised value.

Mr. STUART. So I understood.

Mr. WELLER. The lot was appraised by competent persons at $300,000, and therefore would be transferred to the Federal Government for $150,000.

Mr. STUART. So I understood, and I wished to know whether the bill contained a provision which was to perfect that title.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the committee's amendments. The next was, in the provision requiring a valid title to the first obtained, and a cession of jurisdiction by the State where any building appropriated for by the act was to be erected, before any of the moneys appropriated hereby, to strike out the words "for any building mentioned in this act," and to insert "by this act for any custom-house or marine hospital;" and to strike out the words "in this act" in a subsequent part of the same proviso.

The next was to insert after the appropriation for the Pittsburg custom-house, the following:

For the erection of a building for a boarding station at Pass a l'Oute, Louisiana, $3,500: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the title to the land selected as the site of said building be first secured to the United States.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase, for the use of the United States, the land and buildings thereon, constituting the boarding station at the southwest pass of the Mississippi river, $3,500: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the title to said land be secured to the United States, and the consent of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana obtained to said purchase.

The next was to insert, after the last amendment, the following:

For the construction of an appraiser's store on a portion of the square selected for the custom-house at San Francisco, California, including the expense of piling for the foundation thereof, by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best, $100,000: Provided, That the same restrictions regarding the completion of said work with the sum hereby appropriated, as are contained in this act, concerning the erection and completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, shall be applicable thereto.

The next amendment was in the following provision to strike out all after "1853," down to "Congress"—[the words to be stricken out are in brackets.]

For the purchase of the lots or parcels of land, with the appurtenances and the buildings thereon, belonging to the State of California, including the expense of piling for the foundation thereof, by contract or otherwise, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem best, $100,000: Provided, That the same restrictions regarding the completion of said work with the sum hereby appropriated, as are contained in this act, concerning the erection and completion of custom-houses and marine hospitals, shall be applicable thereto.

And to insert, in lieu of the provisos thus proposed to be stricken out, the following:

Five hundred and thirty thousand dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per centum per annum, from the 15th day of September, 1853, until said purchases shall be completed: Provided, That the same be so completed within one year from the day such interest is hereby authorized to be paid. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby further authorized to purchase, for the use of the United States, such property adjoining thereto, situated on Pine street, on which the United States now holds a mortgage, as may be sold to satisfy the same, at a price not exceeding the amount of said lien.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I desire to make an inquiry and a remark respecting the proposed amendment in reference to the purchase of a site for an assay office in the State of New York. I observe that the Committee on Finance propose to make an amendment to the House bill by striking out this proviso:

Provided, That, before the said purchase is completed, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over said land and property, and shall, by law, exonerate the same, and the property of the United States thereon, from all taxes, levies, and assessments thereon, whilst the same remains the property of the United States: Provided, however, That no part of this appropriation is to be used until the Secretary of the Treasury has entered into a negotiation with the lessors of the lot in question to get rid of said lease; and also has ascertained upon what terms said lease can be disposed of, and has reported the result of said negotiation to the next session of Congress.

It is as to this amendment of the Committee on Finance to this portion of the bill that I desire to make an inquiry. I do not exactly understand why the House of Representatives inserted the provision now proposed to be stricken out, unless the House believed that the sum of $530,000 was too large a compensation for the building and ground. The House must have acted upon the idea that it was too large a compensation, otherwise they would not have directed the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into negotiations with the lessors to get clear of this conditional purchase. Now, I should like to know from the Committee on Finance why it is proposed to strike out this provision which was inserted by the House of Representatives? It seems to me that it was a very good proposition.

Mr. PRATT. Before the Senator from Virginia answers the inquiry of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I wish also to make an inquiry on the same subject. The portion of the House bill which it is proposed to strike out contains the proviso which is usual, I believe, whenever the United States acquire lands within the limits of a State, that the State shall cede jurisdiction and pledge itself not to tax the property ceded. The proviso which it is proposed to strike out is the usual form that, before the purchase is completed, the State of New York shall cede to the United States jurisdiction over such land and property, and exonerate the same as property of the United States from all taxes and levies. I believe that whenever the United States propose to acquire property, they universally require the State Legislature to relieve them from taxation on the property so to be acquired.

Mr. HUNTER. The inquiry of the Senator from Maryland is first in order, although last made, and I shall therefore first reply to him. We understood that the State of New York had already released from taxation any property which might be acquired by the United States, for the purpose of an assay office in the city of New York. It was supposed, indeed it has been found from experience, that perhaps it is better that the States should not cede jurisdiction. A great many offenses may be committed there, which are cognizable by State laws, and for which they provide an adequate remedy, and accordingly a motion will be made by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] by the authority of the Committee on Commerce, when the Committee on Finance shall have concluded their amendments, to insert a provision not requiring a cession of jurisdiction.

Mr. PRATT. Let me say to my friend that the jurisdiction ceded is always a limited one, reserving to the States ceding jurisdiction over criminal offenses committed within the territory ceded. For example, take the property at Annapolis, which was ceded by Maryland for a naval school. The State of Maryland ceded her jurisdiction over the property, but she reserved the right to punish criminal offenses committed within the territory so ceded. The territory, however, was ceded to the United States, and the right of taxing relinquished. The Senator from Virginia seems not to be certain on this point. He says that he has understood that the State of New York has passed a law releasing the property from taxation.

Mr. FISH. I can relieve the Senator of all doubt on that point. The State of New York has passed such a law, and I have a copy of it here. If it be desired, I will send it to the Secretary's desk, and have it read. It exempts the buildings, ground, machinery, and everything in the buildings, from taxation.

Mr. PRATT. Does it relate to property to be bought?

Mr. FISH. Let the act be read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

An act to exempt the assay office of the United States, in the city of New York, from assessment or tax.

The people of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Sec. 1. No assessment or tax of any description, general or local, shall be imposed, assessed, or collected upon the assay office of the United States, which, by the act of Congress of March, 1853, it is provided shall be established in the city of New York; neither upon the land owned by the United States on which the building or buildings used or to be used therefor, shall, or may be erected; nor upon the machinery used or to be used therein; nor upon the metal, bullion, or coin deposited for melting, remelting, or assaying; nor upon bars or ingots, after melting, remelting, or assaying; while the same is in the custody, possession, or under the control of the officers of the assay office of the United States, in the city of New York.

Sec. 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. HUNTER. In regard to this matter of jurisdiction, I will state to the Senator from Maryland, that it was not an old practice, but a recent one. Since some of the States attempted to tax such property, that provision has been made. It was done for the purpose of saving it from that taxation; but it was found afterwards to be unnecessary, and to lead to some special inconveniences. By the words of the Constitution, when the State has given its assent to the acquisition of title, or the part of the United States, for any needful building, the jurisdiction follows. The Constitution gives authority to Congress to exercise "exclusive legislation in all cases" over the seat of government, and "to exercise like authority over all places purchased, by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings." If the State assents to the purchase, the jurisdiction follows, as a matter of course.

In regard to the amount, I will state to the Senator from Pennsylvania, that there could have been no objection to that on the part of the House, because they appropriated the amount with one little difference, which I will presently explain. But to that appropriation there were added, by way of amendment, some provisos which seemed to the Committee on Finance to be not only useless, but, in some cases, more than useless. One is the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury should enter into negotiation with the lessor to get rid of the lease. Now, what is the necessity for that? If the United States buy, of course they get rid of the lease, and there can be no necessity for that proviso.

Another proviso was, that no part of the appropriation should be used until the Secretary of the Treasury ascertained upon what terms the lease could be disposed of, and reported the result of such negotiation to the next session of Congress. The effect of that would have been to delay the use of this appropriation until the next session of Congress, and to do so uselessly, because we have now a copy of the contract which was, of course, conditional upon the approval of Congress by which the parties owning the property contracted to sell it to the Secretary of the Treasury for the very sum appropriated here. The contract also provided that if the Government would pay interest up to the date of the payment of the principal, we need not pay the rent of the building. A positive saving will, therefore, be made by adding as we propose to add to the $530,000, interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum, because the interest is much less than the rent. By pursuing the terms of the contract, as this amendment proposes, we shall acquire the property and get rid of the rent which we should have to pay, by paying a less sum. We thought, therefore, that the condition of the last proviso was worse than useless; that it merely postponed to a later day what ought to be done at once, and also required us to pay more interest than was necessary.

Mr. PRATT. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia, and of the Senate, to the phraseology of the New York law, which has been brought to our notice. It provides that no tax shall be imposed "upon the land owned by the United States on which the building or buildings used, or to be used therefor, shall or may be erected." Now, the object of the provision of the bill under consideration is to purchase land within the jurisdiction of the State of New York; and hence it is a purchase of land which was not owned at the time this act of New York was passed; therefore, inasmuch as the act of New York only exempts land owned by the United States, it does not exempt from taxation the land which you now propose to purchase under this bill. I may be in error in this construction, but I think it is the legal construction, and surely there can be no harm by retaining that portion of the bill, as it came from the House, which provides that an exemption from taxation shall be obtained from the State of New York. The law of New York is applicable only to "land owned," and, of course, it meant land owned, at the time that law was passed, by the United States, and upon which they might erect a building which should be exempt from taxation. It is not, according to strict construction, applicable to the land proposed to be purchased by this portion of the bill.

Mr. FISH. Mr. President, I think that the honorable Senator from Maryland is wholly mistaken in his construction of the law of New York. I know very well that if his construction be correct, it is wholly at variance with the interest of those who enacted the law. The Legislature of New York have already passed two acts in reference to this very subject. Some two years since, in anticipation of action at that time by Congress, they passed a prospective law, that any property which should be acquired by the United States, for the purposes of a Mint in the city of New York, should be exempt from taxation. After the bill establishing the assay office was enacted by Congress, that not being a Mint, it was thought necessary to ask for a further act to carry out in good faith the intention of the State to release the property from taxation.

I can state further to the honorable Senator from Maryland, that in the State of New York the mode of taxation is by an annual assessment. The tax is imposed year by year. The phraseology of this act is, "no assessment or tax of any description, general or local, shall be imposed, assessed, or collected upon the assay office of the United States," nor "upon the land owned by the United States on which the building or buildings used, or to be used therefor."

At the present time there is a provision in the lease that, while the property belongs to the banks from which the Government has rented it, the lessors shall pay the taxes. Surely the honorable Senator does not wish to discharge them from that obligation. But the moment the property is owned by the General Government, the act becomes operative, and from that time no assessment or tax can be imposed upon the ground of the United States, or the buildings erected on it for the assay office. The act is perfectly explicit, perfectly effectual for the object which the Senator has in view.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I do not think there can be any difficulty at all about the true construction of the act of New York; but independent of that, the clause of the Constitution which has been referred to by the Senator from Virginia, it seems to me, settles the question sufficiently. I presume the provision inserted in the original bill in the House arose out of some misunderstanding between parties there. It is known to the Senate, and perhaps to the Senator now occupying the chair, [Mr. BADGER,] that some little jealousy has existed between Philadelphia and New York on the subject of the Mint. One party thought this assay office was a kind of embryo Mint in the city of New York, and therefore may have thought they would try to cripple it as far as possible. I do not think that such was the intention at all, and I am confirmed in that by my honorable friend at my side, [Mr. FISH.] He and I understand each other, and I believe my colleague also. I have no objection, of course, to retaining the provisos proposed to be stricken out; but I have the assurance that the original intention of Congress in authorizing an assay office at New York is not going to be violated on the part of our New York friends.

They will get along with their assay office and leave us our Mint. For my part, I do not feel any disposition to cripple them. I rely on their good faith; but as soon as I find that they violate it, I shall make war upon them. Until then, I think it cannot properly be done.

Mr. FISH. I think there is no need of misapprehension. If the assay office, as it is proposed to be established if the other provisions of this bill shall be carried into effect, I assure my honorable friend from Pennsylvania that I do not think New York will ever ask for the mere privilege of stamping coin. We shall have acquired the great commercial advantages which we have so long needed. That is what we want; but we are not anxious to interfere with the possession by Philadelphia of that beautiful building which adorns that city, or interfere with any profit which may result to it from continuing the operations of coinage there. What we want is to save ourselves the cost of transportation on the large amount of bullion brought into New York, and the loss of time and the risk and expense which have heretofore been incurred. But the provisions of this bill, as reported by the Committee on Finance, if enacted, will, I think, give us all that the city of New York will ever ask for on that subject.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I am glad to hear from the honorable Senator from New York the remarks which he has just submitted. They are in accordance with the understanding which was had, and the remarks which were made in debate, when the bill establishing the assay office in the city of New York was under consideration. It will be remembered that I opposed the establishment of that assay office there, on the ground that it was only the commencement of a Mint in that place. The honorable Senator from New York at that time assured me that such was not the fact. Well, sir, the bill passed, appropriating $150,000 for an assay office in New York city, and now we are told that a contract has been made for $530,000 for the purchase of a site. I know that property in Wall street is very valuable, and I do not say the Secretary of the Treasury has made an improvident contract. But, looking at this very large sum to be paid for a large building, an apprehension arose in the minds of many people in Pennsylvania that there was a design to do something else with the building than use it merely for an assay office.

Mr. FISH. That is the fact.

Mr. BRODHEAD. So I understand, and I learn now from the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that this building is not to be used for an assay office alone, but is also to be occupied by the assistant treasurer of the United States in New York, to keep the funds and coin belonging to the United States, the custom-house being too small for that purpose. Am I correct?

Mr. HUNTER. The Senator is correct in supposing that this purchase is necessary in order to procure certain easements for the custom-house, which are essential to it, and for which there is otherwise no hope. This property adjoins the custom-house, and by purchasing it we get the use of an alley which is important, and I believe it is proposed to erect on it an additional building for the use of some of the officers in the custom-house.

Mr. FISH. And beyond that let me say the assay office occupies a very small portion of this property. The rear part of the lot is that on which the assay building is erected. The building in front is to be occupied by the assistant treasurer and his clerks, and is also to be occupied by a large number of the clerks of the custom-house, not even connected with the assistant treasurer. The accommodations in the custom-house are insufficient, and hence the necessity of providing them elsewhere. There was a right of way in common between the custom-house and this property, which now becomes solely the property of the United States, and large additional accommodations for the custom-house officers will be obtained in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If Senators are now satisfied on this amendment, the Secretary will continue the reading of the others.

The Secretary continued to read the amendments of the committee.

The next amendment was to insert, in the following clause, the words in italics:

For expenses of raising, cleaning, and repairing, remooring, and supplying losses of floating beacons and buoys, and chains and sinkers for the same, and for coloring and numbering all the buoys, $89,357 32.

The next amendment was to insert the following in the bill:

For expenses which may be incurred in acknowledging the services of the masters and crews of foreign vessels in rescuing citizens and vessels of the United States from shipwreck, $5,000: Provided, That the same shall be expended under the direction of the President of the United States.

For the purchase of blank books, stationery, arms of the United States, presses, and flags, and for the payment of postages for the consuls of the United States, $10,000.

The next amendment was to strike out of the following clause "$97,200," and insert "$160,000:"

For salaries and commissions of registers of land offices, and receivers of public moneys, $97,200.

The next amendment was to strike out of the following clause "$14,600," and insert "$50,000:"

*For expenses of depositing public moneys by receivers of public moneys, $14,600.

The next was to strike out "$18,100" from the following clause:

"For incidental expenses of the several land offices, $18,100,"

and insert:

Including new offices not heretofore provided for, $40,000.

The next amendment was to insert the following:

For surveying the public lands and private land claims in California, including office expenses incident to the survey of the claims, and to be disbursed at the rates prescribed by law for the different kinds of work, $300,000.

For rent of surveyor general's office in California, purchase of instruments, records, drawing materials, furniture, fuel, pay of messenger, $18,300.

For compensation of draughtsmen and clerks, in addition to the amount heretofore estimated, the same being required in consequence of the increased amount of field-work proposed to be executed, $21,000.

The next amendment was to strike out the following:

For two additional clerks in the office of the Superintendent of the Public Printing, authorized by the joint resolution approved February 6, 1854, $1,500 each, $3,000.

The next was to insert the following:

For running the northwestern boundary line between the United States and Great Britain, from the Lake of the Woods to the Pacific ocean, for marking the forty-ninth parallel, and for such survey as may be necessary to fix said boundary between the main and Vancouver's Island, and including the compensation of the officers and others employed in the work, $242,175.

The next was to strike out the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to replace the moneys already paid for rents, and to pay the semi-annual payment for rent falling due on the 1st day of January, 1855, on the two leases, each bearing date the 19th day of August, 1853, one thereof with the Bank of the State of New York, and the other thereof from the Bank of Commerce, both being for property on Wall street in the city of New York, leased for the use of the assay office in the city of New York, $68,458 33.

The next was to strike out of the following clause the proviso:

For the Capitol extension, $750,000: Provided, That each and all persons who have been, or may be appointed hereafter, to disburse the money which is now, or may hereafter be appropriated for the building or repair of any of the edifices or structures for which appropriations are made in this act, and are not now required by law to give bond and security, shall give bond, with good securities, in sufficient penalty, to be approved of by the head of the department under which such disbursement may be made, or the President of the United States, when the work shall be specifically under his direction.

The next was to insert the following:

For continuing the work for a supply of water to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000.

For completing the bridge over the Potomac river near the Little Falls, $75,000.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the honorable Senator whether $75,000 are sufficient to complete that bridge?

Mr. HUNTER. That is the estimate. We put in the estimate, and we know no other rule.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Virginia, whether, if this amendment be passed, we shall be giving our consent to the water works?

Mr. PRATT. Certainly.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Then I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator objects, the amendment will be passed over.

The Secretary continued to read the amendments.

The next was to insert the following:

For permanent repair of the roof of the Capitol with copper, $2,000.

The next was to insert:

For altering the streets, and repairing in front of the east wing of the Patent Office, putting up iron railings, flagging, footway, putting in order yards, painting new saloon of the Patent Office in fresco, $14,250.

The next was to insert:

For fuel for the President's House, $1,000.

For a furnace keeper at the President's House, $365.

The next was to insert:

For grading done by order of Ignatius Mudd, late Commissioner of Public Buildings, in reservation number seventeen, between Third street east and New Jersey avenue, $484 89.

The next was to add the following additional section:

And be it further enacted, That the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, providing for the classification of the clerks in the Treasury, War, Navy, Interior, and Post Office Departments, as amended by the act of April 22, 1854, shall be, and the same is hereby, further amended, as follows, to wit: In the office of the First Comptroller there shall be two additional clerks of class three; and in the office of the First Auditor there shall be one clerk taken from class three and placed in class four, and four additional clerks allowed of class one; and in the Third Auditor's office five clerks shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and twenty-seven temporary clerks shall be placed in class one, and one temporary clerk in class three, and four temporary clerks in class two; and in the Sixth Auditor's office one clerk shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and there shall be added to the clerks in this office ten of class one; and in the Register's office two clerks shall be taken from class three and placed in class four, and two additional clerks added of class one; and in the Treasurer's Office one clerk shall be taken from class two, and one clerk from class three, and placed in class four, and two additional clerks allowed to class one; and in the General Land Office the principal draughtsman shall be classed and paid as a clerk of the third class, and the assistant draughtsman as a clerk of the second class; and in the office of the Secretary of War there shall be added one clerk of class four; in the office of the Adjutant General there shall be one additional clerk of class one; and in the office of the Topographical Engineers one scientific draughtsman as a clerk of class four; and for the superintendency of the building on the corner of F and Seventeenth streets, the Secretary of War is authorized to appoint some one clerk of his Department other than the disbursing clerk, for that purpose, who shall be allowed, in addition to his salary as clerk, $300; in the Postmaster General's Office there shall be seven additional clerks, two of class two, one of class three, and one of class four; and in the office of the Attorney General, in lieu of the clerks now authorized by law, there shall be one chief clerk, at a salary of $2,200, one clerk of class one, three of class two, two of class three, and one of class four. And the President of the United States is hereby authorized, whenever it may in his judgment be necessary, to cause counsel to be employed to assist in the prosecution or defense of causes which may be pending in the Supreme Court in which the United States are interested, and to allow to such counsel such compensation as he may deem reasonable. And in the Department of State, instead of the clerks now authorized by law, there shall be four clerks of class one, three of class two, seven of class three, and four of class four. One clerk of class four shall be designated by the superintendent to superintend the northwest Executive building, and to disburse all moneys belonging to the service of said Department not otherwise provided for, who shall give bonds as provided for by the independent treasury act, and receive an additional compensation therefor of $200 per annum. There shall be one chief of the diplomatic, and one chief of the consular branch of the public service, and one examiner of claims for indemnity preferred by States of the United States against foreign Governments, and by the latter against the former, who shall perform their duties as the Secretary of State may designate; each of whom shall receive an annual salary of $2,000; and the chief clerk of said Department shall receive an annual salary of $2,200. No clerk not now employed in the State Department shall hereafter be appointed until he has been examined by a board, to consist of three examiners, to be selected by the Secretary of State, and found qualified in certain particulars to be prescribed by the said Secretary in fixing beforehand a general standard of qualifications for the clerks to be employed in his Department.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the second section of the act of 22d of April, 1854, entitled "An act to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, repealed. And from and after the 1st day of July, 1854, the annual salary of the stamp and blank agent for the Post Office Department shall be the same as clerks in the departments of the second class; and that of the clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings the same as clerks of the first class; and the Secretaries of State, Treasury, Interior, War, and Navy, Postmaster General, and Attorney General, be authorized to employ one principal messenger each, at an annual salary of $900, in lieu of those now so employed, and the salary of all other messengers and assistant messengers, including the packers in the General Land Office, heretofore authorized by law to be employed in the Executive Departments in Washington, the messenger in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, doorkeeper and assistant doorkeeper at the Executive Mansion, and keeper of the western gate, Capitol square, shall be $750 per annum; and the annual salary of the watchmen employed at the Capitol, President's House, and the Executive Departments, and the Auxiliary Guards, shall be $600; and the public gardener shall receive $1,400 per annum; and the captain of the police of the Capitol shall receive $1,600, and each of his assistants $1,300 each per annum; and all laborers in the employment of the Executive Departments in the city of Washington shall receive an annual salary of $480 each; and for the payment of the excess of the sums herein required to be paid over and above those elsewhere contained in this act for said payment, there shall be added thereto respectively such further sums as together will equal the amounts herein authorized, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JAMES. I suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Finance a small amendment, to insert after the words "Auxiliary Guards," "and the watchmen of the Capitol extension."

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend the section by inserting after the words which have been inserted on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, "watchmen on the Capitol extension," the words "keeper of Lafayette square," so as to make his salary $600.

Mr. CLAY. I would suggest that that is what his compensation is now. He gets two dollars a day.

Mr. HUNTER. If he gets that, I think it ought to do. Two dollars a day is $730. I am willing to put him equal with the messengers, at $750. That will be enough.

Mr. ADAMS. I will suggest $800.

Mr. HUNTER. The keeper of the Capitol gate gets $750, and the keeper of Lafayette square ought not to get more than he does. I would suggest to the Senator that it would be better to put him on the same footing with the keeper of the Capitol gate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Weller in the chair.) The Chair will suggest that the proposition of the Senator from Mississippi reduces the amount.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say $800 dollars per annum.

Mr. HUNTER. I would suggest to the Senator to insert, "the keeper of Lafayette square," after the words "keeper of the western gate, Capitol square." That will give him $750 per annum, the same as the gate-keeper gets.

Mr. ADAMS. I will accept that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS. I want to suggest another amendment to the Senator from Virginia, which, it occurs to me, is just and necessary. The section now provides that the salary of "the messenger in the office of the Commissioner of Public Buildings, doorkeeper and assistant doorkeeper at the Executive Mansion, and keeper of the western gate, Capitol square, shall be $750." And then it says "the annual salary of the watchmen employed at the Capitol, President's House, and the Executive Departments, and the auxiliary guards, shall be $600." I suggest to the Senator that the watchmen should be put on the same footing with those others, at $750; because their duties are much more onerous and laborious and trying. They occur at night as well as in the daytime; and I know these men suffer a great deal more than the others. They perform more difficult duties.

Mr. HUNTER. I suggest to the Senator from Illinois that this $600 is the amount of $500 which the watchmen used to get, with the twenty per cent. given by the bill of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Adams.] It may be that the watchmen of the Capitol ground are in the habit of getting more than the others. I am not aware of the fact. We equalized all the watchmen of the Departments, and gave them the highest salary that any one now receives—$600. We thought that enough.

Mr. SHIELDS. But I want this to apply to all Executive departments, because I know that these men have more onerous duties to perform than the messengers who get $750, and only perform duties during three hours of the day, while the watchmen perform duties during twenty-four hours.

Mr. HUNTER. We found those grades established, and I suppose that they have so continued from the institution of the Government—messengers receiving more than the watchmen, and different classes of messengers receiving compensation. We have not attempted to change that system. We have given the watchmen the highest salary which any one of them was receiving. We thought that was doing enough, and I suggest to the Senator from Illinois, whether there must not be some end to this increase of salary. We have been dealing pretty liberally with the employees in this District.

Mr. SHIELDS. I have not even commenced the increase of salaries, but I know that these watchmen, who are compelled to stay out all night, are entitled at least to the pay of a messenger, who has services to perform only three hours in a day; and I therefore move to amend by giving them $750.

Mr. ADAMS. The amendment reported from the Committee on Finance increases the compensation of a portion of these employees to $600. If you commence with one, you must go to the other. The Senator from Illinois is not advised, perhaps, of the annoyance and discontent that these arrangements produce among the different employees. I am convinced that a large portion of them would be content with $600, as provided for by the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read the next amendment of the committee.

It was to add the following as an additional section:

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1853, the pay of the Librarian shall be $2,000, the pay of the two principal assistants each $1,800, that of the third assistant $1,200, and that of the messenger $1,080 per annum.

Mr. PEARCE. It is necessary to amend that by inserting, after the word "librarian," the words "of Congress."

The modification was made.

The next amendments of the committee propose to insert the following additional sections:

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That the sum of $300,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, to be paid to the State of California, for the expenses of the government of said State from its organization until its admission into the Union.

Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That all persons claiming any interest in, or portion of, any grant of land derived from the Spanish or Mexican Government in Upper California, where such original grant has heretofore been presented to the board of land commissioners within the time specified in the thirteenth section of the act of the 3d of March, 1851, but who have failed to present to the said board the evidence of their derivative title to said interest or portion from the original grantee, be, and they are hereby, authorized to present the same; and the said commissioners are hereby directed to adjudicate the said interest or portion in the same manner as if it had been presented within the time originally proscribed by the aforesaid act of the 3d of March, 1851, entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California."

Sec. 9. And be it further enacted, That the first provide to the first section of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation to such persons as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury to receive and keep the public money, under the fifteenth section of the act of 6th August, 1846, for the additional services required under that act," approved March 2, 1853, shall not be construed to apply to the collector of the district of Buffalo Creek, while such collector shall be one of the designated depositors of public moneys.

Sec. 10. And be it further enacted, That the accounts of the public printers, and the certificates of the Superintendent of Public Printing thereon, so far as the same relate to the printing for the Executive Departments, shall be subject to the examination and control of the accounting officers and Secretary of the Treasury in like manner as other public accounts; and those which relate to the printing for the Senate and House of Representatives shall be subject to the examination and control of the respective Houses in like manner as other expenditures for said Houses.

Mr. BADGER. The next amendment, printed among the amendments coming from the Committee on Finance, I am authorized by the committee to move. It was agreed to by them, on my suggestion. I therefore, in order that it may be understood, have included it here, and now ask that it may be read; and then I shall make a word of explanation upon it.

The amendment was to add two additional sections, as follows:

Sec. 11. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint or employ, in his official household, the following officers, to wit: One private secretary, at a yearly salary of $2,500; one clerk, at a yearly salary of $1,600; one steward, at a yearly salary of $1,000, who shall, under the direction of the President, have charge of, and be responsible for, the plate and furniture of the President's mansion, and shall discharge such other duties as the President may assign him; one messenger, at a yearly salary of $900; and one assistant messenger, at a yearly salary of $750. And for the payment of the compensation of the said officers during the present fiscal year, the sum of $6,750, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. 12. And be it further enacted, That a yearly appropriation be made for the purchase of stationery, binding public documents, and other contingent expenses of the Executive office, to be expended by the private secretary, under the direction of the President; and for that purpose, during the present fiscal year, $650 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. BADGER. I hope the Senate will excuse me for making a very brief statement in regard to this amendment. I have long been impressed with the propriety and necessity of making some provision like what has just been read in regard to the President's official household. As things stand at present, the President has but one secretary—his private secretary—and he is a mere private employee of his, and indeed, he has no means for compensating him except out of his own pocket, or by putting him in the discharge of the office of clerk to sign patents. Whatever may have been the state of things at the commencement of this Government, it is beyond all doubt that the duties required of the office of President of the United States requires some efficient clerical assistance. I know, Mr. President, it was so as far back as the time when I had the honor of a seat in the Cabinet; and every Senator must know that if it was necessary then, it is necessary now. I have considered it rather discreditable that the President of the United States should have neither a secretary or clerk furnished to him by the Government for the purpose of aiding him in the performance of the work essential to the transaction of the public business. Therefore I have proposed, by the amendment, to allow him a private secretary and a clerk.

In the next place I propose to allow him a steward to his household to take the superintendence and charge of the plate, furniture, and other public property of the mansion. I shall give a distinct reason why it seems to me it is very clear that such a provision should be made. We are in the habit every four years of appropriating large sums of money for furnishing and refurnishing the President's House. It cannot be expected that the President of the United States himself is to take the superintendence and charge of this public furniture. The persons whom he employs for ordinary domestic services have enough to do to attend to the ordinary services of his private household; and besides, sir, the man who should take charge of that property ought to be a person of a different grade from those who can be obtained for ordinary employment at fifteen or twenty dollars a month. I mention this fact in illustration of the waste and dilapidation that takes place in the public property in the President's Mansion. I recollect well, when General Harrison was elected President, the first thing he had to order, after he entered the White House as President, was a bed; because there were not enough there to accommodate his family. It seems to me clear that if it is proper for Congress, if it is right, as undoubtedly it is, to make appropriations for this furniture, it is a measure of reasonable precaution and just economy to have an officer there in charge of it, and to superintend the delivery of this public property from the outgoing President into the hands of the official representative of his successor.

I then propose to allow the President a messenger. He has now nobody to act in that capacity. Every head of a Department has a messenger, every head of a bureau has a messenger, and it is known to every gentleman who has business with the Executive departments, that in the ordinary transactions between the President and the Departments, valuable and important public papers have to be sent forwards and backwards, for which purpose, as far as the President is concerned, he has no person.

Then, sir, the amendment embraces another provision, the propriety of which is apparent. It is a small appropriation of $650 for the binding of public documents, for stationery, and other contingent expenses of the President's office. Now, sir, at this time, and up to this time, the President of the United States, for any purpose, is not furnished with the ordinary stationery which he uses. He receives it—how? By contributions made from the different Departments, or from one of the Departments, which I do not think is a respectable and creditable manner of supplying the Chief Magistrate of the country with the stationery which he uses. Why should not the President of the United States have it? I hope there will be no objection to the amendment which I take pleasure in offering, as it comes with more propriety from one belonging to another party than that to which the President belongs.

Mr. PRATT. It seems to me that this amendment will incur the President with too many officers and servants. On one page of the bill I find two door-keepers provided for him. Then there is another officer appointed to make fires, and on some other page two other officers are appointed besides those which I have mentioned. Then the amendment which the Senator proposes is to oblige the President to appoint others.

Mr. BADGER. The President is not obliged to appoint them at all.

Mr. PRATT. It will incur him with too many officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WELLER in the chair.) If there be no proposition to amend the section reported from the committee, the Secretary will proceed to read the next amendment.

The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the authority given by the eleventh section of the act approved March 3, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," to the treasurer of the assay office in New York to issue his certificate of the net value of any bullion or coins deposited in said office is hereby suspended, and shall not be exercised except at such time or times, and during such periods as the Secretary of the Treasury shall be of opinion that the interests of the public, or of those making such deposits, or the condition of the Treasury, render it expedient or convenient to issue such certificates. And whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem it expedient, he may authorize the issuing of the said certificates. The receipts directed by the aforesaid section to be given by the treasurer of the assay office for any gold or silver bullion, in dust or otherwise, or for any foreign coin to be deposited in the said office, shall be payable at the option of the depositor, to be expended in the receipt either in coins of the same metal as that deposited (to be paid as soon as such bullion or coin can be assayed, or the value thereof ascertained either at the office of the Assistant Treasurer of the United States in New York, or at the Mint of the United States, as the depositor shall prefer) or in bars, discs, or ingots, either of pure metal or of the standard fineness, or made from the identical metal deposited without refining—but in all cases such bars, discs, or ingots shall bear a stamp of such form and device as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, accurately designating their weight and fineness; and all gold or silver deposited in the assay office, either to be struck into coin at the Mint, or to be refined or assayed, shall be subject to the charges prescribed by law for such operations at the Mint or branch mints of the United States.

Mr. FISH. I move to amend that section by adding at the end of it the words "to none others." The main clause of that section is intended as explanatory. There was a doubt, under the existing laws, as to whether the coin deposited in the assay office is subject to the charges expressly excepted in the section. It is necessary to put these words in the section to make it clear.

Mr. HUNTER. I agree to that.

The next amendments were to insert the following, as additional sections:

Sec. 14. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the fifth section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854," and approved 3d March, 1853, be, and they are hereby, extended to the branch mints and the assay office in New York, respectively.

Sec. 15. And be it further enacted, That the said Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ private establishments, or to contract with individuals for refining gold bullion, if he shall deem it expedient so to do: Provided, always, That the said refining shall not subject the depositors to any greater wastage, per ounce, nor to any greater charge for labor, materials, and alloy, per ounce, than is now made, or would hereafter be incurred, on deposits at the Mint, the branch mints, or assay office in New York, respectively; and the said refining shall be subject to such regulations as the said Secretary shall deem proper and sufficient to secure the skillful and prompt performance thereof, and to prevent any loss of metal other than wastage, as aforesaid.

Mr. FISH. I desire to suggest some amendments to this fifteenth section. The first is a verbal one, the necessity of which, I think, will be apparent. It is to make it read "the Secretary of the Treasury," instead of the "said Secretary."

Mr. HUNTER. That is right.

Mr. FISH. Then the next amendment is to strike out the words "per ounce," and insert "or for other cause."

Mr. HUNTER. That is right.

Mr. FISH. Then the next amendment is after the word "respectively" to insert "nor to any greater delay than is now experienced." So that the proviso shall read:

Provided always, That the said refining shall not subject the depositors to any greater wastage per ounce, nor

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

to any greater charge for labor, materials, and alloy, or for other cause, than is now made, or would hereafter be incurred, on deposits at the Mint, the branch Mints, or assay office in New York, respectively, nor to any greater delay than is now experienced; and that said refining shall be subject to such regulations as the said Secretary shall deem proper and sufficient to secure the skillful and prompt performance thereof, and to prevent any loss of metal other than wastage, as aforesaid.

Mr. HUNTER. I have no objection to that. The next amendment was to insert the following as an additional section:

Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That the said Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized, at his discretion, to cause advances to be withheld on deposits of gold bullion, made after the first day of January next, at the Mint, the branch Mints, and the assay office in New York, respectively, unless such deposits be metal of standard fineness, and suitable for coinage without any further refining; and upon the coinage of such deposits so refined by private enterprise, and suitable for that purpose, the Secretary of the Treasury, at his discretion, may charge a seigniorage of not more than one half per centum, nor less than one fourth per centum, upon the value thereof.

Mr. FISH. The same alteration should be made there that was made in the former one: "Secretary of the Treasury" instead of "said Secretary."

Mr. HUNTER. I agree to that. I believe all the printed amendments have now been disposed of. I have been directed by the Committee on Finance to offer several additional amendments, which I will send to the Secretary.

The first was to strike out the words:

For compensation of the officers and clerks of both Houses of Congress, $56,730," and insert:

For compensation of the officers, clerks, and messengers, and others receiving an annual salary, in the service of the Senate, $57,010.

For compensation of the officers and clerks of the House of Representatives, $34,460.

The next was in the clause "for books, $2,000," to strike out "two," and insert "ten."

The next was in the clause, "for stationery, $8,000;" strike out "eight," and insert "fifteen."

The next was in the clause, "for newspapers, $2,000," to make it "$2,600."

The next was in the clause "for Congressional Globe, and binding the same, $3,000;" to strike out "$3,000," and insert "$65,000."

The next was in the clause "for reporting proceedings, $25,000;" to strike out "$25,000," and insert "$13,000."

The next was to strike out:

For clerks to committees and President pro tempore, draughtsmen, messengers, pages, laborers, police, horses, and carriages, $43,000.

—and insert:

For clerks to committees, pages, police, horses, and carriages, $30,000.

The next was in the clause "for Capitol police, $3,500," so as to make it read, $3,560."

The next was to insert:

For compensation of the surveyor of Washington Territory, and the clerks in his office, $7,500.

The next was in the appropriation "for compensation of temporary clerks in the Post Office Department," to strike out "$37,350," and insert "$50,000."

The next was to insert:

For rebuilding portions of walls, and complete repairs of the building of the branch mint at New Orleans, $55,000.

The next was in the clause "for compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly" of the Territory of Minnesota, to strike out "$20,000," and insert "$30,000."

The next was in the following clause, to strike out "ten" and insert "six of the," and strike out "$10,800," and insert "$60,000."

For salaries of ten additional clerks, authorized by the acts of August 6, 1846, August 12, 1848, March 3, 1851, and August 31, 1852, $10,800.

Mr. HUNTER. In connection with that we find it necessary to increase the number of clerks, and therefore propose the following as an additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 30th of June, 1854, in lieu of the clerks heretofore authorized by law for the office of assistant treasurer at New York, he be authorized to appoint, with the approbation of the President, a chief clerk at a salary of $2,100; one clerk at $2,000; two clerks at $1,800 each; two clerks at $1,500 each; one clerk at $1,200; one messenger at $900; and two watchmen at $550 each per annum. In the case of the sickness or inevitable absence from his office of the assistant treasurer, he may authorize the said chief clerk to act in his place, and to discharge the duties required by law of the assistant treasurer; and in case of the death, resignation, or inability to act of the assistant treasurer, the said chief clerk shall act as such assistant treasurer until the inability be removed, or said successor be appointed and duly qualified; and all acts of the said chief clerk, in such case, shall be as valid as if performed by the assistant treasurer in person.

The next was to strike out:

For salary of chief clerk to the assistant treasurer at New York, $1,600.

—and insert:

For clerks, messengers, and watchmen in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York, $13,900.

The next was to strike out "$30,500" out of the following clause, and insert "$43,900."

For the annual repairs and fixtures of custom houses of the United States, $30,501 59, and for alterations and repairs of the custom-house at Baltimore, heretofore made, and for rent of rooms during the repairs of said building, such sum as may be the Secretary of the Treasury be deemed reasonable and proper of said amount, not to exceed $5,501 59.

The next was to insert:

For building for the use of the United States courts at Pontotoc, Mississippi, $4,000

The next was to amend the following clause:

For salaries of fifteen keepers and twelve assistants in light-houses on the coast of California and Oregon, at an average not exceeding $600 per annum, $16,200—by striking out all after the word "exceeding," and inserting "$800 per annum each, $21,600."

The next amendment was to insert:

For completing light houses on the coast of California and Oregon, the sum of $59,434: Provided, That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the contractors for building the light-house at Point Roman, near Santiago, what the same is reasonably worth.

The next was to insert:

For outfit of the commissioner to the Sandwich Islands, $2,500.

The next was to insert:

To enable the Secretary of State to defray the expenses of releasing from captivity among the Indians of Queen Charlotte's Island, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $2,500.

To enable the Secretary of State to reimburse to Edward Riddle such sums as shall be satisfactorily proved to have been expended by him, or to which said Riddle may have obligated himself on account of his official position at the industrial exhibition at London, England, or so much thereof as shall be necessary, $26,000: Provided, That no portion of the payment made pro rata by contributors at said exhibition shall be regarded as within this appropriation.

The next was to insert:

For salaries of registers and receivers in Oregon and Washington Territories, or so much thereof as may be necessary from the act of 17th of July, 1854, $9,000.

For office rent, fuel, and labor in said office, $4,000.

For iron safe for receiver's books, stationary and furniture, $3,000.

The next was to insert:

For surveying standard, parallel, and meridian lines in Washington Territory, an estimated distance of five hundred miles, $10,000.

The next was to insert:

For office rent of the surveyor general of Washington Territory, fuel, books, stationary, and other incidental expenses, $5,000.

The next was to insert the words "of the House of Representatives" after the word "resolution" in the following clause:

For compensation to draughtsmen and clerks employed upon the maps of the public lands, under the resolution of 4th May, 1848, $7,500.

The next was to insert:

For arrearages of necessary traveling and personal expenses due the employees of the northeastern boundary survey during the years 1844, 1845, 1846, and 1847, $2,016.

The next was to insert the following additional section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That so much of the act of the 7th of June, 1844, restricting the employment of inspectors, gaugers, weighers, measurers, and markers in custom-houses to the number then in the service, as may be applicable to those employed in the ports of New York and New Orleans, be, and the same is, hereby repealed.

The next was to insert the following section:

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 13th of June, 1853, the annual salary of the chaplains to Congress shall be $750, and such sum additional to that elsewhere provided, as may be required to pay the same to the 30th of June, 1855, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The next was to add the following as an additional section:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a commissioner, at a compensation not exceeding $4,000 per annum, to ascertain the nature, character, extent, and value of all valid claims arising in Washington and Oregon Territories, under the treaty with Great Britain of the 15th of June, 1846; and should said claims, or any part thereof, be deemed of sufficient public and political importance to justify or require the measure, the President is hereby authorized to direct said commissioner to agree with the claimants and the Hudson Bay Company for the relinquishment of their claims on a just and fair valuation, and to pay over the amount so agreed upon on a full and entire surrender and relinquishment of all rights, title, claim, interest, and demand therein and thereto to the United States: Provided, That none of the land acquired under this section shall be subject to preemption, but shall be sold at public auction, unless in cases where, in the opinion of the commissioner, the sum paid for any particular parcel or piece shall be less than a fair price therefor, to be ascertained by the commissioner aforesaid, said sales to be made for cash, and at such times and places, and with such postponement as may be directed by said commissioner; and for carrying into effect the provisions of this act, in case of purchase, a sum not exceeding $300,000 is hereby appropriated: Provided, That the amount to be paid for all said claims, right, and interest shall not exceed the sum herein appropriated; and for defraying the expenses of the commissioner, the further sum of ——— dollars is hereby appropriated, payable out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Sec. —. And be it further enacted, That in case it should be deemed expedient to sell said lands and improvements made, or any part thereof, the President shall be, and he is hereby, authorized, on the extinguishment of the title as aforesaid, to direct the commissioner to take possession of the same for and in the name of the United States, and to lease the same on the terms and conditions, and for such sum as he may deem proper and right, subject, however, to sale, when, in his opinion, it may be proper, after the United States surveys have been extended over the same.

Mr. WELLER. I ask that it may lie over. It will require explanation, in my judgment, before it can be adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. This amendment is reported on the recommendation of the Secretary of State. He had it prepared and sent it down to us. With it there were voluminous papers for the purpose of showing that there was a necessity to act at once. The Hudson Bay Company and the Puget's Sound Company have certain rights under the Ashburton treaty. They are coming into conflict with the rights of our Government, and the people to some extent; and it is supposed that now is a favorable time for closing the matter, and to purchase out their rights. There is a limit in the section that it shall not exceed $300,000. It used to be a demand for something like a million. There is a statement in the papers which will be found accompanying this item, of claims set up by the company, and the Secretary of State thought it was desirable that the appropriation should be made and authority given at once to treat with them, and in that I believe the Committee on Finance unanimously concurred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California insist on his objection?

Mr. WELLER. I do not desire to interpose objection to the action of the Senate upon it, but it is a very important matter, and it is the first time I have received any information that it was proposed to act upon that subject at this session of Congress. The amendment had better go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over.

Mr. HUNTER. I have now offered all the amendments from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRODHEAD. Before the Senator from Virginia concludes, I desire to have some explanation in respect to the Riddle amendment, appropriating twenty odd thousand dollars for the expenses of his visit to the London Exhibition. I want that amendment excepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be passed over. The Chair wishes to say that there is an amendment, reported from the Committee on Finance, which was passed over at the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa, commonly called the Washington city water amendment. That now comes up for the consideration of the Senate.

Mr. HAMLIN. I understand that the Senator from Virginia did not desire to press a vote to-day on the contested amendments.

Mr. HUNTER. I am willing, if it is the sense of the Senate, to let all the controverted amendments be passed by for the present, and go on with those about which there is no dispute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If that is the sense of the Senate, that course will be pursued, and the amendments excepted will not be acted upon until they are subsequently called up.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Is it in order for me to move an amendment to the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I wish, then, to move an amendment to the fourth section, so that it shall read:

That the captain of police of the Capitol shall receive the same compensation that is now paid to the postmaster of the Senate; and to each of his assistants the same compensation as is paid to the messengers attending at the principal doors of the Senate.

It is known that the special committee reported some time since a resolution in regard to the officers of the Senate, which the Senate adopted almost unanimously. The object of my amendment is to give to the captain of the Capitol police precisely the same pay which that resolution gives to the Senate's postmaster, which is $1,750; and to each of his assistants the sum that is paid to the messengers at the door of the Senate. I ask the Senate to consider the relative duties of the two. Some of the police of the Capitol are required to be about at all times, in charge of all the valuable property of the Senate. I trust there will be no objection to giving them an increase of salary.

Mr. CASS. How much do they receive at present?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I answer that the assistant police receive $1,300 per annum. The messengers at our doors receive $1,500. My proposition is to give to the police, who are on duty day and night, whether it is fair or stormy, the sum that we give to the men who stand at the doors.

Mr. PRATT. How many of them are there?

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Four.

Mr. TOOMBS. It would be very well to inquire whether the pursuing of this course is not a little unreasonable. The argument here appears to be, that because the salaries of some have been raised, we should take the others up. Now, sir, I know very well that all these employees, in both Houses, get more than the Representatives of the people do; and the compensation of all of them is exceedingly liberal, not to say exorbitant.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to offer the following amendment:

For revision of the revenue laws already made, and the report showing the changes and alterations therein, $5,000.

That is according to the estimate of the Treasury Department. Ten thousand dollars were originally appropriated. By a mistake of the engrossing clerks it failed to go into the bill. The Senate passed a bill at this session, appropriating $10,000. We sent it to the House, and they struck out $5,000. The Senate concurred. The Secretary has now sent in the revenue laws, but he has not furnished a statement of what the revision consists in. This is to enable him to carry out the original proposition, and it was estimated for by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose further to amend, by striking out the words, "for the salary of the Consul at Beirut, $500," and insert—

That the consul at Beirut, Syria, is hereby created a consul general with a salary of $2,000 per annum from the 1st of July, 1853. The said consulate shall comprehend both Syria and Palestine, and $4,000 is hereby appropriated for the salary of the said consul.

That is in accordance with the recommendation and estimate of the Secretary of State. I have it here by me. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Cass] knows very well what the duties of the consul there are. He is clothed with judicial as well as consular powers. The amendment proposes to give him the title of consul general for social and political reasons. It is recommended by the Department. The Senate passed a bill last year to that effect, and it was then recommended by the Secretary of State, and has been so for the last four years.

Mr. HUNTER. I think that amendment had better go over.

It was passed over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am also directed to offer the following amendment:

For life-boats and other means of rendering services to shipwrecked mariners and others on the coast of the United States, to be expended by the Massachusetts Humane Society, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $10,000.

Mr. PRATT. Let that lie over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am also directed to move to amend the clause "for the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, $125,000," by inserting after the word "seamen" the words "and seamen belonging to American vessels."

Mr. TOOMBS. Let that lie over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I also propose the following additional section.

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the county of El Paso, in the State of Texas, and the Territory of New Mexico, be, and they are hereby, made a collection district by the name of Paso del Norte, and Frontera shall be the place or port of delivery in said district; and a collector shall be appointed to reside thereat, with such other officers as shall be necessary, and the compensation of the collector shall be $2,000 per annum, including the fees of his office.

Mr. WELLER. That had better go over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I desire to make a single explanation in regard to it, and I think when I make it there will be no objection to it. There is a necessity for it which will, I think, induce every Senator to give his assent to it. There is no revenue officer in New Mexico, and it is in evidence before the committee that there are from $100,000 to $300,000 of Mexican goods annually imported into that Territory from the road through El Paso, in a corner of Texas, that being the point through which the road passes. The Senate has passed a bill, and it has gone to the House, creating a district according to the terms of this section. There is no prospect, probably, that the House will reach it at this session, and it now resolves itself into a question of economy whether we will place a revenue officer there who will collect $30,000 or $40,000 a year, or leave it subject to no revenue laws.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to it. The people there are in a God-forsaken country anyhow, and I am perfectly willing that they should take these goods.

Mr. PEARCE. The Committee on the Library have directed me to move to amend the bill by inserting:

To enable the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to replace the seventh volume and atlas of the exploring expedition, destroyed by the burning of the library, and the plates and other property destroyed by fire in Philadelphia, including the binding, $9,002 75.

Mr. GWIN. Let that go over.

Mr. PEARCE. If the Senator will allow me to make a brief statement, I think he will not object to it. We have lost, by the burning of the library, twenty-three copies of this seventh volume, and of course we have imperfect sets. All the plates have been destroyed by fire in Philadelphia, and a number of the charts have been also destroyed. We desire to have them replaced, and this amendment proposes to make an appropriation which will replace them.

Mr. GWIN. I should prefer to have it go over.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the amendments embraced in the eleventh and twelfth sections may go over.

Mr. BRODHEAD. What is the subject-matter of them?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. They give additional officers or servants to the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that these amendments were offered from the Finance Committee, and were not objected to, but were agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. WELLER. I apprehend the Senator can demand a vote upon them when we get into the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announced at the time that if they were not objected to, without any question being taken upon them, they would be considered as agreed to.

Mr. WELLER. We are now in committee, and I suppose when the amendments are reported to the Senate, the Senator from Tennessee can demand a vote upon them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. This is a very short-hand way of disposing of the appropriation bills. We generally go into committee upon them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I will make the motion to reconsider the vote by which they were agreed to, if I can. I think it is proper to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. GEYER. I move to amend the following proviso in the bill:

"Provided, That none of the moneys, appropriated by this act for any custom-house or marine hospital, shall be used or applied for the purpose mentioned until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State in which such building is to be completed shall in due form, and in a manner that shall bind such State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building."

By striking out the words, "and until the State in which such building is to be completed, shall in due form, and in a manner that shall bind such State, release and surrender to the United States jurisdiction over the site of such building."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEYER. I move the same amendment to the clause in relation to the custom-house at Richmond, Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I propose to amend the bill by inserting the following:

For rebuilding the custom-house at Portland, Maine, including accommodations for a post office and rooms for the United States courts, $200,000.

That has been estimated for by the Department, and has passed the Senate. It was omitted in the other House by mistake.

Mr. HUNTER. I can only say, in regard to these new custom-houses, that they met with great difficulty in this appropriation bill, in the other House; and I feel it my duty, at least so far I can, to resist the additional appropriation for custom-houses upon it. Those that have been commenced, and are partly completed, of course must be carried out; but this is not one of that class.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is to rebuild the custom-house which has been burnt. There has been an appropriation for it. It certainly comes within the same class as those which are to be completed.

Mr. HUNTER. No appropriation for rebuilding it has ever been made.

Mr. HAMLIN. It passed the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. Not the House.

Mr. HAMLIN. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. Then it does not come in the class of those for which appropriations have been made.

Mr. HAMLIN. There has been a building there sanctioned by law for this very purpose, and this appropriation is to restore that building which has been burned down. It would have passed the House but for a mistake, it not being offered at the proper time. I have an amendment including a variety of new custom-houses to offer. I supposed the Senator would oppose that, but I did not suppose that he would resist this. It is recommended unanimously by the Committee on Commerce, and is estimated for and recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. CASS. I do not see why, if we have the proper estimate for this, it should not be inserted here. I observe one provision in the bill providing for the purchase of a tract of land. Why, then, should we be precluded from putting in such a case as this?

Mr. HUNTER. There has been a previous appropriation for that, but it was not sufficient to complete it.

Mr. CASS. In some way the previous appropriation went into the appropriation bill. Now, why should we stop with this matter? I do not see any reason in the world for it. The simple question is, whether the appropriation is correct; and we should act upon it without reference to the preceding appropriations. I know myself there are many places in the country where custom-houses should be erected. It does not require an elaborate determination; but if it is fortified by a report from the Treasury Department, stating its necessity, I would put it in; if not, I would not put it in.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I trust the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his objection to this amendment. This matter came up upon the deficiency bill, and was debated, and was voted to that bill as an amendment, by a very large majority. The Senator then stated that he should have objected, but he yielded to the necessity of the case. Here is a building burnt. Within it was the custom-house and the court-house, and by its burning all these various departments of the Government in Portland have been turned out of doors. Under such circumstances, the Senate put the appropriation in the deficiency bill by a large majority.

I do not see, now, very well, how the Senator can say that this ought not to go into this appropriation bill. We have lost one year, and if it is not put in here, we shall lose another, before the appropriation can be made. Now, sir, under these circumstances, the technical objection which the Senator from Virginia makes, strikes me as really unkind. It is true that there has been no particular appropriation to rebuild the custom-house, yet it is a work authorized by law. A law has been passed heretofore, making an appropriation to build the custom-house, but it has been burned down, and it is a recognized matter; and certainly an appropriation in this bill to rebuild it is not objectionable. There is not a similar case in the whole country; and when the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended it, and sent us the estimate, and the Committee on Commerce have unanimously recommended it, I hope the amendment will be sustained, and that no Senator will object to it.

Now, under these circumstances, will not the Senator from Virginia, and all other Senators, after making such liberal appropriation for almost every object that can be mentioned—certainly without any objection on our part—allow us to have a building at some time or other, and to begin it within a reasonable time, so that the objects of the Government in our city can be accomplished?

Mr. HAMLIN. I find, on looking at the bill as it came to us from the House, that it contains an appropriation for the purchase of a site for a custom-house at San Francisco. That is all very well. It meets my approbation, and will receive my vote. I find, also, that the Committee on Finance have recommended an appropriation to build a custom-house on that site. Now, I appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Finance why we, when we now own the site on which to erect this building, should not stand as well as the people at San Francisco, when there is an appropriation in the bill to buy a site there, and that is followed up by the Finance Committee with an appropriation to erect a building. I think the Senator ought, at least, to be willing, when we own the site, that we should stand on quite as good terms as if we had an appropriation in the bill to buy one.

Mr. HUNTER. The San Francisco case stands on a little different footing, for there was a previous appropriation. I perceive, however, that this amendment does stand on a somewhat different ground from what I supposed, as it is to replace a building which has been burnt down.

Mr. WELLER. I do not see that there can be any objection whatever to this amendment. It is either necessary to have a collection district at this place, or it is not. If it is necessary to have a collection district, we must have a custom-house there, and if we have not got a custom-house there, we must build one. If there be no revenues collected there, and be no necessity for a collection district, let us repeal the law establishing it. So long as we have customs received there, we must have a building. If the old building has been burnt down, we should build a new one. This seems to me to be very clear. It is a matter of no sort of importance to me whether this be a new appropriation or an old one. The only question is, whether it is necessary to have a building there in order to transact the business of the Government. If it is necessary, I am willing to vote whatever amount will accomplish that object.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw my objection. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am further directed by the Committee on Commerce to offer an amendment, to come in after the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a custom-house at Providence, Rhode Island. The amendment is to insert:

And the Secretary of the Treasury shall be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for the construction of a custom-house on said site, to include accommodations for a post office and United States court room, at a cost not exceeding $200,000.

The bill now contains an appropriation for the purchase of a site at Providence, but it confers no authority upon the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a building. The amendment gives that authority, and it is limited within the estimates furnished by the Treasury Department, which I have by me.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. By direction of the same committee, I now offer an amendment, containing two additional sections, which contain provisions for the erection of new custom-houses in a variety of places all over the Union. The amendment is to add the following additional sections:

SEC. — Be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be constructed the following buildings:

At Ellsworth, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of brick with fire-proof floors, constructed of iron beams and brick work, iron roof, shutters, sills, &c., twenty-five feet by thirty, and twenty-five feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $10,000.

At Belfast, Maine, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of like materials, forty-five feet by thirty-two and thirty-two feet high, and to cost not more than $20,000.

At Gloucester, Massachusetts; Toledo, Ohio; Burlington, Vermont, and Sandusky, Ohio, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of like materials, sixty feet by forty-five feet and thirty-two feet from the foundation, and to cost not more than $40,000 for each building.

At Milwaukee, Wisconsin, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of like materials, sixty feet by forty-five feet, forty-eight feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $30,000.

At New Haven, Connecticut; Newark, New Jersey; Buffalo, New York; Oswego, New York; Wheeling, Virginia; Chicago, Illinois; and Detroit, Michigan, each for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, United States courts, and steamboat inspectors, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roofs, shutters, &c., eighty-five feet by sixty feet, sixty feet in height from the foundation, to cost not more than $68,000 for each building. The building at Detroit to be erected upon a water lot belonging to the United States.

At Galveston, Texas, for the accommodation of the custom-house, post office, and United States courts, a building of brick, of like floors, beams, roof, shutters, &c., forty-five feet, by seventy feet, forty-eight feet high from the foundation, with a portico on two sides, and to cost not more than $100,000.

At Petersburg, Virginia, for the accommodation of the custom-house and post office, a building of stone, of like floors, beams, roof, shutters, &c., sixty feet by forty-five feet, thirty-two feet high from the foundation, to cost not more than $62,000.

SEC. — And be it further enacted, That the several sums mentioned in the preceding section of this act, as the cost of the buildings therein authorized to be constructed, together with ten per cent. thereon, to cover the compensation of architects, superintendents, advertising, and other contingent expenses, and so much as may be required to purchase suitable sites for said buildings, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be used or applied for the purposes mentioned, until a valid title to the land for the site of such building, in each case, shall be vested in the United States, and until the State shall also duly release and relinquish to the United States the right to tax, or in any way assess said site, or the property of the United States that may be thereon, during the time that the said United States shall be or remain the owner thereof.

Mr. HUNTER objected to the consideration of the amendment.

Mr. PEARCE. It is evident that we cannot consider such a large amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the amendment already stands over on an objection interposed by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PEARCE. Then the hour of three o'clock having almost arrived, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withdraw the motion for a moment, to allow the Chair to present a message from the President of the United States?

Mr. PEARCE. Certainly.

CAPE FEAR RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate of the United States:

I have this day given my signature to the act making further appropriation for the improvement of the Cape Fear river, North Carolina. The occasion seems to render it proper for me to deviate from the ordinary course, of announcing the approval of bills by an oral statement only; and, for the purpose of preventing any misapprehension which might otherwise arise from the phraseology of this act, to communicate in writing, that my approval is given to it on the ground that the obstructions which the proposed appropriation is intended to remove, are the result of acts of the General Government. FRANKLIN PIERCE.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 22, 1854.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER appointed the following members as the select committee to investigate the charges made against the honorable THOMAS H. BAYLY: MESSRS. WITTE, of Pennsylvania; SMITH MILLER, of Indiana; HILL, of Kentucky; SHOWER, of Maryland; WALLEY, of Massachusetts; JOHNSON, of Ohio; and ROGERS, of North Carolina.

LAWS OF OREGON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Territory of Oregon, transmitting the Journals and laws of the Legislative Assembly of that Territory; which, with the accompanying documents, was referred to the Committee on Territories.

REFERENCE OF A SENATE RESOLUTION.

Mr. SOLLERS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up a Senate joint resolution for the purpose of having it referred.

There being no objection, Senate joint resolution "in relation to surgeons' mates of the Army of the Revolution, was taken from the table, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. EDGERTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report from the Committee of Claims sundry Senate bills. The committee report them with a recommendation that they do not pass. I ask that they may be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the reports, printed.

There was no objection, and Senate bills of the following titles were reported from the Committee of Claims:

No. 52. An act for the relief of Mary E. D. Blancy, widow of the late Major George Blancy;

No. 176. An act for the relief of John P. McDermerry;

No. 279. An act for the relief of Hezekiah Miller;

No. 165. An act for the relief of Lieutenant A. G. Williamson;

No. 109. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Loomis, deceased;

No. 369. An act for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Colonel John Anderson; and

No. 290. An act for the relief of Rufus Van Brunt.

Mr. EDGERTON. My motion is, that they be referred to a Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that they do not pass.

Mr. JONES, of New York. Will it not be better to have them laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed? It seems to me that that is the proper course, and that it will be much better than to lumber up our Calendar in Committee of the Whole with them.

The SPEAKER. It will be for the House to decide.

Mr. JONES. I move, then, that the bills do lie upon the table, and, with the reports, be printed.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would be very much obliged to the gentleman from New York if he would withdraw his motion, and allow the bills to take the direction recommended by the committee. In some of these cases there has been a difference of principle between the Committee of Claims in the House and the Committee of Claims in the Senate, and it is but fair to the claimants that the matters should be discussed in Committee of the Whole. It seems to me, therefore, a matter of propriety that these bills should take the course recommended by the Committee of Claims.

Mr. JONES. The statement of the chairman of the Committee of Claims makes the case all the stronger. I am willing to abide by the decision of the House committee; and I therefore adhere to my motion.

The question was taken; and the motion to lay upon the table was not agreed to.

The bills were then referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the reports, ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDGERTON, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on the following cases; which were ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed:

Memorial of Christopher Gill, for compensation for personal damages while on service in the Congressional Library;

Petition of John Robinson;

Petition of Edward H. Herbert, asking payment of a balance claimed for timber delivered to the United States;

Petition of William Brown, for pension and compensation for losses sustained in the war of 1812;

Petition of Captain Henry Eagle, for the return to him of certain money stolen from him which he paid into the United States Treasury, and since retained by the Government out of the pay of the thief;

Petition of James Van Horn; and Petition of Robert Lanham, for bounty land and compensation for losses in the Florida war.

FAVORABLE REPORTS.

Mr. EDGERTON, from the same committee, reported back bills and a resolution of the following titles, with the recommendation that they do pass; which were referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

S. No. 410. An act for the relief of James Dixon.

S. No. 342. An act for the relief of William Darby;

S. No. 274. An act for the relief of Levi Price and Andrew Hodge, jr.;

S. No. 278. An act for the relief of Henry La Reintrie;

S. No. 362. An act for the relief of Asa Andrews;

S. No. 193. An act to provide compensation for the services of George Morrell in adjusting titles to land in Michigan; and House resolution for the relief of James W. Nye.

Mr. E. also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Mr. G. Smith; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

THE FLEURIAN CLAIM.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. There is in the Committee of the Whole, Senate bill (No. 103) "confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Fleurian claim," which I desire to get before the House, in order that it may be put on its passage. I believe that I have never before asked to take up for consideration any bill out of its usual order, and I trust that I may now have the unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of that bill, so that it may be taken up and passed.

Mr. KERR. I make no objection to the gentleman's proposition, but I would like that he would yield me the floor to report back a bill from the Committee on the Judiciary, in order that it may be referred.

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. KERR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, by unanimous consent, reported back Senate bill (No. 239) entitled "An act for the relief of Sylvester Pettibone," with a recommendation that it do pass; said bill was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

TEMPERANCE IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. MAY. By the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, I ask the unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MAY. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to report adversely on the prayer of the New York Temperance Alliance in reference to the prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in Washington, and to move that the report be ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I move that the report on the memorial of the New York Alliance just made, be recommitted, with instructions to the committee to report a bill which shall clothe the city of Washington with express and ample powers to limit the traffic of intoxicating liquors at all places within its bounds; and on this motion I propose to make some remarks.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I did not yield the floor for any such purpose, and I do not think that the gentleman has any right to discuss this question now.

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to know what understanding has been made between gentlemen on the floor. The Chair does know that the gentleman from Tennessee yielded to the gentleman from Maryland, who, being regularly recognized, reported, by unanimous consent, adversely on the memorial which has been indicated. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] rose, and moved to recommit the report with instructions.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it in order to move instructions?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. HUNT. I ask my friend from New York, as a favor, to allow this claim to be considered now. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SMITH] had the floor, but, through his politeness and kindness, he has seemingly lost it. I hope, under such circumstances, and considering that this claim affects forty of my constituents in their possession of land, which they have held for ninety-nine years, that the gentleman from New York will accede to the first favor I have ever asked at his hands.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from New York may be postponed by unanimous consent, if it be the pleasure of the gentleman and the House.

Mr. SMITH. There may be some person at that time who would object. If I could have the floor on Monday or Tuesday, I am entirely willing to waive my right to it now. Although every person here may be in favor of my having the floor at this time, yet there may be persons present at some other time who would object to considering this matter.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, an arrangement may be made which will prove satisfactory to all parties. Is it the unanimous consent of the House that this proposition to recommit the report be postponed, and considered on the morning of Monday next?

Mr. FAULKNER. I would suggest Tuesday.

Mr. MAY. I wish to say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SMITH] yielded me the floor for the purpose of presenting that report. Having done so, I supposed it would be printed. The gentleman from Tennessee claims the floor, and he is entitled to it. If the fact that he consented to my presenting the report has embarrassed him in his right to a hearing and consideration of the bill which he proposes to consider, and it be competent for me now to withdraw the report, I beg leave to do so.

The SPEAKER. The report is in the possession of the House.

Mr. MAY. Can I not withdraw it by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can effect his object in that way.

Mr. MAY. I trust, then, the unanimous consent will be given, and opportunity afforded me at some other time to make the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state a proposition made by some gentleman upon the floor, that the motion to recommit the report be postponed until Monday or Tuesday of next week.

Mr. HOUSTON. To be considered in the morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It would come up at that time, if the unanimous consent of the House is given.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am against taking it out of the morning hour.

Mr. LETCHER. What is the report?

Mr. MAY. It is the report of the Judiciary Committee upon a subject about which the members of the committee have been importuned a good deal. The report relates to memorials of temperance societies praying an amendment of the city charter of Washington, so as to give that corporation power absolutely to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors. The Judiciary Committee have made an adverse report upon these memorials, upon the distinct ground that the present charter, as amended, confers such power.

Mr. HOUSTON. No one objects to the report of the gentleman from Maryland being withdrawn.

A MEMBER. I object.

The SPEAKER. There is objection made to it by a gentleman to the left of the Chair. The report is in the possession of the House, and a motion has been made to recommit it. It is not competent, therefore, for the gentleman from Maryland to withdraw his report, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. HENN. Is it in order for me now to move to reconsider the vote by which the report was received?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order if the gentleman from Iowa had got the floor for any such purpose. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] is on the floor to speak to his motion, and the Chair has decided that he is entitled to it.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SMITH] be entitled to the floor when this matter shall have been disposed of?

The SPEAKER. That will depend upon the gentleman from Tennessee himself, and be for the Speaker to determine. The gentleman has no right at all to the floor more than any other member.

Mr. ORR. I understand that the gentleman from Tennessee yielded the floor temporarily to the gentleman from Maryland, and is therefore entitled to it after the gentleman from Maryland has attained his object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee was recognized by the Chair. The gentleman from Maryland rose, and appealed to him to give way till he could make a report from his committee. The gentleman from Tennessee complied with the request. The report of the gentleman from Maryland was presented, and then the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] moved to recommit. That is the history of the matter; and the gentleman from New York, under the rules of the House, is entitled to the floor on his motion.

Mr. HUNT. If the honorable gentleman from New York will give way for five minutes this bill will be passed. It has received the unanimous approval of the Senate. There is nothing in it for disputation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inquire whether or not there be objection to the postponement of the further consideration of this motion to recommit.

Mr. HOUSTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH.]

Mr. EDGERTON. I rise to a question of order. My question of order is this: that this being private bill day, it requires a vote of two thirds of the House to consider any other business than private business.

The SPEAKER. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio is overruled, on the ground that, by unanimous consent, the report in question was presented to the House by the gentleman from Maryland. This sets aside all the rules of the body, and places the gentleman from New York on the floor to make his speech. This is the history of practice under the rule.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I suggest that the motion of the gentleman from New York be postponed by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) That has been objected to by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

Mr. WASHBURN. I mean that that motion be postponed until after the proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee shall have been disposed of. That matter will take but ten minutes for consideration; and the gentleman from New York will then have the right which he has now.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have objected to that motion; and when I object to a thing, I do not lightly withdraw such objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We have arrived at too late a period of the session to go into this discussion. I therefore propose that, with the unanimous consent of the House, the consideration of this report be postponed till the second Monday in December next.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent of the House that object can be accomplished. If the gentleman from New York yield the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] for any such motion, it will be in order to propose it.

Mr. SMITH. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. McMULLIN. Will the gentleman from New York allow me one moment to make a suggestion?

Mr. SMITH. I must decline assent. I would have been half through my speech by this time, and considering that I have risen to make the last speech that I shall ever make on the floor of Congress—as I leave my seat at the close of the session—I cannot think it altogether generous in the House to evince so much unwillingness to hear me.

Mr. S. then addressed the House at length on the subject of the temperance reform, and in favor of a prohibitory liquor law. His remarks are withheld for revision, and will be published in the Appendix.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I move to lay the report of the Judiciary Committee upon the table, and that it be printed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that it be laid upon the table absolutely. My object is to prevent debate upon the motion to print.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. MAX.] when he made the report from the Committee on the Judiciary, moved that it be printed.

Mr. ORR. If the instructions are laid upon the table, they will carry everything with them.

The report was then laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee, moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was laid upon the table, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

THE FLEURIAN CLAIM.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I now ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee of the Whole House may be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill (No. 103,) "to confirm a certain land claim in Louisiana, known as the Fleurian claim."

Mr. SKELTON. I would like to have the bill read for the information of the House.

The bill was then read through by the Clerk.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I can explain in a very few words the object of this bill. I promise to make no argument, but simply to state the facts upon which it is founded. It appears that, in 1744, Joseph Villers Dubreuil purchased a tract of land in the Province of Louisiana from the Indians, settled upon it, and in 1754 commenced its cultivation. In 1763 he presented his claim to the officers of the French Crown, then acting in the Province of Louisiana. His claim was admitted, his title was decreed to him, and thus the matter rested. It will be remembered that, in 1762, the Province of Louisiana was ceded to Spain by France, under the secret treaty of Fontainebleau, which was not made known until 1764, although, previously to that time, it had been actually transferred to Spain by the French Government. And hence their title, derived in this manner, has been regarded as invalid.

In 1772, however, the original claimant of these lands died. Spain had then taken possession of the Province of Louisiana. Her own officers were acting there. They had complete and full authority in reference to the subject-matter that had been acted upon by the officers of the French Government. This claim was not presented to them directly. But, after the death of the original claimant, it was ordered to be inventoried by the Spanish Governor as a part of the estate of Mr. Dubreuil. It was put up and sold by virtue of a decree of a court deriving its authority from the Spanish Crown, then holding the Province of Louisiana. It was sold, and Charles J. B. Fleurian became the purchaser. He held the land in his own right from that time until the period of his death, and it has now descended to his heirs.

It appears, however, that a portion of this land only was fit for cultivation, a large part of it being tremblants pueres—trembling prairie—a tract of land, the superficies of which is a kind of turf, while the substratum is bog or quagmire, rendering it unfit for cultivation. These claimants are the heirs, representatives, and vendees of Charles J. B. Fleurian. They derive title through him. They have leveed and drained this boggy portion of the land; and they have been cultivating and holding possession of it by themselves, and through their vendors and ancestors, for a period now of a hundred years.

I will remark, however, that the Supreme Court of the United States have decided that these land titles, which were confirmed by the officers of the French Government after the secret treaty of Fontainebleau in 1762, and before Spain had taken possession of the Province of Louisiana, are void, even though the claimants retain possession of the lands. The Supreme Court decided that so far as the legal title of these lands is concerned, it is vested in the United States, because the titles to them were confirmed by officers acting under the authority of the French Crown while the Province really belonged to Spain. Therefore, it becomes necessary, in order to settle the title now in question, that this bill should be passed, so as to authorize the issuing of a patent to the present claimants. It does not conflict in any manner with the vested rights of any individual accruing before the passage of the bill. I therefore ask the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and under the operation of the previous question the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and having been read a third time, was passed.

Mr. SMITH. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. READY, by unanimous consent from the Committee of Claims, reported the following bills; which were read a first and second time by their title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed:

A bill for the relief of L. H. Lyon and Dean S. Howard, of the State of New York; and

An act supplementary to an act of 1816, entitled "An act for the purpose of relieving those whose property was destroyed by the enemy in the war of 1812."

Mr. McMULLIN. I call for the regular order of business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the consideration of certain private bills upon the table, which were reported by a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw my motion, if the bills have been reported from a Committee of the Whole House, and allow the House to proceed to their consideration.

The House then proceeded to dispose of the bills heretofore reported from a Committee of the Whole House.

House bill (No. 108) "for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased," reported with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was laid upon the table.

House bill (No. 182) "for the relief of Daniel Steenrod," reported with amendments.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the petition of Daniel Steenrod, with the accompanying documents and depositions, be referred to the Secretary of War; and he is hereby authorized and directed, in such mode as to him shall seem just and expedient, to appoint an umpire to bear evidence in the city of Wheeling, Virginia, and ascertain and fix what is justly and equitably due the said petitioner thereon; and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay such sum out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated by law.

First amendment:

Strike out the words "Secretary of War," and insert "Comptroller of the Treasury."

Second amendment:

Strike out all after the word "authorized," in the fourth line, and insert the following:

To appoint a commissioner to take evidence in the city of Wheeling, or elsewhere, and ascertain and report what is justly and equitably due to said petitioner thereon; and if such report is approved by the Comptroller, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to pay such sum of money out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That said commissioner shall be selected out of such persons now in the employment of the Government, for which service no extra compensation shall be paid.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The bill of the House (No. 195) "for the relief of Sarah K. Jenks, and the legal representatives of Hartshorne R. Thomas, in the matter of the brig Jane," coming up next in order, having been reported with a recommendation that it do not pass, was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. ORR moved that the bill do lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The following bills and joint resolution reported without amendments and with a recommendation that they do pass, were then severally taken up, read in extenso, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, were read a third time, and passed:

H. R. No. 189. A bill for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co.;

H. R. No. 190. A bill for the relief of William Hankins;

H. R. No. 196. A bill for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell;

H. R. No. 199. A bill for the relief of Thomas C. Greene;

H. R. No. 238. A bill for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia;

H. R. No. 241. A bill for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased; and

H. R. No. 5. A joint resolution directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, Maine.

Mr. ORR. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, in order that the amendments of the Senate to the Indian appropriation bill may be taken up and considered. These amendments should receive our prompt attention and action.

Mr. EDGERTON. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. COBB. That ought to be done, for there remain only three private bill days of this session.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable, and the Chair must insist on gentlemen preserving order. This being private bill day, the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar will be first put.

The question was taken; and Mr. EDGERTON's motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. HENDRICKS in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The bill first in order for consideration is House bill (No. 59) "for the relief of Samuel Colt."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that bill be informally passed over.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would suggest, to save time, that the committee commence with the Calendar where it left off on Saturday last.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this bill was passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It was passed over by vote of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is in order, I presume, to commence the consideration of the bills on the Calendar where the committee last left off. Unless we do this, the bills low down on the Calendar will get no attention at all. I move that we commence where we left off last Saturday.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the first bill in order. The Chair understands that it was only passed over for last Saturday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the committee that if we wish to make progress on the Calendar, we had better, by unanimous consent, consider this as objection day.

The suggestion was unanimously acquiesced in. The committee then proceeded to consider the bills in the order in which they stood upon the Calendar, when those bills which were objected to were passed over.

House bill (No. 103) "for the relief of Ferdinand Clark." [Objected to by Mr. SKELTON.]

House bill (No. 105) "for the relief of Wilson & Brothers, of St. Louis, in the State of Missouri." [Objected to by Mr. SKELTON.]

House bill (No. 239) "for the relief of Hiram Moore and John Hascall." [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

House bill (No. 240) "for the relief of Thomas S. J. Johnson, of the Territory of New Mexico." [Objected to by Mr. EDGERTON.]

Senate bill (No. 139) "for the relief of Charles Kellett."

This bill orders the refunding to Charles A. Kellett of certain moneys paid by him to the collector of New York as duties on the entry of the Chinese junk Key-ing.

The report of the Committee on Commerce was read. The committee adopt the report presented by Mr. Grinnell from the same committee at the first session of the Thirtieth Congress. This report assigns as a reason why the money paid for custom fees should be refunded to the claimant, that the junk Key-ing was not brought to this country for the purpose of commerce, but as an object of curiosity; and that the expenses far exceeded the receipts of the said junk; and cites as a precedent for the course, the case of a Greek vessel which had arrived at New York some years since.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. If I recollect aright that bill was passed upon last Saturday, and was, by a vote of the committee, ordered to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. EDGERTON. I would state to the gentleman from Indiana, that he is mistaken in regard to this bill. The question, when it was last before the committee, was, "Shall the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass?" The committee decided that question in the negative, which left the bill in the same position in which it had stood before.

Mr. DAVIS. I stand corrected. My impression was as I had stated.

Mr. JONES, of New York. I object to the bill.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

House bill (No. 246) "for the relief of the children and heirs of Major General Baron De Kalb." The bill was read.

It provides, that in consideration of the services and sacrifices of the late Major General Baron De Kalb in the Revolutionary war, the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to pay to his children and heirs, named in the petition, the sum of $90,513 61, the same being the amount now due, including interest from the year 1819, at which time the demand was presented for payment.

Mr. PECKHAM. In point of fact, the amount provided for in that bill is too large.

A MEMBER. Then object to it.

Mr. PECKHAM. When it is considered in committee, I shall propose to reduce the amount to what I think is actually due on that claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York propose to amend the bill?

Mr. PECKHAM. I suppose it is not in order to amend it now.

The CHAIRMAN. Then does the gentleman object?

Mr. PECKHAM. The bill is not right as it stands now; and I wish to amend it. I therefore object.

The bill was passed over.

Senate bill (No. 33) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. FULLER.]

House bill (No. 265) "for the relief of W. D. Porter, of the United States Navy."

The bill provides for the payment to Captain Porter of the moneys actually expended by him in defraying the expenses of bringing Amin Bey and suite to the United States, in conformity with the request of the United States Minister at Constantinople, such amount not to exceed $2,024 32, which sum is thereby appropriated for the purpose.

From the report, which was read, it appears that Lieutenant Porter, at Genoa, in the command of the United States storeship Erie, and about to return home, received a letter from the Hon.

George P. Marsh, minister resident of the United States at Constantinople, dated the 20th May, 1850, requesting him to receive Amin Bey, of the Turkish Navy, and his attendants, on board his ship, and give them a passage to the United States. The Minister stated that the visit of Amin Bey was made upon the suggestion of the American legation, and under the proffer of a free passage in a public ship of the United States, for the purpose of examining our navy-yards, docks, ships-of-war, and other public works connected with our military marine; and contained an assurance that, without doubt, the Government would reimburse any expense to which Lieutenant Porter might be subjected by their passage.

Upon the faith of this letter, Amin Bey and suite, together with Mr. John P. Brown, as dragoman of the legation at Constantinople, was received on board the Erie at Genoa, on the 5th July and landed at New York on the 13th September, 1850. On the 30th September Congress passed an act appropriating $10,000 for the expenses of the agent of the Sublime Porte, "to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State." Of this amount $4,051 81 was expended by the State Department, and the balance, to wit: $5,948 19, was transferred to the surplus fund, November 19, 1853. This mission having been regarded as of sufficient importance to the United States, by our Minister at the Turkish Court, to warrant his taking the responsibility of inviting it, and tendering a free passage in a public vessel, the appropriation made by Congress in two weeks after Amin Bey's arrival, to defray the expenses, must be regarded as an approval of the act of our Minister, and an adoption of his letter to Lieutenant Porter. The committee are satisfied from inquiry that the habits of Amin Bey and suite must have subjected Lieutenant Porter to expenses exceeding those of ordinary guests. The amount claimed by him for actual expenses incurred is $2,024 37, and the greater part of which is substantiated by vouchers.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 272) "for the relief of Daniel Bedinger's heirs." [Objected to by Mr. MORGAN.]

House bill (No. 273) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Colonel John H. Stone."

Mr. MILLSON. It became my duty to examine this case during the Thirty-First Congress, and knowing its character, I feel constrained to object to the bill at this time.

The bill was passed over.

House bill (No. 274) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Colonel Willis Riddick, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. MACDONALD.]

House bill (No. 281) "for the relief of Brigadier General John E. Wool."

The bill was read. It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow Brigadier General John E. Wool, inspector general of the United States Army, double rations from July 21, 1821, to March 3, 1833, being the same as have been allowed by the War Department to other officers of the staff; and when the amount is ascertained, to pay the same out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I object.

Mr. MACE. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection until the report is read. I am sure if the gentleman will hear the report, he will see that it is a perfectly plain case.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I withdraw the objection for that purpose.

The report was read, from which it seems that by the fifth section of the act of the 16th of March, 1802, and by the fourth section of the act of the 3d of March, 1815, every officer of the Army is entitled to a certain number of rations daily, "and to the commanding officers of each separate post such additional number of rations as the President of the United States shall, from time to time, direct, having respect to the special circumstances of each post."

By an exposition given by the War Department to this law, the Quartermaster General, the Commissary General of Subsistence, the Chief Engineer, and the Colonel of Ordnance, were considered as coming within its provisions; and accordingly, by an order of the War Department, dated the 27th of July, 1821, these officers were allowed double rations. At a subsequent period the Adjutant General was deemed to come within the rule, as extended to others; and by an order dated the 31st of March, 1826, he was allowed double rations. Although denied to Inspector General Wool, the War Department, by an order dated the 25th of February, 1829, allowed Major Nourse, not then in the Army, but chief clerk of the War Department, to receive, retrospectively, double rations for the period that he had performed the duties of Adjutant General, between the 8th of May, 1822, and the 20th of March, 1825. Under this order other officers of the staff were allowed to receive, retrospectively, double rations.

Such was the practical construction by the War Department of the law of the 16th of March, 1802, and sanctioned by appropriations, for eleven years, by Congress; when the present Secretary of War, believing that Brigadier General Wool came within the rule which extended the benefits of that law to others, at the same time considering it but an act of justice to place him in the same situation, allowed him double rations from the 3d March, 1833.

Mr. MACE. I would ask the Clerk to read the letter of Hon. Lewis Cass, which I send up. It is in further explanation of this case.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, January 4, 1836.

Sir: I have the honor to return the petition of General Wool which you transmitted to me.

A practical exposition was long since given by this Department to the law allowing additional rations to the commanding officers of posts which brought the heads of bureaus and of departments, stationed at this place, within its provisions. Believing that General Wool came within the rule which extended the benefits of that law to others, I considered it an act of justice to place him in the same situation, and therefore allowed him double rations from the time stated in his petition. He did not ask this Department to make any retroactive allowance; and if he had, the claim could not have been granted, because the President had previously directed that no allowance of that nature should, under any circumstances, be made.

The case of Major Nourse is correctly stated by General Wool, as appears from the inclosed communication from the Second Auditor.

Considering this place as the headquarters of General Wool, it appears to me that the same principles under which this allowance was made to the other heads of the staff departments, would justify the extension to him of the relief which he asks from Congress. His duties are arduous and important; and the expenses to which he is liable are, probably, greater than those of any other officer of the Army, with the exception of his colleague, Colonel Croghan.

Very respectfully, your most obedient servant,

LEW. CASS.

Hon. AARON WARD, Military Committee, Ho. Reps.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 282) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Colonel Francis Vigo."

Mr. MACE. I am satisfied that that bill ought not to pass, and therefore more that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. COBB. Let the friends of the bill have a fair hearing. Object, and let the bill be passed over.

Mr. MACE. Very well, then I object to the bill.

House bill (No. 323) "for the relief of J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky."

The bill, which was read extenso, authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to pay to J. C. Buckles, of Louisville, Kentucky, out of any moneys appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for the transportation of the mails, the sum of $3,006.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 324) "for the relief of McAtee and Eastman." [Objected to by Mr. STUART, of Michigan.]

House bill (No. 325) "for the relief of James S. Graham and Walker H. Finnall."

The bill, which was read extenso, authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to pay James S. Graham and Walker H. Finnall $3,000, as compensation in full for the losses they sustained by reason of the abandonment by the Postmaster General of two contracts made by that officer with them for the transportation of the mail from Washington to Fredericksburg, and from Fredericksburg to Richmond, which contracts bear date December 3, 1847.

The accompanying report of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, which was read at the request of several members, shows that in October, A. D. 1847, the Richmond, Fredericksburg, and Potomac Railroad Companies refused to transport the mail of the United States without an increased compensation, and demanded a rate of compensation greater than that for which the Postmaster General was authorized to contract by law. The Postmaster General proceeded to advertise for proposals to carry the mails between Washington and Richmond by post coaches, and proposals were made, accepted, and contracts entered into for the transportation of the mails between the points named—one contract for the mail between Washington and Fredericksburg, and one for the mail between Fredericksburg and Richmond—at the aggregate sum per annum of $13,080. The contracts were taken by Graham and Finnall, and were to commence the 10th of December, 1847, and to expire on the 30th of June, 1851; making the term of service nearly three years and seven months. The contracts were taken with the understanding and with the just expectation that the full term of service would be enjoyed, and with this expectation the contractors were induced to incur extraordinary expenses in stocking and opening a route upon brief notice, and at the commencement of winter.

The fact that the contractors had good reason to understand that the contract would not be abandoned, appears from the statement of the Postmaster General, Hon. Cave Johnson. It appears, however, that within the first year of the service the Postmaster General succeeded in effecting a satisfactory contract with said railroad companies, and in consequence thereof, on the 30th November, 1848, he gave notice to the contractors of the abandonment of his contract with them, to take effect the 4th of December, 1848. Thereupon the said contractors called upon the Postmaster General for compensation for their extraordinary losses, who, though distinctly expressing his opinion that it would be just to give additional and equitable indemnity, held that he had no legal power to afford relief.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 227) "to authorize Robert Graham to locate six thousand nine hundred and ninety-three acres of land in lieu of one undivided half part of certain lands patented to John Edgar and John Murray St. Clair by the Governor of the Northwestern Territory." [Objected to by Mr. NICHOLS.]

Senate bill (No. 303) "for the relief of James M. Goggin." [Objected to by Mr. MACE and Mr. MORRISON.]

Mr. MILLER. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his objection.

Mr. MACE. I would be perfectly willing to withdraw the objection if this were the only bill of the kind before the House. But we have rejected more than fifty bills based upon the same principle as this one.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do beseech my friend from Indiana to withdraw that objection?

Mr. MACE. As there seem to be a great number who wish the objection withdrawn, I will yield to their wishes to do so.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that the same do pass.

Joint resolution of the House (No. 24) "for the adjustment of the accounts of John D. Colmesnil." [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

Mr. BRIDGES. If the gentleman from Virginia continues to insist upon objecting to all the bills upon the Calendar, there is no use in proceeding with the reading of the cases.

Mr. COBB. Let us go on.

Mr. SMITH. I object to nothing. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HAVEN. Then I object to the bill.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I desire to ask the gentleman from New York to withdraw the objection to the bill.

Mr. HAVEN. Mr. Chairman, if there is any man in this House for whom I would withdraw it, it is for the gentleman from Oregon. But we passed a joint resolution three years ago, under which this account was adjusted and paid, and I do not want to open the account again. I must decline to withdraw my objection.

Senate bill (No. 147) "for the relief of the legal representatives of the late Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, South Carolina."

The bill, which was read, provides that there shall be paid to the legal representatives of Thomas Chapman, formerly collector of the port of Georgetown, in the State of South Carolina, the sum of $13,457 54, being the share to which the said Chapman was entitled as such collector, from the cargo of the Swedish ship Diana, condemned for a breach of the non-intercourse act, which was decreed to be forfeited by the said Thomas Chapman, in consequence of his being examined as a witness in behalf of the claimants.

Mr. McQUEEN. I move that the bill be laid aside and reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I objected to Senate bill No. 303, for the relief of James M. Goggin. Upon examination, I am satisfied that the claim is a just one. I therefore desire to withdraw my objection.

The bill authorizes and requires the Postmaster General to settle and adjust the claims of James M. Goggin; and that in such settlement he be allowed a fair and reasonable salary as special mail agent for the State of California, from December 1, 1850, until April 6, 1853, with reasonable allowance for office rent and per diem, and the hire of a clerk.

Mr. McCULLOCH. I object.

Mr. MILLER. I appealed to the gentleman to withdraw his objection. Two gentlemen have already objected, and having become satisfied that the claim is right, have withdrawn their objections. I am sure the gentleman would not object to it if he had examined the facts of the case.

Mr. McCULLOCH. Well, sir, I will withdraw my objection.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 359) "for the relief of the heirs of Captain Nehemiah Stokely." [Objected to by Mr. MILLSON.]

House bill (No. 361) "for the relief of the widow and children of Ezra Chapman, deceased."

The bill authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the lawful administrators of Ezra Chapman, late of Tolland, Connecticut, deceased, for the benefit of his widow and children, the sum of $840, together with interest thereon from March 22, 1838—the same being the aggregate amount of seven years' half pay of Ezra Chapman, the father of the aforesaid Ezra Chapman, deceased, who was an ensign in the army of the Revolution, and died in the service of the United States, September 1, 1778, and which sum of money was due to the said Ezra Chapman, deceased, on account of the services of his said father, by the provisions of the resolution of Congress passed August 24, 1780.

It appears from the report that the father of the memorialist, Ezra Chapman, senior, on the 6th day of August, 1777, entered into the service of the army of the Revolution as an ensign, commissioned by Congress, in Captain Horton's company, in Colonel Baldwin's regiment of artificers, and continued in said service, in said office of ensign until the 1st day of September, 1778, when he died; that the said Ezra, at his decease, left a widow and one son, the memorialist, then about five years of age; that the widow of said Ezra, soon after his decease, married one Elihu Marvin, and died in the year 1788, without leaving any other child; and that neither the said widow, before her said marriage with the said Marvin, or afterwards, or the memorialist, or any other person for them or either of them, has ever received the seven years' half pay of the said Ezra, deceased, to which his widow, or, in case of her marriage, his orphan child, became entitled by virtue of the resolution of Congress, passed the 24th day of August, 1780.

Mr. SKELTON. I object, unless an amendment be made striking out the interest.

Mr. PECKHAM. The interest is only from the time the petition was presented to the House.

Mr. SKELTON. I must object, unless the gentleman will accept such an amendment.

Mr. PECKHAM. I am not authorized by the committee to accept any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule that the amendment may be offered, if it give rise to no debate.

Mr. PRATT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his amendment. He can offer it in the House.

Mr. PECKHAM. If the gentleman insists upon his amendment, I have no objection to its being reported for the action of the House.

Mr. SKELTON. Well, sir, I will withdraw my amendment and my objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 362) "for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Joseph Savage, deceased."

The bill directs that there shall be paid to the legal representatives of Joseph Savage, deceased, five years' full pay of a surgeon's mate in the continental line of the army of the Revolution, with interest on the same from January 1, 1837, being the full amount of the sum due to the said Joseph Savage, deceased, for services as surgeon's mate in the Virginia continental line of the revolutionary army.

Mr. ROWE. I object, unless the interest is stricken out.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think this matter of allowing interest should be settled in some way by the House, that we may know whether interest is to be allowed upon these claims or not.

Mr. PECKHAM. It can be very easily settled by a vote of the committee. I propose that the question be put to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York propose an amendment?

Mr. PECKHAM. No, sir, I will not propose one; but I think the matter may be very easily settled, if gentlemen object to the payment of interest from the time these claims are presented in the House.

Mr. MILLSON. Although this is a Virginia case, I feel constrained to say that I examined some time ago into the facts of the case, and must object.

House bill (No. 263) "for the relief of the heirs of Thomas Parks, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

House bill (No. 364) "for the relief of William A. Duer, John Duer, and Beverly Robinson, trustees of the estate of Sarah Alexander, widow of Major General William Alexander, commonly known as Lord Sterling."

The bill, which was read in extenso, authorizes and directs the Treasurer of the United States to pay to William A. Duer, John Duer, and Beverly Robinson, as trustees of the estate of Sarah Alexander, widow of Major General William Alexander, commonly known as Lord Sterling, the sum of $9,960, it being the amount due the heirs of said Lord Sterling, in money, for commutation pay as a major general in the service of the United States in the army of the Revolution, under the resolutions of Congress of October, 25, 1780, and March 22, 1783; and that there be granted to the said William A. Duer, John Duer, and Beverly Robinson, as trustees as aforesaid, eleven hundred acres of land, the number of acres allowed to a major general in the revolutionary war by the resolution of Congress of August, 12, 1780, to be selected out of any lands belonging to the United States subject to private entry and sale, to be selected under the rules and regulations now prescribed by law for the entry and purchase of lands belonging to the United States.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 367) "for the relief of the legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased."

The bill, which was read, authorizes the legal representatives of John Rice Jones, deceased, to locate in legal divisions and sub-divisions, not less than one hundred and sixty acres, an area of three thousand four hundred and eighty-five acres, on any of the public lands which shall have been offered at public sale, and may be subject to private entry; provided, that the location under this act shall be taken and held as in full satisfaction of the claims of said Jones, which are entered as numbers 1285 and 1286, in the report dated January 4, 1813, of the Kaskaskia commissioners; and, on a proper return being made to the General Land Office, from the district land office, of a location in conformity to this act, a patent shall issue; provided, always, that no location shall be made upon mineral land or lands reserved for the use of schools, or for military purposes.

There was no objection; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 199) "authorizing a patent to be issued to Peter Poncin for certain lands therein described."

The bill allows and reinstates, of the same date, the entry by Peter Poncin of the north half of the southeast quarter, and the south half of the northeast quarter of section thirty six, in township number twenty-nine, of range twenty-three, in the Stillwater land district, Minnesota, cancelled by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so that the title to said lands may inure to the benefit of his grantees, as far as he may have conveyed the same; provided, that the money paid for said lands shall not have been withdrawn, or, if withdrawn, shall be again paid at said land offices, and that thereupon a patent shall issue in the name of said Peter Poncin for said lands.

There was no objection; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 234) "for the relief of Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives."

The bill provides that the location of six hundred and forty acres of land, and which is described as survey No. 2,453, in township forty-four north, of ranges five and six east of the principal meridian, in the State of Missouri, made by Conrad Wheat, jr., October 22, 1816, under a certificate of location No. 113, issued the 12th of August, 1816, by the recorder of land titles, to the said Wheat, shall be confirmed; and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be authorized to issue a patent to the said Conrad Wheat, jr., or his legal representatives, for the said lands.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 72) "for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Uriah Prewitt deceased." [Objected to by Mr. CHASTAIN.]

Senate bill (No. 154) "for the relief of Richard King."

The bill provides that Richard King shall be confirmed in his title to two hundred and forty arpents of land on the eastern bank of the Ouachita river, in the parish of Caldwell, State of Louisiana, which was conveyed by the claimant of the Maison Rouge grant to Bagwell Bailly, in 1818, for cutting a road through said grant, and which has remained in the possession of, and in cultivation by, said Bailly and his successors to the present time, and which is now a part of the plantation of said King, on which he has resided for many years; and that a patent shall issue to him for it, after a legal survey is made and returned under the direction of the surveyor general; provided, that this act shall amount only to a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 363) "for the relief of Robert F. McGuire and Louisa, his wife, late Louisa Lamy."

The bill provides that Robert F. McGuire and Louisa McGuire, his wife, late Louisa Lamy, shall be confirmed in their title to a certain tract of land in the State of Louisiana, containing four hundred arpents, situate in and being a part of the "Baron de Bastrop grant," being the same tract to which the said McGuire and wife derived their title from the conveyance of A. Morehouse, dated April 17, 1809; provided that the act shall be considered only as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States to the said tract, and not to prejudice the rights of third persons.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 306) "for the relief of James Erwin, of Arkansas, and others."

Mr. LETCHER. Read the report.

Mr. BALL. This is a Senate bill which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The committee unanimously agreed to recommend its passage. There is, however, no written report. There was a report presented to the Senate by Mr. Brown, Chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs; and if this will satisfy the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER.] I ask that it be read.

Mr. LETCHER. That is what I wish to hear. The report was read.

Mr. LETCHER then objected to the bill, and it was passed over.

House bill (No. 369) "for indemnifying Moses D. Hogan for cattle destroyed by the Indians in 1842."

Mr. JONES, of New York. I have strong doubts of the propriety of that bill, and I therefore object to it.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

Senate bill (No. 136) "for the relief of William Senna Factor."

The bill, which was read, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $3,707 be paid to William Senna Factor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as indemnity in full for property of Rose Factor, destroyed by order of the American officers of the United States Army, in the Seminole war of 1836, and for property taken by such officers for public use in said war: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall first be satisfied that said William Senna Factor is the legal representative of Rose Factor, deceased.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs recommended the following amendment:

Strike out "$3,707" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

The report was then read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to further amend the bill by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That the sum herein mentioned shall be received in full of all claims against the Government for the matters specified in this bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 62) "for the relief of Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher."

The bill directs the payment to Richard M. Bouton, George Wright, and to Harriet F. Fisher, the widow and executrix of Marvin W. Fisher, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000 each, as a full compensation for the past use of their machines for making and charging percussion caps, in the arsenals of the United States, and also for the future free and undisturbed use by the Government of the said machines, together with the patent-right or rights to the said machines, with their improvements.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will allow the report in the case to be read. It is a case of extraordinary merit.

Mr. SMITH. I will withdraw my objection for that purpose.

The report was read, from which it appears that Mr. Richard Bouton, in January, 1842, at the request of the commanding officer of the Watervliet arsenal, New York, applied himself to the invention of a machine for making percussion caps. After some years of unremitting labor, he succeeded in constructing one which has been in successful operation since the year 1845, at the Watervliet arsenal, and at the arsenal in the navy-yard in this city. For the right and use of this discovery, however, there are two other competitors, Marvin W. Fisher and George Wright, for each of whose machines merit is claimed equal to Bouton's. Each of the claimants, at the time of the invention of their machines, were employed in the public service, and each claim bounty for the use of their inventions by the Government.

Mr. LETCHER. When were these patents granted?

Mr. TAYLOR. That of Mr. Bouton was granted ten years ago, and has been used ever since by the Government of the United States.

Mr. LETCHER. How with the others?

Mr. TAYLOR. There have been favorable reports on this case for the last ten years.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia object?

Mr. LETCHER. I do, unless there be some explanation of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. If allowed, I can satisfy the gentleman of the justice of the bill in a very few words.

Mr. LETCHER. When were these patents granted?

Mr. CHANDLER. Some years ago.

Mr. LETCHER. How long ago?

Mr. CHANDLER. Nearly ten years ago.

Mr. LETCHER. Have these patents expired?

Mr. CHANDLER. They have not.

Mr. LETCHER. When do they expire?

Mr. CHANDLER. Several persons invented an improved method of charging percussion caps, and Mr. Wright ingeniously combined the several improvements, so as to cause a great saving to the country. The Government uses these inventions now, and without paying for them. The bill only appropriates $5,000 to Bouton, Wright, and the widow of Fisher. I was a member of the committee which first reported on this claim, and we reported a larger amount than is provided for in this bill.

Mr. HOWE. I reported this bill, and, with the permission of the committee, will say a word or two.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to all debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. HOWE. I will refrain from saying anything, and hope that there may be no objection to the bill.

House bill (No. 387) "for the relief of Francis Petit Smith." [Objected to by Mr. Jones, of New York.]

Mr. BRIDGES. If the gentleman will allow the report to be read, I am sure that he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. JONES. I am opposed to the extension of patents by Congress under any circumstances.

Mr. BRIDGES. Under any circumstances?

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; but at the same time let me say, that I would be willing to confer on the Commissioner of Patents power to do in such matters what, in his judgment, justice dictated.

House bill (No. 388) "for the relief of Titian R. Peale."

The bill, which was read in extenso, authorizes and directs the payment of $1,782 20 to Titian R. Peale, of Philadelphia, or his legal representative, in full payment for the losses which he sustained of his private property when wrecked in the United States ship Peacock, at the mouth of the Columbia river.

It appears from the report of the committee, which was also read, that Mr. Peale was appointed by the Navy Department on the 28th of December, 1836, a member of the scientific corps to be attached to the South Sea surveying and exploring expedition, organized under the act of Congress of the 18th of January, 1836. He performed constant and valuable service during the expedition, and was on board the United States ship Peacock when she proceeded to the northwest coast of America. On the 18th of July, 1841, that vessel was entirely lost in endeavoring to enter the mouth of the Columbia river, the officers and crew having scarcely time to escape with their lives, and being unable to save anything from the wreck. Mr. Peale, upon this occasion, lost all his personal effects—his books and instruments, and a large number of articles which he had collected in his department, and which it would be difficult to replace. But, notwithstanding the calamity, he was enabled, by the exertions of the commanding officer, Captain Hudson, and his own strenuous efforts, to replace, at extravagant prices, and as far as practicable from his own funds, such articles as were indispensably necessary for the completion of the contemplated surveys of the country, and was thus enabled to continue his usefulness to the expedition; and, with others of the scientific corps, traversed over a large portion of Oregon and Upper California, thereby adding much to the information of those countries which we now possess.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not like to object to this bill, but I should be glad to hear some reason why the United States should be made an insurer in these cases.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will reply to the gentleman, with the consent of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion can only proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object to debate.

Mr. SMITH. I do not object to the bill, being privately assured by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is all right.

It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James W. Low, William Driskill, — Southerland, and — Stenchen, alias Michael Whitehouse, or to such persons as may be legally authorized to receive the same, as heirs or legal representatives, the sum of $2,570 30, that being the amount paid into the Treasury of the United States, and placed to the account of fines, penalties, and forfeitures, in consequence of a suit entitled "The United States vs. the schooner Ann and cargo," in the district court of Maine, December, 1814, the said schooner having been risen upon and captured by the aforesaid named persons from the British, and delivered to the proper authorities of the United States, in the State of Maine. Such sum is provided to be paid to the said James W. Low and his associates aforesaid, their heirs or assigns, in the following proportions, to wit: to the said James W. Low, for having planned the enterprise and directed the capture of the vessel, as first officer of the prize, eight parts; to William Driskill, as second or assistant officer, four parts; and to Southerland and Stenchen, as seamen or sailors, two parts each.

The second section of the bill provides that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, immediately after the passage of the act, to give public notice thereof, by advertisement for three months, in such newspapers as he shall think will be most likely to give proper information to the persons so entitled, to apply for their respective shares; and if, after the expiration of six months from the passage of the act, any of the said claimants, or their heirs or legal representatives, shall not have applied for their respective proportions of the sum thereby appropriated, the same shall be paid to such as shall have applied within that period, pro rata, according to their relative proportions as aforesaid, or to their heirs or assigns respectively; provided that any one or more of said claimants may apply for their own proportions in the first instance, at any time after the passage of the act.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want to hear the report read.

The report was accordingly read.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House.

House bill (No. 393) "for the relief of Jacob McLellan."

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Treasury cause to be paid to Jacob McLellan, his heirs or assigns, $450; it being part of a penalty imposed upon the ship George Turner, and paid by the said McLellan, in December, 1851, for an alleged violation of the laws of the United States restricting the number of passengers in merchant vessels.

House bill (No. 396) "for the relief of Charles I. Davis, administrator of Captain John Davis, an officer in the war of the Revolution."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Charles I. Davis, administrator of Captain John Davis, an officer of the Revolution in the Pennsylvania line on the Continental establishment, five years' full pay of a captain in such service, being the commutation of half-pay for life promised by the resolves of Congress to such officers as should serve to the end of the war, to be paid to said administrator, for the use of the heirs of said Captain John Davis.

The second section requires the Secretary of War to issue to the heirs of Captain John Davis, late a captain in the ninth regiment Pennsylvania line on the Continental establishment, a land warrant for three hundred acres of military bounty lands, as and for the lands to which the said John Davis was, while in full life, entitled, for and on account of the services rendered by him in the war of the Revolution; and that the same may be located on any vacant or unlocated lands appropriated by Congress for the purpose.

The report was read. The claim is based upon commutation and bounty land promised to certain officers of the Army of the Revolution who should serve until the end of the war. The proof is conclusive that Captain John Davis did serve until the close of the war.

There is no evidence that Captain Davis ever applied for or received his commutation or bounty land. He was a highly respectable man, and his pecuniary circumstances were such as not to make it necessary for him to avail himself of the provisions made by his country for those who, like himself, had served her in her hour of need; and, with a feeling of patriotic independence, he abstained from making the claim during his lifetime. He had married a daughter of John Morton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and was for many years an associate judge of the courts in Chester county, Pennsylvania. After his death, which took place about the 1st of September, 1827, his family became reduced in their pecuniary condition, and now feel justified in calling for what is justly due from the Government.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 222) "for the relief of John S. Wilson."

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John S. Wilson $800, with interest thereon, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, from May 17, 1822, in full compensation for the damages sustained by his being evicted of his title, derived by patent from the United States, to the east half of section twenty-two and west half of section twenty-three, in township fifty-two north, of range one east, of the fifth principal meridian, in the State of Missouri, by the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the devisees of Auguste Chouteau, at the January term, in 1835.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to audit the account of Thomas S. Russell, late an assistant commissary of subsistence in Colonel Brisbane's regiment of Florida volunteers, and to pay whatever amount may be found due to him, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, notwithstanding the irregularity of his appointment, and although his name does not appear upon the rolls as one of the staff of Colonel Brisbane; provided, the amount shall not exceed the pay of an assistant commissary of subsistence from February 18, 1836, to May 10, 1836.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. McMULLIN. I withdraw the objection which I made to House bill No. 397.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to going back.

The CHAIRMAN. That is equivalent to objection to the bill.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 144) "for the relief of Purser T. P. McBlair."

The bill was read.

It directs the accounting officers of the Treasury, in adjusting the accounts of Purser T. P. McBlair, to allow him the several sums paid by him as purser of the United States steamer Princeton, to William Taylor, acting boatswain, to John Coale, acting carpenter, and to Armstrong Flomerfelt, acting sailmaker, who were employed on said steamer by the commanding officer thereof, by authority from the Secretary of the Navy, and which said sums were disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury, for the reason that the said persons to whom the payments were made were not included in the number permitted by law, of officers of the grades to which they were respectively appointed.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

claim, be reconveyed to his legal representatives free, and discharged from all such incumbrance; provided, that they release the claim against the United States for services rendered by Joseph Watson, as Indian agent in the Territory of Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee on Indian Affairs have reported the following amendment: strike out the word "Indian agent," and insert in lieu thereof the words "superintendent of the Indian department and storekeeper."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 146) "for the relief of Samuel H. Hempstead."

The bill, which was read, provides that $1,800 be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay Samuel H. Hempstead for extra services rendered by him in defending the title of the United States to certain lands situated in the State of Arkansas.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 300) "for the relief of Thomas Rhodes." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

Senate bill (No. 365) "for the relief of John W. Kelly."

The bill directs the Postmaster General to have the accounts of John W. Kelly, late a contractor on route No. 3,540, from Bainbridge, Georgia, to Apalachicola, Florida, audited and settled by the proper accounting officers, and to allow the said John W. Kelly the contract price stipulated to be paid him, to wit: the sum of $2,400 per annum, from September 21, 1852, to June 30, 1855, the day on which his contract would have expired, deducting therefrom the payments heretofore made the said John W. Kelly on account thereof; and the sum, when so ascertained and paid, shall be in full of all claims which the said John W. Kelly may have for damages in consequence of the annulment of his said contract on the 21st of February, 1853, by the Post Office Department.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

The resolution authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to cause to be audited the claim of Don Juan Jesus Vigil, for a flock of sheep seized from him by a detachment of troops in the service of the United States in the month of January, 1847; and to make compensation to him for so many of said sheep as may have been used by said troops, or were lost to the owner in consequence of said seizure; provided that the whole amount of compensation allowed shall not exceed $9,000, and that the justice and equity of the allowance be established to the satisfaction of the auditing officer and the Secretary of War; and the amount so allowed shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

There was no objection; and the joint resolution was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. BRIDGES. I move that the committee do now rise.

[Cries of "No! This is the last day we shall have for the consideration of private bills!"]

Mr. BRIDGES. I withdraw the motion to rise, as that seems to be the general desire.

House bill (No. 407) "to remit the duties upon certain goods destroyed by fire in the cities of New York and San Francisco."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is a motion pending in the House to reconsider the vote by which this bill was referred to this committee, and I presume that, under the circumstances, we cannot take action on it.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be passed over.

Mr. JONES. By unanimous consent of the committee, I will withdraw the objection which I made to Senate resolution No. 19, for the relief of Rebecca J. Burdall.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the resolution will be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. ROBBINS. If I am allowed, I will make a brief explanation of the resolution.

[Cries of "Go on! We want to know what it is!"]

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Burdall was in the employ of the Government as mail agent between New York and California under the last Administration. By order of the Department he was compelled to remain for the transaction of some business ten or twelve days at Panama. While there he caught and died of the fever, to which strangers are subject. His widow and children are left in a destitute condition, and this resolution is for their relief. It has passed the Senate, and I hope there may be no objection to it here.

Mr. COBB. What amount does the bill propose to give Mrs. Burdall?

Mr. ROBBINS. The balance of pay for the current year's service to which her husband would have been entitled had he lived.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object. The principle of the bill is a wrong one. It is for the payment of the salary of an officer after his death.

House bill (No. 408) "for the relief of Thomas Underhill; executor of Thomas Underhill, deceased." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of New York.]

House bill (No. 409) "for the relief of Stephen Lutz, of New York." [Objected to by Mr. PERKINS, of New York.]

House bill (No. 413) "for the relief of Henry Gardner and others." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

House bill (No. 414) "for the relief of George Mattingly."

The bill, which was read, provides that the Commissioner of Public Buildings be authorized to convey to George Mattingly and his heirs, all the right, title, interest, and estate of the United States of America in and to square No. 495 on the plat of the city of Washington; provided the said Mattingly, or his heirs, shall first produce to the said Commissioner of Public Buildings a certificate of the Secretary of the Treasury that he has paid to him, for the United States, $387 11, with interest thereon from July 26, 1844.

From the report, it appears that on the 4th day of December, 1840, the claimant purchased at a public tax sale, in the city of Washington, made in pursuance of law, by the collector of taxes, a square of ground marked on the plat of said city as square No. 495, and paid therefor the sum of $387 11, and received from the mayor of said city on the 26th of July, 1846, a deed for the same; that he has, since acquiring said title, expended in improvements on said square, the sum of $12,750. The said square was, it appears, erroneously assessed on the books of the city of Washington as the property of an individual who was a large land-owner in that neighborhood. That large arrears of taxes were due on the same and unpaid, and according to law it was offered for sale to pay the said taxes, and after due publication, by repeated advertisements, was, on several occasions, offered for sale, when no one would bid for it, the said square being then quite remote from the improved and the improving parts of Washington. At length, after these failures to sell, the claimant was persuaded to bid for the same, and no one else being willing to purchase it, it was sold to him at a price equal to the taxes due upon it. It now turns out that the title to the said square is in the United States. The claimant has discovered this, and he gives the information which thus destroys his own title. He asks that a deed may be made to him by the Government, of its title, upon his paying the value of the square, at the time he purchased it, into the Treasury, with interest thereon.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 415) "for the relief of Nathaniel Reddick, administrator of Richard Taylor, deceased."

The bill provides that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and required to pay to Nathaniel Reddick, administrator of Richard Taylor, deceased, five years' full pay of a lieutenant colonel of infantry; the same having been due the said Richard Taylor as commutation pay for services as a lieutenant colonel of infantry in the Army of the United States in the war of the Revolution.

From the report, which was read, it appears that on the 9th of March, 1846, Nathaniel Reddick was appointed administrator de bonis non, of Richard Taylor, deceased, an officer in the Army of the United States in the war of the Revolution, by the court of quarterly session, held for the county of James city, Virginia, and that he bonded as such; that the petitioner, as administrator as aforesaid, claims commutation pay due the said Richard Taylor for services in said war; that from evidence derived from the Department of State, and filed in this case, it appears "that Richard Taylor was a second lieutenant in the sixth regiment of the Virginia line on the 1st day of November, 1776, and that he served to the close of the war, at which period he held the rank of lieutenant colonel;" and that though the petitioner prays for the pay of a captain only, so conclusively is the fact established that the said Richard Taylor was an officer of much higher grade, and consequently was entitled to corresponding pay, the committee report a bill allowing the pay to which he was entitled by the rank he held at the close of the war.

No objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 416) "for the relief of John McVea and John F. McNeely, of Louisiana."

The bill, which was read, provides that, upon the return to the land office at Greensburg, Louisiana, of plats of surveys, duly approved by the surveyor general, of township three south, of range one west, and township three south, of range one east, it shall be lawful for John McVea and John F. McNeely to enter, at $1 25 per acre, the one thousand acre tract or parcel of land which they have long held in possession and cultivation, and which is represented as covering parts of sections one, two, eleven, and twelve, in township three south, of range one west, and parts of sections six, seven, thirteen, and eighteen, of township three south, of range one east, in the Greensburg land district, Louisiana; provided, that the entry shall be made of the quantity aforesaid, according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and shall embrace the quantity aforesaid and the land actually cultivated and inclosed by them, as near as may be; and provided further, that the entry or entries made under the provisions of this act shall not be to the prejudice of any valid adverse rights, if any such exist, to any part of the land aforesaid.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 417) "for the relief of William Curran."

The bill, which was read, provides that the assignment, bearing date April 25, 1851, from Thomas Myers to William Curran, of bounty land warrant No. 407, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, dated February 7, 1851, and issued to Thomas Myers, private and corporal in Captain Skinner's company, Colonel Mills's regiment New York volunteers, war of 1812, be confirmed and declared effectual to transfer the said land warrant to the said William Curran, and to vest in him the title thereto from the date of said assignment; and this act shall be deemed and taken to be good and sufficient evidence of said assignment, having been duly made in all courts and places whatever.

The report says, it appears by the petition and papers of William Curran, duly verified in the case, that on the 7th of February, 1851, a bounty land warrant of that date was duly issued, under the act of Congress of September 28, 1850, to Thomas Myers, who was a private and a corporal in Captain Skinner's company, Colonel Mills's regiment of the New York volunteers, in the war of 1812, for one hundred and sixty acres of land, which warrant was number four hundred and seven. On the 25th of April, 1851, and before the passage of the act of Congress making land warrants assignable, Thomas Myers sold said land warrant to the petitioner for $200, which was duly paid; and thereupon the said Myers duly executed, under his hand and seal, and delivered to said petitioner, an assignment to said warrant, bearing date the 25th of April, 1851—that being the day of its execution—with a power and authority contained in said assignment to said petitioner to locate said warrant on any public lands, according to law, in the name of Thomas Myers; and said assignment also contained an agreement on the part of said Myers that he would convey to said petitioner, by deed, the lands on which said warrant should be located, upon their being patented to him, said Myers. That after said assignment, and about the time of the passage of the act of Congress making land warrants assignable, which was the 22d of March, 1852, Thomas Myers died intestate, leaving no estate, or, at most, but very little, and that no letters of administration have been granted in his case.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 418) "for the relief of Enoch S. More."

The bill authorizes and directs the Commissioner of Pensions to correct the said roll by erasing the words thereon which imply that the said Enoch S. More deserted, and insert in lieu thereof the words "sick and absent on furlough."

The second section provides that this act shall vest in the said Enoch S. More all the rights he would have had if he had continued in good health and served in said company according to the terms of his enlistment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 413) "for the relief of Patrick Gass."

Mr. COBB. I dislike very much to object, but this bill is an old acquaintance of mine, and I think it ought not to pass. I object.

House bill (No. 420) "for the relief of Rosalie Caxillo."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 421) "for the relief of A. S. Langhery."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 423) "for the relief of William J. McElhinny, E. P. Matthews, and Lawrence Cribben."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 374) "for the relief of Sylvester T. Jerauld, assignee of the interest of Henry Richard."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 373) "to ascertain and adjust the titles to certain lands in the State of Indiana."

The bill, which was read, provides that the register and receiver of the land office at Vincennes, together with a fit and proper person learned in the law, and a citizen of Indiana, to be appointed by the President of the United States, be constituted commissioners to ascertain and adjust the title of any claimant to any tract of land, or any part or subdivision thereof, granted by the resolve of Congress of August 29, 1788, and the act of March 3, 1791, entitled "An act for granting lands to the inhabitants and settlers at Vincennes, and the Illinois country in the territory northwest of the Ohio, and for confirming them in their possessions," and the several acts in aid of, and supplementary thereto.

The bill then goes on to fix the duties of the commissioners and the regulations under which claimants are to present their claims.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER,] who reported this bill, is not present. It has many provisions, and seems to be of great importance. Deeming it requires more consideration than we can now give it, I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. HENDRICKS.) If the gentleman from Tennessee would allow the Chair, he would state that the object of the bill is merely to ascertain title as between these citizens and the United States. Commissioners are appointed for that purpose. The bill is of great importance to many citizens of Indiana, and is carefully guarded.

Mr. JONES. On the gentleman's statement, I withdraw my objection.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 26) "for the relief of Ira Baldwin."

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to issue a land warrant, for three hundred and twenty acres of land, to Ira Baldwin, a Canadian volunteer, to be located on any of the unappropriated lands of the United States which have been offered for sale and are subject to entry; and also that the Secretary of the Treasury pay him $180, for three months' extra pay, all which shall be full compensation for his services in the late war with Great Britain.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This bill passed both Houses at the last Congress, but by some means or other failed to receive the President's signature.

There was no objection, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 329) "for the relief of Thomas D. Jennings."

The bill, which was read, authorizes Thomas D. Jennings, of Florida, to enter, at the minimum price of the public lands, a quantity of land not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, comprising the improvement on which his late father, Lawrence D. Jennings, resided before his death, on due proof being presented to the register of the proper land office that he would have been entitled to a preemption but for the removal of the family after the death of the father.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 424) "for the relief of township forty-five, range one, in Warren county, Missouri."

The bill provides that the board of directors of common schools for said township shall be authorized to select and have set apart for the use of schools in said township, one half of a section of any of the public lands in the land district within which said county is situated, in lieu of the half of said section sixteen, which is covered by the concession to one Kinaird; and when the said board of directors shall make the selection of said half section, they shall notify the register of the land office in said district of the land so selected, and the same shall be reserved from sale and set apart for the use of schools in said township; provided, that said selection and notification be made within twelve months after the passage of this act, and provided said selection shall be according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and in quantities not less than eighty acres.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri. I will explain the object of the bill in a very few words. A part of the sixteenth section in Missouri, reserved for school purposes under the act of 1820, was covered by the Spanish concession, and this bill only provides that the half section may be located upon some other lands.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COBB. I objected to bill No. 419 "for the relief of Patrick Gass." I now withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama unconditionally withdraw his objection?

Mr. COBB. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the bill in question will be laid aside, and reported to the House.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not know anything about this case, but I think that, as a matter of practice, the proposition cannot be carried out. It requires the unanimous consent of the House for a gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. COBB. Oh, it is done twenty times a day.

The CHAIRMAN. If the report had been read, or if there had been any controversy about the matter, I suppose it would have required the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw an objection.

Mr. MILLSON. I know nothing about this particular case; but I know that, as a matter of practice, it requires unanimous consent to withdraw an objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman from Alabama can withdraw his objection.

Bill No. 419 was therefore laid aside to be reported to the House.

House bill (No. 299) "for the relief of the Pine Grove Academy, in Louisiana."

The bill was read. It provides that the president, directors, and trustees, of the Pine Grove Academy, in the parish of Caldwell, Louisiana, be confirmed in their title to the lot of forty acres of land on which the said academy is situated, near Columbia, donated to them by Hyams, Chew & McCoy, claiming under the Maison Rouge grant, in 1839, as more particularly described in the act of donation; and that the said president, directors, and trustees, be also confirmed in their title to a certain tract or parcel of land situated in said parish of Caldwell, with about one mile front on the west bank of the Ouachita river, and running west between five and six miles, and known as lot No. 23, in the plat number one of the Maison Rouge grant, surveyed by John Dinsmore, a deputy surveyor of the United States, containing about four thousand acres, donated to them by Daniel W. Coxe, one of the claimants of said grant, in 1839, and that patents be issued to them for said lands, after a legal survey, under the instructions of the surveyor general of Louisiana: provided, that the act shall amount only to a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and that it shall not be construed to interfere in any manner with the rights of settlers on said lands at the date of this act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 167) "for the relief of Joseph Campau."

The bill was read, and laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was read. It authorizes Manuel Hernandez to locate, not to exceed eight hundred arpents of land, French measure, according to the legal subdivisions, on any of the public lands in the State of Florida, subject to private entry, which shall be in full compensation for all the damages he may have sustained in being dispossessed of eight hundred arpents of land about three miles distant from the mouth of the Escambia river, lying and situate between the lands of Joseph Noriega and those of the free mulatto named Charles, being the same lands that were granted to Joseph Hernandez, deceased, by the Spanish Government, on the 8th of October, 1817.

The second section directs the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the receipt of the certificate of entry from the register of the proper land office, to cause to be issued a patent for the lands authorized to be located by the act.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 170) "for the relief of Mrs. Helen Mackay, administratrix of Lieutenant Colonel Aeneas Mackay, late a deputy quartermaster in the United States Army."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is not this the bill which passed the House a few days since by unanimous consent?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This is a bill for the relief of Mrs. Mackay, as the administratrix of Lieutenant Colonel Mackay. She has no interest in it whatever.

Mr. FAULKNER. This is the bill to which I called the attention of the House a few days since. And as I think it requires the discussion and consideration of the House, I object.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

Senate bill (No. 189) "for the relief of Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochrane, widow of the late Lieutenant R. E. Cochrane, United States Army."

The bill, which was read, provides that there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $150 to Mrs. Sally T. B. Cochrane, widow of Lieutenant R. E. Cochrane, late of the United States Army, the value of a horse belonging to said Cochrane, which was used for express riding in the public service, by order of Lieutenant Colonel Garland, United States Army, at Fort Smith, in 1841, and died in consequence of said service.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 206) "for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army."

The bill was read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to that bill.

Mr. MACE. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw the objection.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection to withdrawing it until the report is read.

The report was then read.

Mr. STUART, of Ohio, and Mr. GIDDINGS, objected.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I hope the objections will be withdrawn.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I object, and do not withdraw my objection.

Senate bill (No. 285) "for the relief of the heirs of Brigadier General Richard B. Mason."

Mr. MILLSON. I think that bill ought not to be passed. I object. There are not one third the members of the House present, and I move that the committee do now rise.

[Cries of "Division!"]

Mr. MILLSON, by unanimous consent, withdrew his motion to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Did the gentleman from Virginia object to the last bill which was under consideration?

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think the bill is a proper one to be passed without full consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. That is equivalent to an objection, and the bill will be passed over.

Senate bill (No. 250) "for the relief of William Claude Jones."

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to settle the account of William Claude Jones against the United States, for his military services in the United States Army, and allow him the difference between the pay of a private, which he did receive, and the compensation of a commissary of subsistence, to which he is entitled, from September 28, 1837, to April 2, 1838, and that the same be paid out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If nobody else in the committee objects to Senate bill No. 206, entitled "An act for the relief of the executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army," I shall withdraw the objection which I made a few moments ago.

The bill, which was then read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Harriet O. Read, executrix of the late Brevet Colonel A. C. W. Fanning, of the United States Army, $7,230, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount claimed by the said executrix to be due the estate of the said Brevet Colonel Fanning, as commissions for disbursements made by him in 1827 and 1828, at the United States arsenal, in Augusta, Georgia, and as balances of his accounts against the United States for services rendered in 1818 and 1821, as the United States commissioner in receiving and restoring St. Marks, and as Indian agent at Forts Gadsden and St. Marks, from April, 1818, to December, 1821.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out all that part of the bill which provides for the payment of two and a half per cent. as commission on disbursements.

Mr. COBB. The amendment is acceptable to the friends of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 71) "for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff." [Objected to by Mr. PERKINS, of New York.]

House bill (No. 425) "for the relief of Rebecca Braggerly, widow of David Braggerly, deceased."

The bill was read; and there being no objection to it, it was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 108) "for the relief Rebecca Freeman."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Rebecca Freeman on the list of pensioners, at the rate of eight dollars per month, during her natural life, commencing January 27, 1847.

The report having been read, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 340) "for the relief of Sarah Crandall."

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Sarah Crandall, widow of James Coon, on the list of revolutionary pensioners, and pay her, during her natural life, at the rate of eight dollars per month, to commence January 1, 1848.

Thereport was then read; and no objection being made, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 426) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Lieutenant Francis Ware."

The bill provides that it appears from the books in the Register's office of the Treasury Department, that there is now outstanding and unpaid in favor of Lieutenant Francis Ware, deceased, a final settlement certificate for commutation pay for the sum of $251 10 No. 92,816, that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be published, for the space of two weeks, in two of the weekly papers of the city of Washington, a notice that he has been directed to pay said "final settlement certificate," and calling upon any person or persons who may own said certificate to produce it to him for payment; and if, at the expiration of three months from the date of said notice, no person or persons shall present it for payment, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the amount of said certificate, No. 92,816, with interest on the same, at the rate of three per centum, from January 1, 1791, to January 1, 1832, to the heir or heirs-at-law of said Lieutenant Francis Ware; provided, that before such payment shall be made, the said heir or heirs, as the case shall be, shall execute a bond, payable to the United States, in double the amount to be paid, with two good and sufficient securities, conditioned to indemnify the Government of the United States against the legal claim of any person or persons for the payment of said "final settlement certificate for commutation pay," alleged to be lost or destroyed.

The report was then read; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 429) "for the relief of James Capen."

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of James Capen on the pension roll, and that the said Capen be entitled to receive the sum of eight dollars per month during his natural life, to commence March 4, 1851.

It appears from the report in this case that the petitioner served a period of five months and twelve days, and that, including the time spent in going to and returning from the places of muster, he served over six months. It also appears that he was draughted for a term of three years' service, and owing to the sickness of his father, he was obliged to hire a substitute. There is no satisfactory evidence furnished that the petitioner actually served six months, thereby entitling him to be placed on the pension roll under the act of June 7, 1832, and to receive arrears of pension from March 4, 1831, to the present time. But as he probably may have served that length of time, and is now very old and infirm, the committee were of opinion that he should be placed on the pension roll—his pension to commence from March 4, 1851, about the date of his application.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it pass.

House bill (No. 431) "for the relief of Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, surety for a former postmaster at Norfolk, Virginia."

The bill, which was read, provides that a certain judgment rendered in 1842, against Thomas Ap Catesby Jones and Duncan Robertson, as sureties for Walter F. Jones, formerly postmaster at Norfolk, in the State of Virginia, for $4,387 09, it being on account of the defalcation of said postmaster as such, shall be declared satisfied, in so far as the said sureties, or either of them, are liable thereon. It also provides that $2,500 heretofore by said Thomas Ap Catesby Jones, through his agent, paid on said judgment, shall be ordered to be refunded to said Jones, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to the relinquishment of any security or liability in this case.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask for the reading of the report. The bill does not relinquish any security.

Mr. PARKER. I will state briefly the facts in the case.

Mr. JONES. Is there not a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. PARKER. There is.

Mr. JONES. Well, let it be read.

Mr. PARKER. It is too long; but if the committee will allow me, I will state very briefly the merits of the case. [Cries of "Go on."] The necessity for this bill arises on account of Commodore Jones, and a gentleman by the name of Robertson, having become securities for a postmaster at Norfolk, Virginia. At the time Commodore Jones became such security, most of the defalcations of the postmaster had occurred; but his accounts were not then settled, and the former securities were released from their bond, leaving Jones and the other security in this predicament. The Judiciary Committee were unanimous in their opinion, that so far as these defalcations were concerned, there could be no question; but that the law would entirely exonerate the securities. This bill proposes to make no gratuity. But there was no legal right to recover the amount levied on the claimant, as it is perfectly clear, from the documents drawn from the Post Office Department, that the defalcations of the postmaster had occurred because of the laches of the Post Office Department itself. This is perfectly clear. No question can be made clearer. At the time that judgment was taken against him, Commodore Jones was in the Pacific, engaged in the service of his country. He left the matter to be managed by his attorneys, who placed the defense on the ground that the action was not brought in time; and that plea was overruled, and judgment issued.

The CHAIRMAN. Is objection withdrawn?

Mr. JONES. No, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will add to what has been stated by my colleague, that with the judgment hanging over Commodore Jones, most unjustly and unrighteously rendered, this man will be ruined before next January; every particle of property that he has will be seized to satisfy these claims. I hope the objection will be withdrawn. Let not this man, who is disfigured in his country's service, be denied justice on this floor.

Mr. JONES. I cannot vote for any such bill, Mr. PARKER. But you can withdraw your objection.

The objection was withdrawn, and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. Mr. Chairman, in the case of Senate bill No. 71, "for the relief of Joseph Gonder, junior, and John Duff," I objected, and the bill was passed over. I have since read the report, and I am confident that if the facts stated in it are to be relied on, the bill should pass. I withdraw my objection.

The objection being withdrawn, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 433) "for the relief of James Wright, jr., of the State of Tennessee."

The bill was read.

Simonds, of the United States Navy, $800, it being for his expenses incurred in defending himself against two suits brought against him for arresting and detaining the brig Casket, on the coast of Africa, on charge of being engaged in the slave trade, in 1846, the said Simonds being then in command of the United States armed vessel called the Marion, and acting in the line of his duty.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 435) "for the relief of Daniel Morse, of Essex, Chittenden county, Vermont."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate resolution (No. 14) "authorizing settlements under certain mail contracts." [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

The bill, which was read, provides that the accounting officers of the Treasury be directed to settle the suspended accounts for mileage of John G. Camp, late marshal for the middle district of Florida, in the same manner that similar accounts are now settled; provided that the amount therein charged does not exceed what is now allowed by law.

The Committee on the Judiciary had reported to amend in the seventh line, by striking out the words "therein charged does," and inserting the word "shall," and in the eighth line, by striking out the word "allowed," and inserting the word "authorized," so that it would read:

That the accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, directed to settle the suspended accounts for mileage of John G. Camp, late marshal for the middle district of Florida, in the same manner that similar accounts are now settled: Provided, however, That the amount shall not exceed what is now authorized by law.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is there a report?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. JONES. Then I object.

House bill (No. 443) "vesting the title of the United States to certain land in the city of Cincinnati."

The bill provides that the title and interest of the United States to the unsold land, if there be any, in fractional section number eleven, in fractional township number four, in fractional range number one, of John Cleves Symmes's purchase of lands, within the now State of Ohio, be, and the same hereby is, vested in the corporate authorities of the city of Cincinnati, and their successors in office, and in any other occupants of the same, in severalty, upon payment to the Commissioner of the General Land Office of the minimum price of land subject to entry; provided, that nothing in the act shall be so construed as to impair the legal or equitable rights of any other person or persons to the said land, or to any part thereof.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 185) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau."

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of Samuel Prioleau, late of Charleston, South Carolina, $6,928 60, being in full compensation for property taken from said Prioleau, at Charleston, for the use of the United States, during the revolutionary war.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it pass.

Senate bill (No. 337) "for the relief of Eliza M. Evans."

Mr. CRAIGE. Is there a report to this bill?

Mr. PECKHAM. There is a Senate report.

Mr. CRAIGE. I want to know some reason why this interest should be paid.

Mr. PECKHAM. Because the money was advanced to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CRAIGE. Well, sir, I object.

Mr. PECKHAM. I hope the gentleman will not object. I am willing he should move to strike out the interest, and when the bill comes to the House, let the matter be settled.

Mr. CRAIGE. I do not withdraw my objection.

House bill (No. 446) "for the relief of the civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, Ohio."

The bill, which was read, provides that the trustees of the civil township of Marion, in the county of Mercer, and State of Ohio, be authorized to select out of the unsold lands of the United States in said State, one section of land for school purposes, in lieu of section sixteen, to which said township is entitled by acts of Congress; and that when the said trustees shall have selected said section of land, they shall notify the Register of the Land Office in the district in which said lands lie, and the same shall be reserved from sale, and set apart for the use of schools in said townships.

There was no objection; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 447) "for the relief of the legal heirs of Benjamin Metoyer."

The bill provides that Benjamin Metoyer, of Natchitoches parish, Louisiana, be authorized to enter for himself and the other heirs of Benjamin Metoyer, deceased, as near as may be by legal subdivisions, one hundred and twenty-three and twelve one hundredths acres of land out of any public lands belonging to the United States.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I ask the unanimous consent of the committee to offer an amendment to the bill, and I will now briefly state its object. The lands indicated are those which have been confirmed to these heirs by act of Congress, and because the act of Congress did not authorize the Commissioner of the Land Office to issue patents, he feels that he has not the power to do so. The object of the amendment is to authorize the Land Office to issue patents for the lands which have been confirmed to these heirs by act of Congress.

There was no objection; and the amendment was read and agreed to; as follows:

Add:

And that the Commissioner of the Land Office be authorized to issue to said heirs and legal representatives patents for the lands heretofore confirmed to them by acts of Congress.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 248) "for the relief of William Harris, of Georgia."

The bill, which was read, directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the claim of William Harris, of Georgia, and pay him for his services in the United States Army in the same manner as if he had not deserted therefrom; provided, the same shall not exceed the pay and emoluments of a sergeant of infantry, from April 18, 1814, to November 25, 1816.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 240) "for the relief of James Edwards and others."

The Secretary of War, by this bill, is directed to ascertain by the best evidence which the nature of the case will admit of, the value of the houses and other property of James Edwards, of the late Edward M. Wanton, and of the late Nehemiah Brush, destroyed at Micanopy, Florida, in 1836, by order of Lieutenant Colonel B. K. Pierce, the commanding officer of that post, to prevent them from falling into the hands of the enemy, and that the amount so ascertained be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; provided, the amounts so to be paid shall not exceed $2,482 32 in the case of James Edwards; $1,812 50 in the case of the late Edward M. Wanton; or $800 in the case of the late Nehemiah Brush.

The report accompanying the bill having been read, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Senate bill (No. 203) "for the relief of Thomas Snodgrass."

The bill was read. It directs that $230 be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to reimburse to Captain Thomas Snodgrass the expenses by him incurred for a team, and balance for forage and subsistence furnished to his company of volunteers, while employed as a guard or escort for a party of emigrating Cherokees, in 1838; provided nothing contained in the act shall be construed to sanction any claim of the representatives of Washington Smith upon the United States for the same, or any other sum advanced said Snodgrass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 448) "for the relief of William H. Weirick."

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of War to pay to William H. Weirick, late a second lieutenant in company G, of Colonel J. D. Stevenson's regiment of New York volunteers, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $576 26, the amount of mileage from California to New York, and two months' pay, as paid to the other officers and soldiers of said regiment.

The report of the Committee on Military Affairs was read; and the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 469) "granting bounty land to Cornelius Coffey."

Mr. McCULLOCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was put; and there were, on a division—ayes 13, noes 25; no quorum voting.

[Cries of "Call the roll!"]

The Clerk then commenced the call of the roll, but was interrupted by

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, who said: I am as much opposed to adjourning as any member of the committee can be, but being satisfied from the temper of the House that we shall be able to do nothing to-day, I will, if the committee will permit me, move that the committee do now rise.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that while the call is proceeding the gentleman cannot submit the motion.

The Clerk resumed the call, but was again interrupted by Mr. PRESTON, who said: I desire at this stage of the call to submit a motion, which I presume is in order at this time, but will not be after the call of the roll is finished. I would ask the Chair if it is in order now to move that the call be suspended, and the committee rise, and the chairman be instructed to report to the House the bills which the committee have ordered to be laid aside and reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Chair will entertain the motion.

[Cries of "Agreed!" "Agreed!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the roll is called through, and you find the committee without a quorum, the Chair cannot report them.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I insist upon having the roll called through.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to inquire what effect the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] will have upon the bills not acted upon in committee?

Mr. PRESTON. They will merely remain upon the Calendar.

Mr. CRAIGE. If the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky prevails, there will not be a quorum to do business. But, sir, if nobody else objects to the motion, I certainly shall not.

Mr. SMITH. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. I wish to inquire whether, by unanimous consent, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] could withdraw his call for a division? If that could be done, it would supersede the necessity for calling the roll, and we could go on with the business of the committee.

Mr. JONES. It is too late for me to withdraw the call; a division has actually taken place, and no quorum has made its appearance.

Mr. HOUSTON. It must be perceived by this time the impossibility of going again into committee, if we now rise. I hope gentlemen will allow these bills to be reported to the House.

Mr. SMITH. I have withdrawn my objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then there is no objection. These bills can be reported by unanimous consent, and I hope it will be done.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the opinion of the Chair that the committee has no power to suspend the call of the roll even by unanimous consent. The rule of the House is positive upon the subject. When the committee finds itself without a quorum, the roll must be called. The Chair, however, under the circumstances, will entertain the motion that the bills which have been laid aside be reported to the House; and then the call of the roll may proceed, and, at the conclusion, the bills may be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That cannot be done, because the call of the roll will show that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee object to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. JONES. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then entertain the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then we may, by unanimous consent, dispense with the calling of the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the rules of the House positively require that the roll shall be called.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understood the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to be, that the committee rise, and report the bills to the House. We cannot do one or the other properly without a quorum; but it seems to me we may as well rise as order the bills to be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the motion to rise cannot be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, cannot the Chair put the question now that the committee rise and report the bills to the House, and then we can go back into committee, and finish the call, if it is necessary that it should be finished? I hope these bills will not be left in committee. The Chair would expedite the business of the House by pursuing some course by which we could have these bills reported. I feel a good deal of solicitude about the matter, and I hope the Chair will entertain the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the motion cannot be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. Cannot the call be withdrawn by unanimous consent? We are all anxious that these bills should be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It cannot.

Mr. LILLY. I would inquire if we cannot go into the House, and, by unanimous consent, again go into committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the call of the roll must proceed.

The call was then concluded.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. HENDRICKS) reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had sundry bills upon the Private Calendar under consideration, and having found itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and had directed him to report the facts to the House with the names of the absentees.

The following is the list of absentees.

Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bennett, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hibbard, Hiester, Hill, Hillyer, Howe, Hunt, Ingersoll, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsey, Lyon, McDougall, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, May, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Solfers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

The SPEAKER announced that seventy-three members, less than a quorum, had answered to their names.

Mr. KERR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the motion, and let us adopt some method by which we can get these bills out of committee.

Mr. KERR. Very well, I will withdraw the motion, if the gentleman thinks he can accomplish anything by it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I now ask the Chair whether it is not competent for the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to so amend his report as to report to the House the bills which he had been ordered so to report? I submit that when bills have been laid aside by order of the Committee of the Whole to be reported to the House, that it is the duty of the chairman of the committee to report them to the House. It is true that when the committee rose it had found itself without a quorum; but it is also true that these bills were ordered to be reported to the House when a quorum of the committee was present. I ask, therefore, that the report of the chairman of the committee may be so amended as to report the bills which have been ordered by the Committee of the Whole to be reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the Committee of the Whole, when a quorum was present, ordered a variety of bills to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that they do pass. The Chair decides that that report cannot be made under the present circumstances. The rule of the House is positive, that when the committee finds itself without a quorum, the roll must be called, and the chairman must report the absentees to the House. That is the only report that can be made.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the precise point to which I desire to call the Speaker's attention. Does the fact of a rule of this House devolving on the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House the duty to make a certain report, destroy the order of the committee, which directs him to report these bills to the House? It is cumulative, to me a legal expression, and does not preclude the other.

This is an additional report, which the rules require if, on a call of the roll, no quorum be found present. The other report is not thereby excluded because that was ordered by the committee when there was a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say, in reply, that it requires a quorum to do any business. No quorum was present in the committee, and that fact was reported to the House. The rule prescribes that the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House, when it finds itself without a quorum, shall report that fact to the House. The Chair has no doubt that when there was a quorum a Committee of the Whole House did order certain bills to be reported to the House; but it requires a quorum of the committee, as well as of the House, to do business. The report cannot be made, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is a right way to do business, and it is within our power to do so. If gentlemen order a call of the House, and bring absent members here, we can do business, and do it correctly.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair is based on the idea that a quorum is necessary for the discharge of any business in a Committee of the Whole House. Without a quorum no business can be done.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want the Chair or anybody else, to be under the impression that I hold the opinion that either the House itself or a Committee of the Whole can do business without a quorum. All I asked was, that business already transacted in a Committee of the Whole House should be presented to the House. To do that no quorum is necessary. The chairman does that. It is his own act, and he only does as he was ordered to do by the committee when there was a quorum.

Mr. McNAIR. How is this report to be made if it cannot be made now? By whom is it to be made, and when?

The SPEAKER. By a call of the House, and the gentleman has a plain answer.

Mr. SKELTON. Let us adjourn. This business can be done in a very few minutes on Monday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If it goes over to Monday it will not be touched at all in all probability.

Mr. ROBBINS. I would inquire of the Chair whether, if the House now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House, it would not be competent to report to the House the bills acted on to-day in committee?

The SPEAKER. If by any test made, it is shown that a quorum is present, it is competent for the House to go into a Committee of the Whole House and do business; but without a quorum no business can be done.

[Cries of let us have a call of the House!]

Mr. JONES. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. If the House now adjourn, in what condition shall we leave these bills?

The SPEAKER. In statu quo.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the House now adjourn, can the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House report these bills to the House when a quorum may be present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, unless, indeed, the House shall resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. ROWE. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HENN. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the motion for a moment, in order to allow me to ask the Chair a question.

Mr. ROWE. I will withdraw it.

Mr. HENN. I wish to ask the Chair whether it will be in order on Monday to go into a Committee of the Whole House, and if so, if we cannot go right into the House again and act upon the bills reported by the committees?

Mr. HOUSTON. There is already a motion pending to suspend the rules, which comes up on next Monday, and which will take precedence of everything else.

Mr. SPEAKER. In answer to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN] the Chair will say, that there are various motions that may be made which will take precedence of the motion he suggests. It is competent for a majority of the House to set aside those various motions, and go into a Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar, and when they have done so, having a majority, they may report their action to the House, but not without a majority. According to the report of the chairman, there is no quorum present that can do business, as there are only seventy-two gentlemen present.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to make a suggestion to the Chair. It seems to me that the labor that has been performed here to-day will not be lost. On Monday, if there should be a desire on the part of the House, a resolution can be introduced, directing the chairman of a Committee of the Whole House to report the action of to-day up to the time that the committee found itself without a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair again repeats that it is not competent for a Committee of the Whole House, or the House, to do business without a quorum. It may be, and the Chair has no doubt such is the fact, that a majority being present, the committee did order various bills to be reported. But, finally, the committee was found to be without a quorum, and, under a special rule, the chairman of the committee was bound, even if there was a unanimous wish to the contrary, to report that fact to the House. That fact is reported. Seventy-two members only are present, and the Chair decides that no business can be done when there is less than a quorum present. It is competent for the House on Monday, or any other day, when they have a majority, if it be their will, to reach the object, by going into a Committee of the Whole House, and reporting their proceedings of to-day. There can be no difficulty about it, if gentlemen will only give their consent to this course.

Mr. HAVEN. I move that this House do now adjourn, for the purpose of taking action upon these bills on Monday.

Mr. McNAIR demanded tellers; which were ordered; and Messrs. McNAIR and APPLETON were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 29, noes 43.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on Mr. JONES's motion for a call of the House; which was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bell, Bennett, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bocoock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Cullom, Cumming, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dent, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edmunds, Edmundson, Thomas D. Eliot, John M. Elliott, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hibbard, Hiester, Hill, Hillyer, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lindley, Lindsey, Lyon, McDougall, Mace, Matteson, Maurice, May, Meacham, Middleswarth, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Solfers, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, John J. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Daniel B. Wright, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

Mr. KNOX. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and Mr. KNOX's motion was not agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I presume that there can be no difficulty on Monday next of getting all these bills on the Private Calendar, that have been ordered to be reported to the House passed. In that view, I move to dispense with the further call of the House, with the intention of moving to adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. Will it not require a two-third vote to proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar on Monday?

The SPEAKER. It may not require a two-third vote. There are various other matters that may come up which would take precedence of the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar. It will be in the power of a majority of the House, however, on Monday to vote all other motions down, and resolve to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Cannot the House on Monday agree to a motion to discharge the committee from the further consideration of such of the bills as have been ordered to be reported to the House?

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, it can be done.

Mr. JONES. And if it be objected to?

The SPEAKER. If objected to, two thirds of the members present can order it.

Mr. JONES. Can order the committee to be discharged from the further consideration of these bills, and to bring them into the House?

The SPEAKER. No doubt of it.

Mr. HOUSTON. But there is already a motion pending to suspend the rules on Monday.

Mr. JONES. That will not consume all the day.

Mr. HOUSTON. There is no foretelling how long it may take.

Mr. FLORENCE. It may take all day.

Mr. JONES. What is the motion to suspend the rules for?

Mr. FLORENCE. For the purpose of considering Mr. COBB's suggestion about graduating the public lands, or some such thing.

Mr. JONES. Mr. COBB can withdraw that motion till this matter is disposed of.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion submitted by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I would like, before voting on that motion, to ask a question from the Chair. I want myself to see these private bills passed, but before voting on the question to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, I want to know if a majority of the House can, on Monday next, proceed to the consideration of these bills?

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. They can do so if no objection be made.

Mr. WASHBURNE. Of course they can; but I want to know whether they can do so even though objection be made? I want to know whether it is within the control of a majority of the House?

The SPEAKER. If the gentlemen will allow the Chair, he will state that there is a motion pending to suspend the rules, holding over from Monday last, and that will be the first business in order next Monday.

Mr. COBB. I made the motion to suspend the rules, to which the Speaker has referred, and it necessarily comes up next Monday as the first business in order. I would inquire of the Chair if it would be competent for me to waive the right then—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) By unanimous consent only.

Mr. COBB. I will be perfectly willing to withdraw the motion on Monday until the House has taken action upon these bills, if it is competent to do so, and I do not thereby lose my right to have it considered afterwards.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will have no control over his motion except to withdraw it, or to have a vote of the House upon it. It will be competent for the House after disposing of that, and some other questions which may arise taking precedence of the motion, to go into a Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and they can go into the Committee of the Whole House by a majority vote.

Mr. McNAIR. Can that report be ordered to be made by a majority?

The SPEAKER. There is no doubt about it, if there is a majority of the House present; if not they cannot.

Mr. HUGHES. There are seventy gentlemen here, which is a sufficient guarantee, that a full House will come to a sensible conclusion, in regard to these private bills, without asking gentlemen to remain here now to pass them. Trusting and relying entirely upon the good sense of the House, I shall vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia. I hope the House will carry it out and now adjourn. I make that motion.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would say to the House that messengers have been sent out to the residences of different members, and without doubt, we will, in a few moments, have a quorum here.

The question was put on the motion to adjourn, and twenty-eight members only voted in favor thereof.

So the House refused to adjourn

Mr. HENN. Is it in order to debate this matter?

The SPEAKER. It is not

Mr. HENN. I hope the House will not excuse any one who is brought in.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the absentees for the purpose of enabling excuses to be offered.

JAMES C. ALLEN. No excuse offered.

WILLIS ALLEN. No excuse offered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I would like to inquire of the Chair if there is any specific fine imposed upon gentlemen who are absent?

The SPEAKER. That is a matter to be determined by the House itself. It is not regulated by any existing law.

WILLIAM S. ASHE. No excuse offered.

DAVID J. BAILEY. No excuse offered.

THOMAS H. BAYLY. No excuse offered.

EDWARD BALL.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish to say, in behalf of my colleague, that he is sick. I move he be excused.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. TAYLOR. He is sick, and if he is not excused I shall vote against excusing any one else.

The motion was agreed to.

NATHANIEL P. BANKS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM BARKSDALE. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM S. BARRY. No excuse offered.

P. H. BELL. No excuse offered.

HENRY BENNETT. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM W. BOYCE. No excuse offered.

JOHN C. BRECKINRIDGE. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL A. BRIDGES. No excuse offered.

PRESTON S. BROOKS.

Mr. McQUEEN. My colleague, Mr. Brooks, left the city some two days since, with his mother, for a short tour. He is expected back by Monday, at latest. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LILLY. Mr. Drum left the city some two weeks ago, and has not yet returned. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I move that Mr. DENT be excused. He has been unwell—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DENT] is in his seat. [Great laughter.]

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I withdraw the motion.

WILLIAM DUNBAR.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I presume the House is well aware that Mr. DUNBAR has been sick for several weeks. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CYRUS L. DUNHAM. No excuse offered.

BEN C. EASTMAN. No excuse offered.

NORMAN EDDY. No excuse offered.

HENRY A. EDMUNDSON. No excuse offered.

THOMAS D. ELIOT. No excuse offered.

JOHN M. ELLIOTT.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. ELLIOTT has been very unwell for the last two days. I saw him last evening, and he complained very much. He cannot be present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can bear testimony to the fact that Mr. ELLIOTT is unable to be present on account of severe illness.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW ELLISON. No excuse offered.

EMERSON ETHERIDGE.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I presume that the House is generally aware of the affliction which has called my colleague from this city to his home; and I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that my colleague, Mr. DUNHAM, be excused. If he is not sick now, I presume that he expects to be. [Laughter.] That is as good an excuse as has been offered yet.

The question was taken; and the House refused to excuse Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For the same reason I move that my other colleague, Mr. EDDY, be excused.

Mr. HOUSTON. For what reason?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. For the reason that if he is not sick he expects to be. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and the House refused to excuse Mr. EDDY.

WILLIAM EVERHART. No excuse offered.

PRESLEY EWING. No excuse offered.

E. WILDER FARLEY. No excuse offered.

THOMAS T. FLAGLER.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that Mr. FLAGLER be excused. He left the Hall to-day on account of ill health.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to a privileged question. The rule requires the doors to be closed, but not the windows. It is a very warm day, and yet not only the doors but the windows are all closed. I trust the Speaker will order the Doorkeeper to open the windows, so that we may have some air.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will consult the comfort of members so far as he can under the rules.

THOMAS J. D. FULLER. No excuse offered.

JAMES GAMBLE. No excuse offered.

JOSHUA R. GIDDINGS. No excuse offered.

Mr. HENN. I move that Mr. HAMILTON be excused. He is at home, in Maryland, very sick.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW J. HARLAN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state that he saw Mr. HARLAN yesterday evening, and that he was quite unwell. In the opinion of the Chair he ought to be excused.

Mr. PRINGLE. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMPSON W. HARRIS.

Mr. DOWDELL. Mr. HARRIS has been sick for two or three weeks, and has not been in the House for two or three days. It is my opinion that he is absent on account of sickness. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was not agreed to.

ISAAC E. HESTER.

Mr. RUSSELL. I move that Mr. HESTER be excused, as he is absent attending at the sick bed of his mother.

The motion was agreed to.

CLEMENT S. HILL. No excuse offered.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with; I am satisfied that no good result is to grow out of this call. We are pressed with heat, as the doors and windows are closed. I hope the House will agree to my motion.

The question was taken; and, upon division, there were—ayes 24, noes not counted.

So the House refused to suspend all further proceedings under the call.

JUNIUS HILLYER. No excuse offered.

THEODORE G. HUNT. No excuse offered.

COLIN M. INGERSOLL. No excuse offered.

DANIEL T. JONES. No excuse offered.

The motion was not agreed to.

JAMES H. LANE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. My colleague, Mr. LANE, is detained at home on account of sickness in his family, beyond all doubt. I move, therefore, that he be excused.

Mr. HENDRICKS. He is quite unwell himself.

The motion was agreed to.

MILTON S. LATHAM.

Mr. DOWDELL. Mr. LATHAM informed me yesterday that he was afflicted with chills and fever, and I presume that he is now absent on account of ill health. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN LETCHER. No excuse offered.

JAMES J. LINDLEY. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM D. LINDSLEY. No excuse offered.

CALEB LYON.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. LYON has not been in attendance here for many weeks; and I have understood that he was sick at home. I trust he will be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES A. McDUGALL. No excuse offered.

DANIEL MACE.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that my colleague [Mr. MACE] be excused, for the reason that, for a number of days past—more than a week, indeed—two of his children have been sick. Although their health is improving, yet, in consequence of the fatigue which his wife has suffered incident to their sickness, Major MACE has been kept at home every minute of time when his duty did not imperatively require him to be here. I move, therefore, that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

ORSAMUS B. MATTESON.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Mr. MATTESON has been sick last night and to-day. I move that he be excused.

A MEMBER. What is the matter with him?

Mr. WASHBURNE. He was taken sick last night, and is confined to the house to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

ANDREW OLIVER. No excuse offered.

PHILLIP PHILLIPS. No excuse offered.

PAULUS POWELL. No excuse offered.

JAMES T. PRATT. No excuse offered.

CHARLES READY. No excuse offered.

DAVID R. REESE. Excused.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If everybody is to be excused, there is no use in calling the roll; and I therefore move that all further proceedings in the call be dispensed with.

The motion was not agreed to.

WILLIAM A. RICHARDSON.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that my colleague be excused, as he has been confined to the house several days by sickness.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I wish to inquire of the Chair if gentlemen present themselves in the gallery and are excused, whether it relieves them from attendance upon the House?

The SPEAKER. Certainly it does.

Mr. JONES. Then I trust the House will not excuse them.

GEORGE READ RIDDLE. No excuse offered.

DAVID RITCHIE. No excuse offered.

THOMAS RITCHEY. No excuse offered.

SIGN H. ROGERS.

Mr. SHAW. I move that my colleague be excused. I know he has been in very poor health for some time past, and I also know that Mrs. Rogers was very much indisposed a few days since. I have no doubt he is absent on account of ill health.

The motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL L. RUSSELL. No excuse offered.

RUSSELL SAGE.

Mr. ROWE. I move that my colleague be excused. He went home a few days ago upon important business, and he is expected back every day.

The motion was disagreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

ORIGEN S. SEYMOUR. No excuse offered.

JACOB SHOWER. No excuse offered.

GEORGE A. SIMMONS. No excuse offered.

OTHO R. SINGLETON. No excuse offered.

CHARLES SKELTON.

Mr. STRATTON. My colleague has been in ill health almost the entire session, and I move that he be excused.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. SKELTON has been here to-day, and went off when we commenced calling the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman was in the House after the committee rose.

The motion was not agreed to.

HESTOR L. STEVENS. No excuse offered.

CHRISTIAN M. STRAUB. No excuse offered.

JOHN J. TAYLOR.

Mr. LILLY. I am requested by Mr. TAYLOR, who is in the gallery, to say that, in the condition of his health, he thought it very improper to remain here, and he therefore went home. [Laughter, and cries of "Order!"]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I hope Mr. TAYLOR will be excused. We have set the precedent in the case of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. REESE,] and I think every man who makes his appearance in the gallery should be excused. I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the Doorkeeper be instructed to admit the gentlemen who are in attendance outside. The only object of the call is to secure a quorum, and I hope they will be admitted.

Mr. MCNAIR. I submit that the motion of the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that, as connected with the call of the House, it is in order to make such a motion.

The question was taken; and Mr. JONES's motion was agreed to.

The members in attendance were accordingly admitted.

The call then proceeded.

ANDREW TRACY.

Mr. SABIN. Mr. TRACY is sick, and utterly unable to be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. TWEED.

Mr. STUART, of Michigan. I move that Mr. TWEED be excused. He has been suffering from indisposition for some days. He has been in his seat occasionally, but I presume he is unable to be here to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

GEORGE VAIL. No excuse offered.

JOSHUA VANSANT. No excuse offered.

HIRAM WALDRIDGE. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM A. WALKER. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL H. WALLEY. No excuse offered.

MIKE WALSH. No excuse offered.

EDWARD A. WARREN.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I move that my colleague be excused. He was called home by sickness in his family. I have heard from him lately, and he says that the sickness in his family still continues.

The motion was agreed to.

ISRAEL WASHBURN. No excuse offered.

DANIEL WELLS.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move that my colleague be excused. He was unwell; and not thinking that we would sit so late, started off to Piney Point to get some fresh air.

The motion was not agreed to.

JOHN WENTWORTH. No excuse offered.

JOHN WHEELER. No excuse offered.

DANIEL B. WRIGHT. No excuse offered.

HENDRICK B. WRIGHT.

Mr. TROUT. My colleague has been unwell for the last two or three days.

Mr. PRELPS. He is at the door. Although unwell, he came up to the House in order to make a quorum. I move that he be admitted.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House he has the right to come in.

RICHARD YATES.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I move that my colleague be excused. He is unwell, and not able to be here.

The motion was agreed to.

FELIX K. ZOLLICOFFER. No excuse offered.

The SPEAKER. Eighty-one gentlemen have answered to their names. As the House is aware, quite a number have come in since the call by permission. If it be the pleasure of gentlemen, the Chair will ascertain whether a quorum be present.

[Cries of "Agreed!"]

The SPEAKER, (after counting the members present.) There are ninety-one members present, and it is now for the House to determine what order it will take in the matter.

Mr. FAULKNER. Is it in order to move that we take a recess until eight o'clock this evening?

The SPEAKER. That motion can only be entertained by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I object to it. And I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move, and I think the motion will have precedence, that the Sergeant-at-Arms be ordered to bring the absent members to the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion first made is first in order.

[Here a message was received from the President of the United States, by SYDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

A bill to aid the Territory of Minnesota in the construction of a railroad therein; and

An act to establish the offices of surveyor general of New Mexico, Kansas, and Nebraska, to grant donations to actual settlers therein, and for other purposes.]

[A message was also received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

An act to create and provide a pension for David Towle;

An act making appropriations to defray the expenses of the Cayuse war;

An act to increase the salaries of the executive and judicial officers in Oregon, New Mexico, Washington, Utah, and Minnesota; and

An act for the relief of Pamela Brown, the widow of Major General Jacob Brown, late of the United States Army, deceased.

Also, that the Senate have passed bills of the following titles:

An act to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850;

An act for the relief of Magdalena Van Ness, widow of Cornelius Van Ness, deceased; and

An act making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

In which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.]

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes 32, noes not counted.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to make a motion, in all candor, to the House: and that is, that the House excuse me from further attendance to-day.

A MEMBER. For what reason?

Mr. HAVEN. Because I am fatigued and tired out.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

So, Mr. HAVEN was excused.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be sent for the absentees.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to a point of order: whether less than a majority of the House can excuse a member from attendance?

The SPEAKER. There is no question about the power of the House to excuse a gentleman from attendance at this time. It is possible they have the power to excuse him altogether. The question, however, does not arise at this time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I wish to say that Mr. RITCHIE, of Ohio, was unwell, and has been in his bed from ten o'clock in the morning till four o'clock this afternoon. A messenger was sent for him, and he got out of his bed, and is now here. I move that he be excused from further attendance.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks pardon of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. ABERCROMBIE]; but another motion was submitted by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. KNOX demanded the yeas and nays.

Only thirteen gentlemen rising in the affirmative, they were not ordered.

The question was then taken; and, upon a division, there were—ayes twenty-eight—noes not counted.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to make this suggestion. It seems that we have placed ourselves in a dilemma. We are all of us anxious that the business transacted in Committee of the Whole House should be reported to the House, and there acted upon. We are all anxious that nothing should be lost by the time that has been spent in committee to-day. I again state, there is no doubt that the good sense of the House on Monday will put us in a condition where we can act upon the business which has transpired in committee to-day. I trust that we will now adjourn, leaving it to the good sense of the House on Monday to act upon this business.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is this debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I move, then, that we adjourn.

The question was taken; and, upon a division,

there were—ayes 39, noes 43.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. ABERCROMBIE], that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to hunt up, take into custody, and bring before the bar, the absent members. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAIGE. If that motion is debatable, I want to oppose it.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable, according to the practice of the House.

Mr. McMULLIN. I appeal to the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw his motion. He is not, perhaps, aware of the fact, that if his motion were agreed to, it would subject those gentlemen who are absent to inconvenience, and to a fine to be imposed by the House.

Several MEMBERS. That is the thing we want.

Mr. CRAIGE. I desire to oppose the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

[Cries of "Order!" "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. To a very limited extent the Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is debatable.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I withdraw my motion.

Several MEMBERS. I renew it.

Mr. HOUSTON. The object of all of us is not to go through with a call of the House if we can get a quorum. But we have been almost this entire session of Congress struggling to get a quorum here to do business. Now, as several members have come into the Hall since the Chair counted the House, I ask the Speaker would it not be competent for him to ascertain whether there is a quorum present, so as to enable us to transact business? Several gentlemen have come in since.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the Chair ascertain whether there is a quorum present?

[Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"]

After a count, the Speaker announced that there were eighty-four members in their seats.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I trust there will be no further obstacle interposed to the continuance of this call till we shall have got a quorum. I hope the Sergeant-at-Arms will be dispatched to bring in the absent members.

[Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to dispatch the Sergeant-at-Arms for the absentees.

Mr. CRAIGE. I ask the Chair what sort of propriety will it be in the House to send the Sergeant-at-Arms after one portion of the members, after having given permission to another portion to come in? We attempted this same miserable farce once before, at the commencement of the session. We then dispatched the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in the absentees; and gentlemen who acted in good faith, and were compelled to vote against excusing absentees, afterwards saw the doors thrown open, and members allowed to come in without question. I do not believe this is fair or just.

Mr. McMULLIN. I appeal to gentlemen to put a stop to this call.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is this discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. Discussion is in order, if gentlemen confine themselves to the question pending, which is as to the propriety of sending the Sergeant-at-Arms for members.

Mr. McMULLIN. There were only some seventy members present when the House was counted. Since that time some ten or twelve members have come in—

A Voice. Twenty.

Mr. McMULLIN. Some fifteen or twenty members have come in since then.

Mr. TAYLOR. Well, I propose that we hear their excuses.

Mr. CRAIGE. If we were to send the Sergeant-at-Arms after those now absent, having allowed some twenty members to come in, I think it would be acting discourteously towards these absentees. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDRICKS. I rise to a question of order. Is this matter debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is in order so far as the gentleman has gone?

Mr. CRAIGE. I think it advisable that we should pass these private bills. And if there be a majority of the House on Monday willing to pass them, we can pass them without any difficulty.

Mr. McMULLIN. I again appeal to the House to dispense with all further proceedings in the call, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was put; and there being, on a division of the question—ayes 40, noes 40,

Mr. FAULKNER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 51, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Barksdale, Barry, Benson, Bridges, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Craige, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dowdell, Eastman, Fenton, Goodrich, Greenwood, Hendricks, Henn, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, McCulloch, McMullin, McQueen, John G. Miller, Morrison, Mordecai Oliver, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Reese, Riddle, Robbins, Rowe, Sabiu, Shannon, Shaw, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, George W. Smyth, John L. Taylor, Nathaniel G. Taylor, Thurston, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Tappan Wentworth, and Witte—54.

NAYS.—Messrs. Aiken, Appleton, Belcher, Chrisman, Cobb, Crocker, Edgerton, English, Faulkner, Florence, Aaron Hartan, Johnson, Kurtz, Lilly, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Millson, Nichols, Packer, Pennington, Phelps, Pringle, Rufin, Russell, Sapp, Stratton, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Upham, and Hendrick B. Wright—34.

So the motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at thirty-five minutes past six) adjourned until Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, July 24, 1854.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

ATMOSPHERIC TELEGRAPH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. ROCKWELL to fill the vacancy in the committee on the memorial of Ithiel S. Richardson, in reference to his plan for an atmospheric telegraph, occasioned by the resignation of Mr. EVERETT.

PENAL CODES OF EUROPE.

Mr. ALLEN. I wish to propose to the Senate to print an extra number of Senate Document, No. 68. It is a very important document not only for the use of the Senate, but for the public at large. It is a communication from Mr. Sanford, late chargé d'affaires at Paris, giving information as to the penal codes of Europe.

The PRESIDENT. What number of extra copies does the Senator propose?

Mr. ALLEN. I believe each Senator now has one. Each should certainly have six or eight; and therefore six hundred copies seems to me to be small enough. The type is now in form, and hence the additional cost will be merely the expense of press-work and paper.

Mr. CASS. This is a very important document which has been collected with a great deal of labor and research, containing the penal codes of Europe, together with the peculiar administration of France. It contains information which cannot be got otherwise. It will be money well applied for the public use to appropriate a sum for this printing. But I do not think the number moved by the honorable Senator is sufficient. I do not think we can better dispose of the public funds, than to expend a small amount for the distribution of this information among the people.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Why not make it five thousand?

Mr. ALLEN. I have no objection to that. The type is now in form and it will not cost much.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island, to make it five thousand. After we have gone to the expense of composition, the extra press-work and paper will amount to very little.

Mr. ALLEN. Then I move that five thousand copies be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. PETTIT'S REMARKS ON MR. BENTON'S LETTER.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate to allow me a few minutes to reply to a letter which has been in circulation in the papers. I hope there will be no objection.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the Senator will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTIT. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence and attention of Senators for a few moments, while I call to their notice a most remarkable letter, which is going the rounds of the newspapers. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, Saturday, June 17, 1854.

SIR: Your letter has just been received, informing me that Mr. PETTIT, in a public speech in your town, stated that I was the first man to break the Missouri compromise—that I had a law passed by Congress, annexing to the State a large territory, &c. Sir, your Senator is a great liar and a dirty dog, falsifying public history for a criminal purpose. The Missouri compromise line was not violated in annexing the Platte country. Both parties to the compromise agreed to it, the free States being unanimous. There were not even yeas and nays upon it. The General Assembly of Missouri requested it. We applied to the members personally and individually for their consent, which they gave; and without their consent no movement was made, or would have been made. The journals prove this. There is a full account of it in my "Thirty Years View," in the chapter headed "Extension of the Missouri Boundary"—also in my late Nebraska speech it is briefly alluded to, and that is probably all that the dirty dog knew about it, and which he falsified to answer his criminal purposes. I send you some of my Nebraska speeches, and I hope you will find the chapter in the "Thirty Years," and see that this change in the line was asked as a boon from the northern States, and by them granted in a spirit of kindness, and in a way to prove that they would not suffer anti-slavery feelings to prevent them from doing an act of great favor to the State of Missouri, and for which all Missouri was thankful at the time, and I am still. Mr. PETTIT must feel that his cause is villainous when he can thus stand up before his constituents to falsify public history, and to justify his own violation of the Missouri compromise, by telling a lie upon me.

Respectfully,

THOMAS H. BENTON.

JAMES HOWE, Esq., Lafayette, Indiana.

This letter is as ridiculous as it is strange—as absurd as it is low, coarse, and vulgar. If Mr. BENTON can make any one believe that I am a liar, he will have done that which no one who intimately knows me does, can, or will believe. I have always sought after and endeavored to speak the truth in all things. I love her name, cherish her form, and adore her substance, and I would not willingly pervert or pollute either. He who is devoid of sincerity and truth, is without the necessary helm to guide him safely over the dangerous sea of life, and will inevitably become a prey to counter winds and currents, and must strand upon its shoals or wreck upon its rocks.

Mr. President, if I do not establish, beyond a cavil, that Colonel BENTON is a wicked and malicious falsifier of truth, or an imbecile and dotard, I will, in all future time, submit to the epithets he has applied to me.

On the 12th of June last I was at home, Lafayette, Indiana, and made a speech to a large collection of my immediate constituents and neighbors. The speech turned principally upon the Kansas and Nebraska act, and the Missouri compromise. I showed that the act of 1820 was not the real compromise or terms upon which Missouri came into the Union; but that it was Mr. Clay's resolution, a year afterwards, that was entitled to that honor or appellation. I showed that the act of 1820 was not a compromise or compact in the sense in which its friends contended for it; but that it was a mere act of Congress, subject, as any other act, to repeal by the present or any other Congress, as, in their judgment, expediency should justify or require.

BENTON's speech of April 25, 1854, in the House of Representatives, had been largely circulated and was much appealed to then; and those who heretofore had been heard a thousand times to say that he was a thief of money stolen in North Carolina, and secreted in his cravat, and that he had, under the pretense of an honorable duel, committed a cold-blooded murder, that of Lucas, and that he had been guilty of all the crimes known to the black catalogue of infamy, were now the loudest and most boisterous in singing his praise and referring to his speech. To show that Mr. BENTON was not reliable, and that he could not safely be followed, and that the act of 1820 was not a sacred compact that could not be altered, changed or violated, I said that Colonel BENTON had, in 1836, sixteen years after its passage, procured the passage of another act of Congress changing, altering, repealing, abrogating and violating, pro tanto, the act of 1820, called the Missouri compromise, and I read the following act and proclamation:

An act to extend the western boundary of the State of Missouri to the Missouri river.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when the Indian title to all the lands lying between the State of Missouri and the Missouri river shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be hereby ceded to the State of Missouri, and the western boundary of said State shall be then extended to the Missouri river, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands, and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished, nor shall it take effect until the State of Missouri shall have assented to the provisions of this act.

Approved June 7, 1836.

(United States Statutes, vol. 5, p. 32.)

Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, under the act of June 7, 1836:

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas, by an act of Congress of the 7th of June, 1836, it was enacted that when the Indian title to all the lands lying between the State of Missouri and the Missouri river should be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said land should be ceded by the said act to the State of Missouri, and the western boundary of said State should be then extended to the Missouri river, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands, and of disposing of the same; and whereas, it was in and by the said act provided that the same should not take effect until the President should, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands had been extinguished, nor until the State of Missouri should have assented to the provisions of the said act. And whereas, an act was passed by the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, on the 16th of December, 1836, expressing the assent of the said State to the provisions of the said act of Congress, a copy of which act of the General Assembly, duly authenticated, has been officially communicated to this Government, and is now on file in the Department of State:

Now, therefore, I, Martin Van Buren, President of the United States of America, do, by this my proclamation, declare and make known, that the Indian title to all the said lands lying between the State of Missouri and the Missouri river, has been extinguished, and that the said act of Congress of the 7th June, 1836, takes effect from the date hereof.

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, this 28th day of March, A. D. 1837, and of the Independence of the United States of America the sixty-first.

MARTIN VAN BUREN.

By the President:

JOHN FORSYTH, Secretary of State.

(United States Statutes, vol. 5, Appendix.)

This was so plain a contradiction of his present course and late speech that it was a damper on his new friends and admirers; and one of them, Mr. James Horn, who was, and still is, a Whig, not knowing the history of this matter, wrote to BENTON for light, and to know, I suppose, if he could not make some apology for this glaring and absurd inconsistency. BENTON, goaded and maddened at having his tergiversations and contradictory course and actions thus brought to light, and he exposed to the gaze and scorn of all honest and intelligent men, wrote the above letter, which would not be creditable to a lunatic in an asylum or the guiltiest felon in a penitentiary.

It will be seen that he admits in this letter all I charged him with; that is, he procured the passage of the first act that violated, changed, or repealed the act of 1820, by taking a part of this free territory and making it slave by act of Congress in adding it to the State of Missouri, whose constitution established and protected slavery, thus creating slavery in territory larger than two of the small States, by act of Congress. It did not leave it to the people as the Kansas and Nebraska act does, but forced slavery upon them by law. This is the only instance where slavery has been extended over free territory since the organization of this Government; and this was done by act of Congress procured by Colonel BENTON, and not by the people.

In this letter, Colonel BENTON, unfortunately for himself and his consistency, (for I had never read a line in his work before,) refers to his Thirty Years, and, on turning to the first volume of that work, at page 626, I find a chapter headed "Extension of the Missouri Question," which is as follows:

"This was a measure of great moment to Missouri, and full of difficulties in itself, and requiring a double process to accomplish it—an act of Congress to extend the boundary, and an Indian treaty to remove the Indians to a new home. It was to extend the existing boundary of the State so as to include a triangle between the existing line and the Missouri river, large enough to form seven counties of the first class, and fertile enough to sustain the densest population. The difficulties were threefold:

"1. To make still larger a State which was already one of the largest in the Union.

"2. To remove Indians from a possession which had just been assigned to them in perpetuity.

"3. To alter the Missouri compromise line in relation to slave territory, and thereby convert free soil into slave soil. "The two first difficulties were serious—the third formidable; and, in the then state of the public mind in relation to slave territory, this enlargement of a great slave State, and by converting free soil into slave, and impairing the compromise line, was an almost impossible undertaking, and in no way to be accomplished without a generous co-operation from the members of the free States. They were a majority in the House of Representatives, and no act of Congress could pass for altering the compromise line without their aid: they were equal in the Senate, where no treaty for the removal of the Indians could be ratified except by a concurrence of two thirds—and all these difficulties to be overcome at a time when Congress was inflamed with angry debates upon abolition petitions, transmission of incendiary publications, imputed designs to abolish slavery; and the appearance of the circulating article in South Carolina entitled the 'Crisis,' announcing a southern convention and a secession, if certain northern States did not suppress the abolition societies within their limits within a limited time.

"In the face of all these discouraging obstacles the two Missouri Senators, Messrs. Benton and Linn, commenced their operations. The first step was to procure a bill for the alteration of the compromise line and the extension of the boundary; it was obtained from the Judiciary Committee, reported by Mr. John M. Clayton, of Delaware, and passed the Senate without material opposition; it went to the House of Representatives, and found there no serious opposition to its passage. A treaty was negotiated with the Sac and Fox Indians, to whom the country had been assigned, and was ratified by the requisite two thirds; and this, besides doing an act of generous justice to the State of Missouri, was the noble answer which northern members gave to the imputed design of abolishing slavery in the States actually extending it! and by an addition equal in extent to such States as Delaware and Rhode Island; and by its fertility equal to one of the third class of States; and this accomplished by the extraordinary process of altering a compromise line intended to be perpetual, and the reconversion of soil which had been slave, and made free, back again from free to slave; and all this when, had there been the least disposition to impede the proper extension of a slave State, there were plausible reasons enough to cover an opposition, in the serious objections to enlarging a State already the largest in the Union—to removing Indians again from a home to which they had just been removed under a national pledge of no more removals—and to disturbing the compromise line of 1820, on which the Missouri question had been settled; and the line between free and slave territory, fixed for national reasons, to remain forever. The author of this view was part and parcel of all that transaction—remembers well the anxiety of the State to obtain the extension—her joy at obtaining it—the gratitude which all felt to the northern members, without whose aid it could not have been done, and whose magnanimous assistance, under such trying circumstances, he now records as one of the proofs (this work contains many others) of the willingness of the non-slaveholding part of the Union to be just and generous to their slaveholding brethren, even in disregard of cherished prejudices and offensive eliminations. It was the second great proof to this effect at this identical session, the ratification of the Georgia Cherokee treaty being the other."

In this extract it will be seen that Colonel BENTON boasts of, and prides himself upon, the accomplishment of this very thing, and of driving the Indians from this very territory that had then but lately been ceded and promised by treaty to them forever, and had greatly added to the then largest State in the Union. One would be led to believe, from reading this extract, that he regarded this alteration and repeal of the Missouri compromise as the brightest, most dazzling, and triumphant achievement of his thirty year senatorial career. But I desire to call attention to a few extracts from his Kansas and Nebraska speech of the 25th of April last, to show his proneness to falsehood, the wickedness of his heart, or the imbecility of his head. On page first he says:

"Mr. Chairman, if any bill to impair the Missouri compromise line of 1820 had been brought into this House by a member from a slave State, or under the administration of a President elected from a slave State, I should have deemed it my duty to have met it at the threshold, and to have made the motion which the parliamentary law prescribes for the repulse of subjects which are not fit to be considered; I should have moved its rejection at the first reading."

This will be seen to be utterly false, and a mere pretense; for the bill of 1836, that he admits and boasts of having procured to be brought in to impair the Missouri compromise line of 1820, was brought in by the Hon. JOHN M. CLAYTON, then, as now, an honored Senator from Delaware, a slave State; and Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, a slave State, was President of the United States. What beautiful and truthful consistency Mr. BENTON is caught in here! Again, he says:

"I had come into political life upon that compromise. I had stood upon it above thirty years, and intended to stand upon it to the end—solitary and alone, if need be.

To show that this is utterly false, I need only refer to the above extract from his "Thirty Years"—the act of 1836, and the following extract from the same speech, taken from page eight:

"The same votes gave us the Platte country; seven fine counties added to the State! and that by altering the compromise line to include it, and actually converting that fine region from free soil to slave soil. Northern votes enabled it to be done: northern votes altered above an hundred miles of the compromise line for our benefit, upon our request; and I will never be ungrateful to the North for it, nor requite it by a breach of the line to their prejudice. And how did we obtain the northern votes which were necessary for all these measures—the appropriations and treaties for all these Indian removals, and for that alteration of the compromise line which gave us the beautiful Platte country? How did the Missouri delegation of that day—the most amiable and talented Dr. Linn and myself, in the Senate, and General Ashley in the House—how did we obtain that great boon for our State? Did we get these votes by belching Abolitionism against the North? No! no! we got them by appealing to the justice, and the fraternal feelings of our northern brethren, and to which we never appealed once in vain—who, in the last hard trial to get the Cherokees out of Georgia, gave us fourteen affirmative votes to balance seven negatives from the South, and saved the treaty by one vote. And I, who was part of all these transactions, accustomed to solicit northern votes, and express thanks for them, will not now return them evil for good by attempting to deprive them of their share of a compromise which we imposed upon them."

He says "he will not now return evil for good, by attempting to deprive them (the North) of their share of a compromise which we (the South) imposed upon them." How very kind! After he has taken the "beautiful Platte country, seven counties of the first class, equal in size to two of the small States, and in richness of soil to a third class State," and, in fact, all that was once valuable and desirable, and converted it from free to slave territory, he does not now wish to deprive the North of their share. But he says he did not get this territory added to Missouri "by belching Abolitionism against the North;" that is, not by an open, bold, manly, and statesmanlike act, but with the still, sly, cunning, and stealthy action of the thief in the night, and with the serpent's guile in his heart, a lie on his tongue, and the deceptive but false smile of friendship upon his face; as Satan approached Eve, so BENTON approached the northern members of Congress in 1836, and he got them unanimously.

On page second of his speech, in speaking of the compromises of the Constitution, the ordinance of 1787, and the Missouri compromise, he says:

"Thus, all these compromises are settlements of existing questions, and intended to be perpetual. They are all, then, of equal moral validity."

If this be a moral question, and it is a moral wrong to alter or repeal the act of 1820, how much more moral guilt and turpitude rests on Colonel BENTON for having so corrupted all of Congress as to get an unanimous vote, as he says in his letter, for his bill of 1836, than on the friends of the late measure, who were only able to get a small majority, and, therefore, have a less sin to answer for?

In this letter, BENTON says I falsify public history to justify my violation of the Missouri compromise. It would be well and very gratifying to his new friends if he would point out what particle of public history I have falsified. Surely it is not his "Thirty Years." But I needed no justification for a repeal of the act of 1820, but the conviction of my own judgment that it was proper and expedient to do so. It was a mere act of legislation, and was repealable at the will and pleasure of Congress. According to BENTON it was no compact or agreement, but was forced and imposed by the South upon the North.

He says it was resisted at the time by the North—acquiesced in afterwards, and thereby they became bound by it. Beautiful logic. A robs B; B resists at the time, but, for want of strength, acquiesces and suffers his money to be taken. When B gets strength and assistance he demands of A a restoration. A says, true you resisted the robbery at the time, but, for want of strength, you acquiesced, and that makes the transaction a fair one and the money is mine! There is no evidence that the North acquiesced in this measure, for Mr. BENTON says that the North were unanimous for its repeal in 1836, and the passage of BENTON's repealing act of that year was moved in the House of Representatives by a member from a free State, Mr. Everett, of Vermont. The late repeal of the residue of that measure was brought in by a Senator from a free State, and I, as a northern man, and Senator from a free State, demanded its repeal, because it was unequal, unjust, and degrading to the North. It, in substance, said to the North, you are not capable of establishing your own institutions north of 36° 30'. You do not know what will be best for you, and we will there bind you and fix your institutions for you; but the gentlemen of the South know what instructions they want and what are proper for them, and they may go south of that line and control themselves. This created an invidious distinction, and it is not strange that northern men should have been most anxious and active for its repeal and abrogation. On page two of his speech, he says:

"The third one—that of the Missouri anti-slavery line—was not made upon agreement. It was imposed by votes—by the South upon the North—resisted by the North at the time—acquiesced in afterwards: and by that acquiescence became a binding covenant between both parties; and the more so on the South because she imposed it. I repeat, it was an imposition, not a compact."

"This brings us to the question of repeal, or abrogation of these compromises. The one in the Constitution cannot be got rid of without an amendment to that instrument; and is, therefore, beyond the reach of Congress. The other two, being in the form of statutes, are subjects of legislation, and legally repealable by Congress."

The power to repeal is here plainly and fully admitted by Mr. BENTON. Hear with what ease and directness he contradicts his "Thirty Years." On page four of his speech he says:

"I have stood upon the Missouri compromise for thirty years."

And again, on the same page, he says that the Legislature of Missouri, in 1847, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, That the peace, permanency, and welfare of our national Union depend upon a strict adherence to the letter and spirit of the eighth section of the act of Congress of the United States entitled 'An act to authorize the people of the Missouri Territory to form a constitution and State government, and for the admission of such State into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to prohibit slavery in certain territories,' approved March 6, 1820."

This must have been a withering rebuke to BENTON, after having, in 1836, procured the repeal of that act pro tanto, and not strictly adhered to either its "letter or spirit;" and I do not wonder that, after this severe chastisement from his State, and that a slave State, that he should dread to attempt a second repeal, as the whipped child dreads the rod.

Mr. President, can any man say that I did BENTON a wrong, or incorrectly cited history? but, on the contrary, must not all say that I charged him with nothing more than is true, and only what he has recorded in history, and claims for himself? This being the case, to what are we to look as the reason of his writing so beastly a letter? We can only ascribe it to the native depravity of a corrupt, malicious, and wicked heart, or to the frenzied ravings of a brain made a barren waste and a mental and moral chaotic wilderness by the withering but just hand of God laid upon it in punishment for black and numerous precedent crimes.

When Mr. PETTIT uttered these words: "If I do not establish beyond civil that Colonel BENTON is a wicked and malicious falsifier of truth, or an imbecile and dotard, I will in all future time!"

Mr. MASON said: Mr. President, I, with very great reluctance, interfere with any gentleman's desire to make a personal explanation; but, without any reference to the parties concerned in this matter, I submit to the honorable Senator, as a matter of precedent, whether it would be right or expedient in the Senate for a member of the Senate to reflect in the manner he is manifestly about to reflect on a member of the other House?

Mr. PETTIT. In reply, I have only to say this: that Colonel BENTON charges me with things that, if true, render me totally unfit for the association of gentlemen and Senators. I ask the indulgence of the Senate, and I appeal to that Senator to allow me to proceed.

Mr. MASON. I rise to a question of order purely. The assault which the honorable Senator says has been made upon him, was made through the public journals, as he states. Now, I submit as a question of order—

Mr. PETTIT. I had the assent of the Senate to go on. The Senator cannot make his point of order now, as he did not make it before.

Mr. MASON. The Senate, I take it for granted, gave the assent. I certainly did—without the knowledge of the kind of remark in which the Senator conceived himself authorized to indulge. It is because of the tenor of his remarks that I think it right to make my point of order. I again, without any reference whatever to either of the gentlemen who are involved in this, submit that it is not in order in the Senate to reflect upon the motives or to use injurious language applied to a member of the other House.

Mr. PETTIT. I hope the Senate will allow me to proceed. They have once given me leave, and I do not think I ought to be interrupted now.

Mr. MASON. I must insist on the point of order as a matter of propriety between the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. STUART in the Chair.) The history of this matter, as the present occupant of the chair understands, is, that the Senate gave unanimous consent to the Senator from Indiana to make a personal explanation.

Mr. PETTIT. I am making it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that, in making a personal explanation, the same rules of order apply as in any other debate; and, therefore, in making a personal explanation a Senator has not the right to reflect on a member of the other House.

Mr. PETTIT. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I was not referring to his [Mr. BENTON's] conduct as a member of the other House; I was referring to his conduct out of doors; not as a member of the House. I was not referring to anything done by him in the House, nor as a member one way or the other. I did not refer to him as a member of the other House, nor to anything which he had done as a member. I was not, therefore referring to a member of the other House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What the Senator from Indiana has said, the present occupant of the Chair did not hear, as he was not in the Senate Chamber. The Chair merely sustained the point of order raised by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. PETTIT. That is what I object to. I have not said, and am not going to say, anything of him as a member of the other House, or as a member of Congress; but I was speaking, and am about to speak, of what has been done and said by him out of the House, and not as a member of that body. I have read the letter on which I wish to comment.

Mr. MASON. It is very true, I doubt not, that the Senator had not proceeded sufficiently far in his remarks for the Senate to form a judgment as to precisely what he was about to say. As far as I understood him, there were no reflections cast on a member of the other House for any act of his in that House, but they were reflections and epithets applied to a member of the other House, and applied by a Senator in his place in the Senate. That is the point of order that I raise.

Mr. PETTIT. I reply to him simply as a citizen for an act done as a citizen. I do not refer to him as a member of the other House in any remarks of mine.

Mr. MASON. But still he is known to this House as a member of the other House.

Mr. PETTIT. I think I am in order. I had the leave of the Senate to proceed; I am not saying anything of a member of the other House; and I should like to know in what I am out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has already stated to the Senator and to the Senate, that what the Senator from Indiana had said, the present occupant of the Chair was not advised of, not being in the Senate at the time. He therefore, simply decides the point of order, that it is not in order, in a personal explanation, to refer to a member of the other House acting as such or to reflect on his character.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not propose to do any such thing, and when I do, the Senator can call me to order.

Mr. MASON. Do I understand the Chair as allowing to be in order, reflections on a member of the other House, for an action not done in the House?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair intends to decide, and does decide, on his recollection of the rule, that the rule is limited to what a member of the other House says or does, while engaged in the business of the House, and that if out of doors he sees fit to say or write anything in regard to a Senator, he may be alluded to by that Senator as any other citizen of the country may be.

Mr. PETTIT continued his remarks. When he reached that point of his speech where he said: "That is, he did not, by an open, bold, manly, statesmanlike act, but with the still, sly, cunning, and stealthy action of the thief in the night, and with the serpent's guile in his heart and a lie on his tongue."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART.) The Chair thinks the Senator is not in order.

Mr. PETTIT. I am not speaking of what he has done now, but of what he did in 1836.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No matter. The Chair thinks that in this mode of discussion it is not in order, to use language of that character towards any member or a citizen.

Mr. PETTIT. I ask leave of the Senate to finish my remarks. They are but few. Will the Chair put it to the Senate whether I shall go on or not?

Mr. CASS. I would suggest to the Senator, that in his defense of himself, he had better pass by such words as those which he has just used. For one, I prefer not to hear them. I would rather he would pass them by and go on with his other remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senator be allowed to proceed. This is a pretty severe contest, unquestionably.

Mr. PETTIT. He pitched into me without cause, and I want to pay him back. I always pay my debts.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senator from Indiana be permitted to proceed. It is nothing more than justice that he should have the opportunity to defend his own character from the assaults made on him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will, with great pleasure, submit the question to the Senate; "will the Senate allow the Senator from Indiana to proceed out of order?"

Mr. PETTIT. That was not in the motion.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the Chair decides it in that way, I shall appeal from the decision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair decided the Senator to be out of order in the language he had used. The Senator from Arkansas moved that the Senator from Indiana have leave to proceed. The Chair will, with pleasure, submit the whole question to the Senate, if it is desired.

Mr. GWIN. The motion is that the Senator from Indiana shall be permitted to proceed, and the Chair adds to that "out of order." That is not the question before the Senate.

Mr. MASON. Why, Mr. President, though I did not hear the last remarks of the Senator, I understood the Chair to decide they were not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the decision of the Chair.

Mr. MASON. Then I submit that, if after that decision, a motion be made to allow the Senator to proceed, of course it is that he be allowed to proceed out of order. The proper course will be, I presume, for any gentleman who dissents from the Chair, to appeal from the judgment of the Chair.

Mr. BADGER. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the rule of the Senate and the parliamentary law to be, that he may submit any question of order to the Senate. He is not bound to decide it. He may submit it to the Senate. In this instance, the Chair has stated already that he will with pleasure submit the question to the Senate whether the Senator from Indiana is in order, if it be desired; or he will submit the other question that he have leave to proceed in his remarks, as the Chair thinks, out of order.

Mr. JOHNSON. I moved that he have leave to proceed.

Mr. DAWSON. I dislike to interfere with this matter, but I am one of those who have been uniformly opposed to individual differences being made the subject-matter of discussion in this body when there is no question before it justifying such a course. If we allow this to be done now, it becomes a precedent, and members of the other House who are attacked, will reply, and it will lead to unpleasantness and unkindness, and destroy, in a great degree, the character of this body.

I admit that my friend from Indiana has strong grounds to ask this favor, but I beg of him to take some other manner to lay his views before the country, without making all of us partakers in the transaction. For one, I agree with the Senator from Michigan, that it is better for the Senator from Indiana to pass over that part of his observations in which he was indulging when called to order. Of course he can publish them on his own individual responsibility. I have no feeling about that; but I submit, as a question of propriety, to my friend from Indiana, whether he ought to indulge in such language in the Senate.

Mr. PETTIT. I was nearly through, and I should like to finish. The Senate gave me unanimous consent to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, that the Senator from Indiana have leave to proceed in the same order of debate in which he was proceeding before.

Mr. DAWSON. Proceed in order.

Mr. BAYARD. I shall vote against giving permission to proceed in this case, after the decision of the Chair. I understand the Chair to have decided the remarks of the Senator from Indiana to be out of order, as reflecting personally on a member of the other branch of the Legislature. Though not professing any accurate knowledge of parliamentary rules, I have, since I have been in the body, a recollection of but one case similar to the present. That was a case in which a letter had been addressed by the correspondent of the New York Express, I think, to that paper, which was offensive to the then honorable Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Mangum.] He asked permission of the Senate to make a personal explanation. He obtained it and proceeded. He confined himself to the comments made in that paper, and made no allusion to any party whatever. He rebutted the statements, showed their falsity, and was very severe in his remarks. At the close of his remarks, after making his comments, he said that he understood the author of that communication was a member of the other House. He was instantly called to order by gentlemen all around the Senate Chamber, and he took his seat at the moment. The rule was avoided in that case in that way; but during my experience in the Senate, I have never known an instance in which a member of the House has been suffered to be attacked deliberately in this body, by a review of his conduct, either for his official action or for his action outside of Congress.

I have a further suggestion to make, and I make it in all kindness, for I admit certainly, that the honorable Senator from Indiana has the highest cause for provocation. I think the letter to which he has alluded was both undignified and imprudent, and not proper to have been written; but it was a letter written to the newspapers, and not a statement made in the House of Representatives, and, therefore, it seems to me that a correction, or a rebuttal of it, or any comments on a paper of that character made by a member of the other branch of the Legislature, ought to be in the same mode and by the same medium by which the attack was made.

With these views, I shall be constrained to vote against this motion, because I think if this course be allowed to be pursued further, (and if you allow it in one case you must in others,) the ultimate result must be the creation of a state of feeling, by embittering the members of the two Houses against each other, which will seriously impede the progress of public business.

Mr. WELLER. I ask whether, under the rules of the Senate, questions of this sort are not to be decided without debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. WELLER. Then I call for the enforcement of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, that the Senator from Indiana have leave to proceed in the order of debate in which he was engaged at the time the Chair called him to order. Senators who are in favor of that will say "aye," those opposed will say "no."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 12, noes 20; so that Mr. JOHNSON's motion was not agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON. I now move that the Senator be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. CASS. That was my idea in voting for the other motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PETTIT. It is a very difficult matter to say what is in order. It seems that a man who has been attacked cannot characterize the conduct of another with anything like what it merits. I am now not speaking of a member of the other House; but I am speaking of the acts of a Senator in 1836.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will, perhaps, allow the Chair to state the ground of his decision, and let the Senate hear it also?

Mr. PETTIT. Certainly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair entertains the opinion that it is not in order in the Senate to allude to anybody in language which is so discourteous and exceptionable as to give rise to difficulties among members here or out of doors.

Mr. PETTIT. He ought to have had that admonition before he wrote this infamous letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will allow the Chair to state, further, that the conduct of a man may be remarked on here in language sufficiently strong, without using any such opprobrious terms. Such opprobrious epithets are not in order. This is the ground of the decision. If the Senate think the Chair wrong, he will certainly have no objection to their so deciding.

Mr. PETTIT resumed and concluded his remarks.

PETITIONS.

Mr. COOPER presented certain documents in relation to the claim of Robert Johnston, to locate certain land warrants of which he is the holder, but which were irregularly assigned or transferred; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of W. Hunter, praying compensation for his services as acting Secretary of State during a part of the time when the late Daniel Webster was Secretary of State; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I present the memorial of George Frazier, a citizen of California, claiming compensation for losses sustained by the seizure of his property, false imprisonment, &c., by the Mexican authorities of Upper California from 1840 to 1843. I have delayed presenting this memorial for some time, under the hope that either by treaty, or the action of our Government through its Minister at Mexico, Mr. Frazier would receive that indemnification to which he was entitled from the late board of commissioners on Mexican claims, which so strangely neglected honest claims like this, and passed those which have since been branded with fraud and forgery. But I have now no hope except from the justice and equity of Congress, and I bring the case before this body, and move its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had passed a bill from the Senate, confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana known as the Fleurian claim.

Also, that the House had passed the following bills; which were then read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the committees as annexed:

A bill for the relief of Daniel Steenrod—Committee on Claims.

A bill for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of Brown, Russell & Co.—Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill for the relief of Gilbert C. Russell—Committee on Claims.

A bill for the relief of Thomas C. Greene—Committee on Private Land Claims.

A resolution directing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent of Portland, Maine.—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of John S. King, of Virginia.—Committee on Pensions.

A bill for the relief of the administrators of Oliver Lee, deceased.—Committee on Claims.

ESPEY'S METEOROLOGICAL REPORT.

Mr. COOPER submitted a resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to cause to be transmitted to the Senate the fourth meteorological report of Professor Espy.

NEW POST ROUTE.

Mr. SLIDELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a post route from Greensburg, Louisiana, to a point intersecting the railroad from New Orleans to Jackson, Mississippi, at or near the house of Benjamin Wiel.

Mr. SLIDELL also submitted certain documents on the subject; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the Senator will allow me to make a report.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. Are not reports in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. But it is in order for the Senator from Virginia to submit such a proposition as he does submit at any time.

Mr. HUNTER. It depends upon the majority to decide. If they prefer to receive reports, they can vote down the motion.

Mr. RUSK. It was my purpose, this morning, to ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up a bill; but as the time has otherwise been consumed, I now give notice that I shall to-morrow morning ask to take up the bill in relation to the officers of the Texas navy. I shall now vote for the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia allow certain House bills to be referred?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield for that purpose.

Various House bills were then referred as elsewhere stated. When the bill for the relief of John S. Jones and William H. Russell, surviving partners of the firm of Brown, Russell & Co. was read,

Mr. GEYER said: I hope that bill will be put upon its passage now. It has already passed the Senate twice, but failed in the House for want of time.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will be taken up at some other time. I merely gave way to allow the House bills to be referred. If we begin to act on bills, there are twenty other Senators all around who will ask to have others acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will require unanimous consent to consider that bill at this time. If objected to, it will be referred.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not ask to have it referred; but let it go on the table for the present, and it can be called up at some other time.

Mr. GEYER. Then I should prefer to have it referred, for then it can be reported on immediately.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SUMNER. I must ask the Senator from Virginia to allow me to present a memorial for the purpose of having it referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate can decide the question.

Mr. CHASE. I believe that that question is debatable. I wish to appeal to the Senator from Virginia, inasmuch as the whole of the morning hour has been consumed by the speech of the Senator from Indiana, to allow half an hour for the consideration of the regular morning business. The chairman of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office [Mr. JAMES] is very anxious to make a report, in which the whole committee feel a deep interest, and Senators all around have more or less of morning business to present. I hope we shall not proceed to the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, until at least we have half an hour for morning business.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will express their opinion upon the question.

Mr. HUNTER's motion was agreed to.

PATENTS GRANTED TO FOREIGNERS.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer a memorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the memorial will be received.

Mr. SUMNER. I present the memorial of Charles Mackenzie, a British subject, now a resident of Boston, praying that the large fees exacted of foreigners under our patent laws may be abolished, and that foreigners may take patents from the United States on the same footing as citizens.

Mr. BUTLER. A foreigner has no right to petition Congress.

Mr. SUMNER. I ask its reference to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. MASON. I object to the reception of the petition on the ground that foreigners cannot petition the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope that we shall proceed to the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. SUMNER. I understand that the question before the Senate is on the reception of the memorial.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Virginia to object to its reception, and it cannot, therefore, be received.

Mr. SUMNER. That is, at this moment.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. GEYER. Before we proceed to the consideration of the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, I move a reconsideration of the vote by which the seventh section of that bill, reported as an amendment from the committee, was agreed to. It was passed under a misunderstanding on the part of many Senators on this side of the Chamber. They supposed that we were in Committee of the Whole; but it seems that we were regarded as in the Senate. I therefore move a reconsideration of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

CIVIL AND DIPLOMATIC BILL.

The Senate then resumed the consideration of the bill from the House of Representatives, making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1855.

Mr. HUNTER. When we adjourned on Saturday the amendment which was under consideration was the one, I believe, making provision for new custom-houses, which was reported from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the first question to be upon the following amendment:

For continuing the work for a supply of water for the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $500,000.

Mr. ADAMS. It is well known that a majority of this body favor that amendment. It is equally as well known that a majority of the other branch of Congress do not favor it. Now, I submit to Senators, whether, after two or three deliberate votes have been taken in the other branch, this body will still continue to consume time with that, when they know as well as they can know anything that, according to the intention of the Constitution itself, it cannot become a law at the present time. The Constitution contemplated that no proposition should become a law unless it met with the sanction of a majority of both branches of Congress.

There have been two deliberate votes—one upon the deficiency bill, and the other upon this bill, as is known to Senators, on both of which the proposition has been rejected in the other House. Why will we add it to this bill, and send it back there to accumulate the difficulties which exist between the two Houses, when we already know that the majority of the other House are opposed to it? I shall not interpose any difficulty in the way, although I have not voted for it myself. I am always willing to be governed by the majority, and but for the fact that it is known that a majority in the other House are opposed to it, I should not oppose it now. I hope it will not be ingrafted upon this bill. We have a sufficient number of difficulties necessarily arising between the two Houses on the bill, without placing upon it a proposition to which we know a majority of the other House are opposed.

Mr. BADGER. What has passed we know. What is future we can only predict. My friend from Mississippi says this provision, he is certain, cannot become a law. Sir, that is very far from being certain.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has misapprehended my remarks. I did not say it was certain that it could not become a law. I said it was certain from two deliberate votes in the other House, that the majority were opposed to it; and if it can become a law, it will be against their deliberate judgment, and contrary to the spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. BADGER. It amounts to the same thing; and I wish to state the considerations which influence me in coming to the conclusion that we ought to put this amendment on this bill. This is not a proposition to introduce an original matter into the appropriation bill. At the last Congress we passed an act in which it was provided that water should be supplied to the cities of Washington and Georgetown, upon a plan to be approved by the President of the United States. That is a law which both Houses and the President assented to. The President, under the law, adopted a plan. It then became a plan adopted by law—the plan of the President—selected by him under the authority of this law, being of just the same legal effect and operation as if it had been inserted in the law itself. Then the President, under the authority of that law, having adopted a plan, and having commenced the execution of it, this is a proposition to make an appropriation for the purpose of carrying out the existing law. That is the state of the case now. We know very well that the appropriation cannot be made without the consent of Congress; neither can an appropriation be made for the salary of the President without the consent of Congress. But, surely, even if the House have declined twice to make the appropriation, it is fair for us to presume that they may, on the third occasion, perceive the propriety of it. At all events, it is our duty to propose it to them.

Mr. CASS. When this matter was first brought forward, I was opposed to it, as I was to the extension of the Capitol. I did not think that the projects in either case had been properly matured. I thought they required more consideration. I thought so then, and I think so now. But, sir, when the proposition for the renewal of an appropriation for the Capitol extension came on, though I voted against making the extension in the first instance, I voted for carrying it on in the second instance. I shall vote for this. I have a great regard for, and I take a great interest in, the ruins of centuries which carry us back, with the power of association, to the glorious deeds and days which are accumulated in history. But I take no interest in the ruins of a day or a year—ruins made by the vacillations of Congresses, by change in our legislation from day to day. It is not creditable to our country. A work like this, when begun, should be carried on without any limitation that may be placed upon it, so that it may be restricted as much as possible in the expenditures; but after having been commenced, certainly it should be gone on with. Being opposed, therefore, to this kind of vacillation, which is bad in itself, and bad in its example, I shall vote for the appropriation.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. This amendment is, I believe, in regard to the city water-works. I excepted to it when it was submitted on Saturday, when the Senate was making progress with the bill by disposing of amendments which had been submitted by the committee. I know, sir, that the struggle which I make here is a vain one. We have had the manifestation of the will of the Senate on previous occasions; but I intend still to struggle against it, and my hope lies with the people's representatives, who reflect their will in the other House. I hope that it will there meet with its death blow. Of all the many extravagant appropriations which have been made by Congress for this capital, I regard this as the most so; as the most improper in almost every respect; for it will encourage the people in this city to rely upon themselves for nothing, but to look to Congress for everything.

When I resisted it before, Mr. President, I alluded to the fact that there is not a city in America which would not gladly take the seat of Government, and solemnly stipulate never to approach Congress for an appropriation, but would pave and clean its streets, build its court-houses, light its thoroughfares, and water its circumference itself, if you would confer upon it the other advantages which would inure to it from the erection of the mighty public buildings necessary for carrying on the purposes of the Government. Yet, sir, we are to go on, year after year, with these appropriations, while, at the same time, the smallest one which comes up for the benefit of other portions of the country, and especially of the West—appropriations for the most immaterial custom-houses for that growing portion of the Republic, where the business of the country so much requires them, are resisted and fought to death. I shall not detain the Senate, because I know it would be in vain to do so. I know there is a majority here for this appropriation; but I hope, sir, this thing is to be resisted. I resist it now, because if this appropriation be made now upon the yeas and nays, we shall hereafter, as in the case of the Capitol extension, be called to go for it as acquiesced in, and, as a matter of course, that resistance will be vain.

Mr. PRATT. On Saturday last, if I recollect correctly, without a dissenting voice, we voted for a bill proposed by my honorable friend who has just taken his seat, appropriating, I believe, upwards of three millions of acres of land towards some object of importance in the limits of his State. There was not a dissenting voice to it. I did not hear anybody dissent from it. A larger appropriation could not be made for the whole District of Columbia, as a general thing, in any one year; so that I do not think it comes with a very good grace from my honorable friend to oppose this appropriation upon the ground which he does—that the representatives of the people, or of the States, are illiberal to the section of the country which he so ably represents. Mr. President, that certainly should not be an argument addressed to the Senate. If he supposes that this is an extravagant appropriation; if he supposes that the amount is larger than is necessary for the purpose, I can understand that the Senator would be obliged to vote against it. But he is not justified in going against it on the only ground which he has presented.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I regard this as part and parcel of a series of propositions tending to the wasting of the public money in this city; and whatever arguments may be adduced to me, I intend to oppose this, and those.

Now, sir, the bill to which the Senator alludes gave not a single dollar, nor did it diminish the resources of your Treasury one cent. Of that the Senator is aware, if he knows anything about it. He knows that, in that bill, the price of the alternate reserved sections was raised to $2 50 an acre; that is, double the minimum price at which they are now sold. Not one dollar is lost to the Treasury by that bill. If, by your legislation, any system can be devised by which this work could be done as that railroad is proposed to be built, so that alternate sections in the possession of the Government would be doubled in price along the line of the water-works, I should most readily assent to it, and cheerfully vote for it.

Sir, I made no charge against the Senate of want of liberality. I referred, in general, to Congress; and I repeat what I said. There is not the smallest appropriation proposed for the West which is not resisted. The proposition providing for the opening of the Belize to the great cities of the West, and making an appropriation of $100,000 for that work, which is one of immense magnitude; the proposition for the clearing out of the rapids, a short distance above St. Louis, to that vast region of country, and appropriating $100,000 for that work, is resisted and fought, as all appropriations for the West are resisted and fought. A proposition to make the smallest appropriation for a custom-house in Detroit—a city of immense importance, one of the greatest upon the lakes—is resisted by all the means which are known to legislative rules.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am disposed to vote for an appropriation for the erection of water works in the city of Washington. I think there is a necessity for them. Any enterprise that will tend to the building up of the city of Washington, and make it a more comfortable residence, and give greater security to the public property should be adopted. I have drawn up an amendment to the amendment, which will accomplish the object. It is the same as, or one of a similar character to, a proposition which was offered in the House.

Provided, That the city of Washington shall contribute concurrently with the United States, a sum equal to one third of the total expenditure on the said work, and that for the purpose of providing for such expenditure, the city of Washington shall be entitled to contract a loan payable at a period not longer than twenty years, and shall before contracting for the loan, levy a special annual tax sufficient for the payment of the interest and redemption of the loan at maturity, the proceeds of which tax shall be exclusively appropriated to such purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question then is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. If I heard the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana aright, it proposes that the city shall raise a certain sum, one third of the amount which the work will cost, before this appropriation shall apply. Substantially it is that; or, in other words, it proposes a joint partnership between the General Government and the city. I submit to the honorable Senator from Louisiana that it is not worth while, in this case, to adopt such a principle. The Government has now commenced this work. It has made the first appropriation for it; a Government official has made the survey. It is now undertaken by the Government; and my humble opinion is, that if it is to be prosecuted and completed at all, it ought to be by the Government in a way satisfactory to the Government; and this joint partnership is a thing that will not, in the end, attain any good object.

I will say further, that what I regret about these things is this: I recollect, when this measure was first brought forward, that I was at the head of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I took a great interest in the matter. I was then apprehensive that, after it was commenced, after we took the initiative, after we made an expenditure of money, we should abandon the work, as it seems we are about to do. I shall regret it very much. It must be evident to every person that water is necessary for the health and comfort of this city. Whether the plan proposed is not a little more expensive and extravagant than it might be, I am not prepared to say. I have not thoroughly investigated that matter. Some gentlemen, who seem to understand it better than I do, say that it is rather an extravagant scheme, and that water might be supplied at a much cheaper rate. But I am not prepared to enter into that. What I mean to say is, that if we conclude to go on with the work, we ought to do it ourselves, and not enter into a partnership with the city, for after all we should be compelled to pay the one third which we now endeavor to assess upon it. It would come to that ultimately. We must either do the work ourselves or abandon it; and, for one, as we have commenced it, and as I think it absolutely necessary for the health and comfort of the city as well as of those who visit it, I am prepared to sustain it.

Mr. SLIDELL. So far as the people of Washington are concerned, I think we are under no greater obligation to supply them gratuitously with water than we are to supply them with bread. In reference to the necessities of the Government, and making provision for the national buildings, and the convenience of the persons employed in the discharge of duties for the Government, I have nothing to say against that; but I say very frankly, that if the alternative were presented to me, either to abandon the work, or to carry it on at the whole expense to the Government, I should vote for abandoning it. It is said that the plan proposed is more extensive than it ought to be. I have no doubt, that if the city of Washington, in the first instance, had been willing to assume the responsibility of this work, it would have repudiated so enormous an expenditure. It would have adopted a more economical plan, and, I think, the effect of resisting this work now will be to create a coöperation on the part of the cities of Washington and Georgetown.

It has been said that the city of Washington has not been consulted about it; that the plan has been drawn up by a Government officer; and that if we establish a partnership between the city and the Government, we shall have to meet all the expenses in the end. I cannot see that that will be the case. According to the amendment which I have proposed the city of Washington is free to accept or reject the proposition. If it rejects it the work will stop, and I am willing that it should be stopped; and then, I think, next year the people of the cities of Washington and Georgetown would consent to it, and be prepared to enter upon some economical, and at the same time, efficient plan to supply water. I have no doubt that that will be the effect of incorporating such a provision.
